Hilton Hanby, prosperous New York merchant, has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains. Miss Selenos, a former tenant of the Gray house, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings, as some form of practical joke. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker whom they have put in charge of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, explains to Pelham, that a dangerous pond near the house, in which several children have been drowned, has since been filled in, but he urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Hanby and Junior learn that the caretaker was known to the police as "Red Chapin" and had a bad record.

It was his first opportunity to see a man with a price on his head. Death had revealed with marked emphasis the unsocial qualities with which Red Chapin had been dowered. What he had tried during life to hide was now plain for all the world to see—the loose mouth, the short cranium, the thrust-forward jaw. Junior shuddered a little.

"What do you suppose he wanted the job of looking after an empty house for?"

"It's my belief he was hiding," said the policeman from Kingston. "I've checked up on him pretty well. He kept himself to himself in Kingston. He received no callers or mail. His landlady says he was suspicious of strangers. Red was always one to frequent pool rooms and places like that; but this trip he kept away from them. Why? He knew they was after him."

"Who?" Junior asked eagerly, forgetting that he was listening open-eyed to a policeman ignorant of psychology.

"The man that bumped him off. We shan't probably ever know who. We've got Red, and somebody else'll pick up his pals when their time comes."

The policeman pointed to the dead man's big, roughened hand.

"That's the hand that squeezed the life out of a Salt Lake City detective. Strangled him in a telephone booth, he did, and not a soul near by heard it. That's the hand that shot half a dozen men. Look at that face, Mr. Hanby, and, when you see another like it, watch out!"

"I will," Junior said quickly.

He envied the professional his poise at a moment like this. So occupied was he with this intimate touch of crime that he did not notice until the car slowed down to pass Amenia that he had again missed the Gray house.

"Wow!" he said, a mile or so further on, "you missed that truck by little less than an inch!"

"You exaggerate," replied his father. "It wasn't half an inch. I'm in a hurry to get home. Bill Pelham may have news."

They did not speak again for some time. Then Hanby surprised his son by asking questions concerning Leslie Barron, the youth to whom Celia gave a good deal of her time.

"Les is a peach," said Junior warmly. "If I were he, I wouldn't stand the way Celia behaves. One day she's sugar and the next vinegar."

"I've seen that," Hanby returned. "Thats' not unusual. I did not mean that. Is he courageous? Would he be a useful man in a tight place?"

"You ought to have seen the scrap he put up against a strong-armed waiter that tried to put him out of a roadhouse last April! The waiter was an old heavyweight pugilist, and he certainly could punish. Les knew he was outweighed and outclassed, and he had a chance to duck; but he isn't that sort of a mother's boy. He was out for twenty minutes."

"That's interesting," his father commented. "I didn't think the languid Les had a fight in him; but you don't expect me to approve of a rowdy boy being thrown out of a questionable roadhouse, I hope?"

"It wasn't a questionable place," Junior retorted. "You've taken mother there. Les isn't rowdy—he's just fastidious. He complained of a big fly in his coffee. That roused the waiter to fury, and he said that Les could drink it or not, but he had to pay."

Junior wondered why his father should ask about Leslie's gameness. Mr. Hanby was in an unusually thoughtful mood.

"You're pretty husky," he said presently. "What do you weigh?"

"A hundred and seventy stripped," Junior told him.

"My weight to a hair. Les isn't so much, is he?"

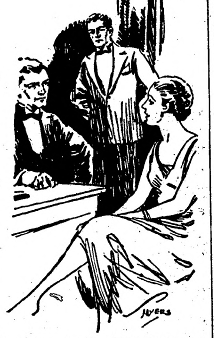
"He and Bill weigh a hundred and fifty-five stripped. Why? Going to promote some boxing exhibitions?"

"Nothing like that."

"What's on your mind, dad?"

"Sherlock Lupin, it would take more than your admitted skill to find out, because I don't know myself. I apologize for it. For the first time, the Gray house gave me a shiver as I passed it. This murder was the cause. I don't revel in crime. I hate it. I like people to be happy and harmonious. Something inside me leads me almost invariably to dependable people. I wouldn't have picked this fellow Red Chapin to have watched a dog pound, if he was half as bad as you say. I took that man Smucker over with the business, the d—d, dirty anarchist! I caught myself calculating my forces if anything unpleasant happened up at the Gray house. Bill Pelham would tackle a lion single-handed. He's been proved. I wondered a little about Leslie."

"Dad, you don't really think there's anything wrong with that new place?"



"I'm Not Going to Be Frightened Out of It by Any Rude Old Woman."

inquired Junior, his eyes sparkling at the thought.

"I'll have to disappoint you by saying no. It was just a passing fit of depression. It has gone."

"I'll be gone, too, if you don't cut the speed down," his son cautioned. "Slow down! There's a motor cop in the offing."

CHAPTER IV

Bill Pelham was waiting for them.

"Won't take me ten minutes to get into clean clothes," said Hanby. "I've got strange news, Dina."

"So has Bill," she retorted.

"Mine is of a tragic nature."

"You've nothing on me," said Bill. "I'm in the wholesale tragedy business."

Dina, Pelham, and Hanby discussed the matter in the library. Hanby listened to what Appleton had told his friend.

"Then Smucker wasn't lying," he remarked. "Appleton corroborates his story. It means that some one wants to prevent us living there. What could the reason possibly be?"

"I give it up," said Pelham. "Do you think the police have the right dope on the Chapin murder?"

"What else could it be?"

"That these same people who want to keep you out started to terrorize you by murdering him. It may be that he was an innocent victim. Of course, we know that he was wanted by the law, and that in a sense his removal is a blessing to society, but all the same he may have intended to be an honest watchman for the time being."

"Dina," said Hanby presently, again conscious of his wife's unusual depression, "if you are scared at the prospect of going up there, I'll open negotiations with Miss Selenos, who particularly loathes and despises me. What about it?"

"Think twice before you answer," Bill Pelham warned her.

"I haven't even seen the place yet," she said, smiling. "I'm not going to be frightened out of it by any rude old woman. Hil, I believe she's at the bottom of all this mystery. I'm not going to rob my Housatonic of his manor!"

"Housatonic?" Bill queried. "What's that?"

"Hil's real name. At college you called him Tony."

"It's a new one on me," said Bill.

"Blame your Aunt Selina for it," Hanby declared. "She got me going with her California rivers. I tell you that old hag has a face like the Furies. She may be mad and vindictive, but there's something on her mind more than a passing whim. I don't know but Dina's right. She said I should meet disaster, ruin, and even death. There's some mystery about my pleasure house in Dutchess county."

"Nothing will keep me away from it now," Dina asserted. "We shall have four able-bodied men in the place all the summer."

"Four?" her husband demanded. "You are not counting fourteen-year-old Tim as an able-bodied male, are you?"

"There will be you, Junior, Leslie, and Bill."

"Me?" Pelham cried.

"Of course! On your own confession, you've nothing to do until your company is reorganized in the fall. Danger calls, and we need you. I've already picked out your suite."

"Dina, you are taking great chances. Even dull-witted Hil, the last to scent the danger, knows that I'm in love with you."

"That makes you so much the safer. You shall work, believe me. I'm crazy to have some stately old-world gardens. You shall be my man with the hoe."

"I sign on here and now," said Bill. "Where are you going?"

"I promised to tell Tim about the inquest. My children have the modern interest in crime. Don't go! I shan't be very long."

Pelham looked at Hanby almost wistfully.

"Hil, was that a joke on me or a genuine invitation?"

"Don't you want to come?"

"Except for the reason that your family is my family, that I shall live rent free and make enough out of you at pool to spend an affluent winter—no!"

"That's settled, then," said Hanby. "Honestly, Bill, I shall be glad to have a man like you, with nerve and courage, around the house."

"That sounds as if you anticipated trouble."

"Oddly enough, I do. I must be getting old, but driving back today I began to make excuses for not living in the Gray house. Subconsciously, I was actuated by fear. Most people patronize their subconscious mind nowadays, but it's the subconscious mind that gives you the real danger signals. I'm going up there, but I'm not going up there with the idea that every prospect is as pleasing as it looks. I'm on guard!"

"If that's so, I demand a salary as well as free board and entertainment. Make it five dollars a day, and replace all clothes stained with gore in the exercise of my duty with ones of equal or greater value. The trouble with you is that after piking along on thirty thousand a year, and a mere duplex apartment, you've got twice that amount and a thirty-room mansion. It has gone to your poor weak head. You are paying too much attention to poor Aunt Selina."

"You didn't see or hear her," Hanby reminded him.

"She's merely a crank. One morning, thirty long years ago, in the bosky dells that are now yours, she met a rustic swain and pursued him with love. Wisely he jumped into the lake and was drowned. It is a sacred spot to her."

"What about the Seymour chauffeur?"

"An ignorant, good-hearted, generous man, fond of children. His simple, untutored mind believes that evil spirits dwell there because his boss' children ventured on an unsafe bridge and were drowned. Probably he has a dozen kids himself. As to Red Chapin, he took refuge there and was killed by his pals whom he had double-crossed. Perfectly plain, as I see it."

"Maybe," Hanby said slowly, "it is merely annoyance that the house I bought for Dina should be mixed up in this tragic business." He spoke almost irritably. "I hate gloom and tears and death. When I first saw the Gray house, I said, 'Here is a place where people have been happy.' Pretty rotten picker, eh, Bill?"

"Your family will take the curse off anything," said the other. "Dina will have us all dancing as happily as ever. Junior will bring his crowd, and Celia will import hers. I miss my guess if the result won't be a very interesting mixture. Dance on!" he concluded dramatically. "Outside your windows your faithful house detective will be watching—the simple-minded sleuth whose meager pay is five dollars a day and extras. During the day I shall be hoe man in chief to Dina. At dusk I am the house detective. I'll get a deputy's badge, in case I have to make arrests."

There was a knock on the door, and Mary Sloan entered.

Candy Industry Goes Back to Hippocrates

Physicians among the ancient Greeks and Romans utilized the bee's honey in preparing their medicines. In fact, the manufacture of candy traces its origin back to the days of Hippocrates, father of medicine, who lived in the Fifth century B. C. In those days doctors' remedies for human ills consisted of doses of bitter herbs. In order to tickle the palate of his rich patients, Hippocrates smeared a little honey on the edge of the cup containing the potion, and later on coated his pills with similar substances, thus comforting his patients and, no doubt, also increasing his fees.

Little did Hippocrates think that he was destined to go down to fame, not only as the father of medicine but as one of the originators of the art of candy-making.

From this quaint origin the candy industry has progressed to such an extent that it is now one of the world's leading industries. Its production involves labor in all parts of the world and employs every means of transportation known to man.—Exchange.

PACKAGES OF DREAMS

One night, not long ago, Peter Goblin went calling on some children.

Peter Goblin Went Calling.

From house to house he went, and in every house he went to the bedsides of the little boys and girls and invited them to go on the greatest coasting party of the year.

"Will you come?" asked Peter Goblin, and every one of them answered, "Yes."

Then in their dreams Peter Goblin took them to the coasting party of the Goblins.

There were Goblins of all kinds and sizes, though for the most part they looked very much alike.

"We're going to coast," said Peter, "down the hill of Dreams."

"Where is that?" they asked.

"Come and you shall see," said Peter.

They all put their sleds together and down the hill of Dreams they coasted until they reached the valley below.

"Is there any name to the valley?" asked the children.

"Yes," said Peter, "it is called the valley where all Dreams come true. You see, when you come to the valley, the wonderful coast is over, just as sometimes you wake up after a gorgeous, long dream.

"And dreams come true, quite, quite often.

"It is in this valley that it all happens. Look about you."

Everyone looked and saw countless little Goblins doing up tiny packages as quickly as ever they could.

"What are they doing?" asked the children.

"They are doing up the packages which they must send from Dreamland to the real land of children.

"You see, it is this way, and before we have another coast, let's watch these Goblins and hear what they are doing."

"What Are They Doing?"

All the children drew their sleds around in the great, big circle, and in the center sat Peter.

"In the winter time," said Peter, "we have snow for our coasting parties, and in the summer we use our express carts on the good, kind ground.

"You've surely heard of the Goblins' Express? Well, no matter, you've heard about it now at any rate.

"As I told you before, the hill is called the hill of Dreams, and we keep coasting down it so as to keep it smooth and so the dreams won't be bumpy.

"And now you see them working.

"When we go back tonight we will take back packages of dreams for all of you too—but now we must be off for more coasting."

And oh, what a dream night it was for all the children taken by jolly, dear Peter Goblin to the place where the dreams were wrapped up.

Certainly this dream had been one of the nicest they had ever had.

Not So Far After All

Eight long furlongs I've gone today
With evident pride, said Ethel May.

Three hundred and twenty rods, you know,
Is what I've been—'twas brother Joe.

One thousand seven hundred and sixty—true
So many yards I've walked, said Prue.

Five thousand two hundred and eighty feet
I've gone, said Ben, and it can't be beat!

Pooh! laughed Ted, with a knowing smile,
You've only gone, each one, a mile!

What Am I?

I am a useful article.

Change my first letter, and I am a noise.

Change my first letter again, and I am a metal.

Change my first letter once more, and I am part of a fish.

You might call this "putting the car over the bumps." Drawing made from a photograph of a car driven over a road scientifically made bad at the Proving Ground.

Here's where a car leads a tough life

NO General Motors car is turned out of the factory until a fleet of exact duplicates of that model has been found good by the engineers at General Motors' Proving Ground.

Such an advance model must prove itself from stem to stern. The tests involve speed, power, endurance, braking, riding comfort, handling ease; fuel, oil, and tire economy; body strength—every phase of car construction and performance. It's a tough life.

Such testing would be beyond the means or resources of an individual. 1268 acres of land at Milford, Michigan, are devoted to this outdoor laboratory where hills are steep and roads are vicious. Men who are among the world's best automotive engineers conduct the tests.

This tested performance is as much a part of a General Motors car as the chassis. You can't see it. You don't pay extra for it. But you know it as you give the car long use on the road.

"Refuse" Made Valuable

Rubber interests are investigating a new source of revenue, extraction of oil from rubber seeds, which long have been treated as refuse on Malayan rubber estates. Net profits of $11 a ton is estimated with market prices approximately $22 a ton. Estate laborers earn about three cents a day collecting seeds in spare time.

TOOTHPICKS AND ROMANCE

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

PHYLLIS, brown-eyed and slender, had ideals, inherited from the romantic, semi-invalid mother who named her Phyllis May. But there was little time for the nurturing of ideals in the Gregory household. Phyllis began work at fourteen, standing on her feet all day behind the counter in a 10-cent store and dragging her weary body to school three nights a week. By the time she was eighteen she had finished night high school and mastered shorthand and typewriting. Now, at nineteen, she had secured her first stenographic position and was beginning to feel that her feet were firmly set at last on the first round of the ladder of success.

From her couch in the front room Mrs. Gregory nominally supervised the household. "Tim, you must wash your hands more carefully. They are positively grimy. And your nails—"

"Aw, for Pete's sake, mother," and the overgrown sixteen-year-old boy would look guiltily at the offending nails, then awkwardly pat his mother's thin shoulder. "What with you and Phil, I don't never got no peace!"

"And you studied grammar at school," Phyllis would exclaim, disgustedly.

"Grammar don't mean anything," he retorted. "It's what you do, not what you say, that counts."

Phyllis had to admit that he was right fundamentally. "But still," she insisted, "being able to talk correctly indicates good breeding."

"Sure, and I'm a well-bred plumber's assistant," he boasted, closing the argument.

Phyllis hated Tim's work. To her it was dirty in every sense of the word. But he had been forced to accept anything he could get. He speedily found something intriguing about bathroom fixtures, and boasted that one day he would be a millionaire plumber and live in a porcelain-lined home.

But with the entry of Curtis Ashe into Phyllis' life minor worries were forgotten. Young and good looking, with that well-groomed air that women so admire, he seemed the materialization of all she had dreamed. Curtis was one of the richest customers of Harvie Bros., where she was employed. He came into the office occasionally to talk with Mr. Harvie, and after a few casual chats with Phyllis came oftener, invited her to lunch and even suggested dinner and the theater.

Phyllis accepted the luncheon invitations and eventually the theater, but she declined to take dinner with him. "It's my only meal with mother," she explained, "and she looks forward to it."

"I should think your brother could entertain her for once," Curtis grumbled.

"I also prepare the dinner," she laughingly replied.

Curtis had smiled, she thought with annoyed surprise. "I'd like to meet your mother," he said presently.

Phyllis felt herself flushing hotly. "Mother would be delighted to have you take dinner with us one evening," she suggested, diffidently.

Curtis accepted with alacrity, and Phyllis did her best with the dinner. She was not ashamed of the apartment. It was comfortable and tastefully if not expensively furnished. Her mother had a real Irish linen tablecloth, relic of better days, and the old mahogany sideboard, incongruously massive, gave dignity to the dining room. Tim consented, with some urging, to scrub his nails clean for once.

But good-natured, well-meaning Tim almost spoiled things in the end. The dinner, from roast chicken to homemade ice cream and caramel cake, had been perfect. Curtis had become genial and expansive, Phyllis was very happy. Before they left the table Tim looked around inquiringly, then rose and rummaged through the kitchen cabinet. He came back with what he sought. "Sis forgot to put them on the table."

"No, no thank you," Curtis waved them away with a strained expression. Tim helped himself. "Take one, sis," he invited.

After her guest had gone Phyllis gave way to angry tears. "He'll think we're common and don't know anything," she sobbed.

"If he really cares for you he won't notice a little slip like that," Mrs. Gregory tried to comfort her. Tim, staring at his carefully scrubbed nails, said nothing.

A month passed and Curtis showed unmistakably that a little matter of toothpicks could not come between him and his love. Shy and tremulous, Phyllis crept into her mother's arms to tell the wonderful news. "Curtis loves me. He wants to be married right away."

"You deserve the best," her romantic mother answered, satisfied.

Then came plans for the wedding and afterwards. "We'll take a short trip," Curtis had said, pressing her dark head against his shoulder. "I'm buying you the home you admired in Lakeview."

"A real home, at last!" breathed Phyllis.

"Just we two," and Curtis' arms tightened. Phyllis tensed suddenly, and a stab of fear pierced her heart. "You forget mother, Curtis," she whispered, brushing her lips lightly across his.

"No, I've thought it all out. She and Tim can keep the apartment, and I'll engage a good reliable woman to come in every day and take charge."

"But," Phyllis remonstrated aghast, "a maid can't take my place with mother. It would take all the joy out of her life if—if—she didn't live with us! And Tim—" she stopped, her voice thick with tears.

"You'll decide differently after you think it over," he declared. "Trust to my judgment, Phyllis."

But in this one matter she stood firm, and for days the silent battle of wills continued. Phyllis loved Curtis passionately; life without him would be an arid desert. But her mother needed her! The girl moved through the daily routine with a sense of unreality. There were faint smudges under her eyes that told of sleepless nights, but her mechanical set smile never faltered.

A week passed, torturing hours in which self-sufficient Curtis found how wholly and completely love had taken possession of him. It could no more be uprooted than could his very heart be torn from his bosom. And all this anguish was because a delicate old lady and a hardworking boy would be in the way in his new fourteen-room home.

Curtis resolutely got out of bed. He had been a fool, he realized. Snapping on the lights, he wrote a note—tore it up—tried again till one satisfied him. Then he telephoned for a messenger. "He's to be here by seven o'clock," he instructed the sleepy-voiced operator. "The letter I'm sending is of vital importance!" Then Curtis returned to bed, and slept soundly for the first time in a week.

Phyllis, too, was asleep, with tear stains on her cheeks, but peace in her heart. For earlier that night Mrs. Gregory had called her daughter. She was embarrassed and tearful, but determined. What Phyllis finally understood from her mother's rather incoherent words was this: Mrs. Gregory didn't want to live with Phyllis and Curtis! She didn't want to give up the freedom of her tiny apartment. "I hate for us to be separated, but you will have Curtis," Mrs. Gregory sobbed.

"Yes—Curtis," bewildered Phyllis half whispered.

"Besides," Mrs. Gregory was holding her daughter's hands tightly, "I can take better care of Timmy here, and the neighbors can come in during the day and gossip a bit, as they've always done, and I'll feel—well—independent."

"Whatever will make you happiest," Phyllis managed to say.

"And," Mrs. Gregory half laughed, shamefacedly, "Timmy and I both like to keep toothpicks on the table."

New York Pet Garage Profitable to Owner

There is a little place in the fifties in New York where women who come to shop on Fifth avenue or to see a play on Broadway can park their dogs.

The storage fee for an afternoon or an evening is 50 cents, and it is a dull day that doesn't find half a dozen pets parked in cages along the floor, with very businesslike tags on the doors to identify them.

Running a pet garage is so profitable, in fact, that Charles King, the proprietor, now keeps his place open until midnight for the benefit of evening patrons, although his major vocation is the daytime job of beautifying dogs and cats.

Most of the New York hotels permit visitors to check dogs and cats at the coatroom, and during an afternoon tea it is not unusual to find a dozen Pekes and Griffons and Pomeranians drowsing on their leashes among parcels and parasols in a hotel checkroom. But many a matron prefers the super-luxury of a stall in a pet garage for her pedigreed pet.

As to king's canine and feline beauty parlor business, it consists not only of a haircutting and manicuring and eyebrow plucking, but also of dry-cleaning cats, and administering violet-ray treatment to pets which are overfat or rheumatic. The violet-ray treatment costs $50, and the dry-cleaning process, which King says he learned from a Hindu in Paris during the war, and which spares a cat the washing which all cats hate, is administered for $5.

Wonders of the Dusky Land

Carveth Wells, a British traveler and scientist, has seen many wonderful things in the course of his careering through the countries of Africa and other out-of-the-way spots. On his return from the Mountains of the Moon he tells among the other strange things he noted was an elephant with tusks so enormous that they trailed before him along the ground. At least he found his tracks, the marks of four feet and, running always with them, two parallel grooves which could have been made by nothing else than his tusks. On another occasion he saw a herd of gnus and zebras which he estimated to be 30 miles wide and 5 miles deep. He saw them passing below him one morning and, camping at the same spot three days later, he saw them still passing.

First Stamp Primitive

The first postage stamp is said to have been used in Paris in 1653. It took the form of a receipt printed on the wrappers in which letters were sent, and was originated by a Frenchman named Velayer.

Value of High Training

Figures compiled by the chemistry department of the University of Wisconsin show that industry is daily showing a greater appreciation of men who have been educated in the higher branches of science. Since the World war 56 out of 109 persons who received the degree or doctor of philosophy in that department at Wisconsin have gone into industrial work. Previously, since 1899 when the first degree of the kind was given by the department, only eight persons had entered the ranks of industry.

"Public Ownership" "Private Management" "Government Control"

These three elemements combined have proven the most successful in the conduct of America's public utilities.

Public Ownership:

¶The wide distribution of utility securities among small investors has created true public ownership. Anyone may share in the profits of utility companies who will; yet, no one is compelled to invest against his will as in the case of government ownership.

Private Management:

¶Only under private management is there incentive for personal initiative and effort so necessary for the successful conduct of any business.

Government Control:

¶Governments have proven eminently effective in controlling the very business enterprises which they cannot successfully operate. Government control protects the interests of both customer and stockholder.

¶America enjoys the best utility service in the world because of "Public Ownership", "Private Management" and "Government Control".

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, May 31, 1929. Volume 19; Number 5.

U. S. A. News

County agents and club leaders throughout Northwestern Minnesota report unusual interest in the Boy's and Girl's Short Course which will be held at the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, June 10-13. This will be a convenient time for young folks to be away from home, for the rush of spring work will be out of the way; and all schools will be closed. Futhermore, the ideal time for intensive study of the various 4-H Club projects is at the beginning of the season rather than at the end.

H. A. Pflughoeft, District Club leader, expects an enrollment of over 400 club members from thirteen counties, as compared to 254 last year. Many have already reserved their rooms, and additional letters are being received daily.

Work will be offered in dairy calf, beef calf, sheep, pig, poultry, gardening, judging, cooking, canning, sewing, leadership and other boy's and girl's club activities.

The total cost of the board, room and entertainment will be $3:00. All young people between the ages of 12 and 20 are eligible to attend. For room reservation and additional information, write the Northwest School, Crookston.

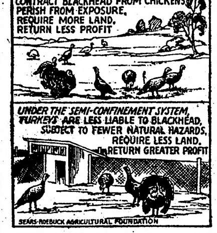
Taking the Turkey Off the Range

Contrary to popular belief, successful experiments indicate that the turkey can be profitably taken from the range to a smaller and more modern domain where it has a greater chance of survival than when allowed to roam at will, says the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation.

Turkey eggs hatched in incubators, poults brooded artificially, reared on limited range in rotated lots, fed regularly from the second day to maturity, on a carefully planned diet and kept entirely separate from chickens, summarizes the new method of raising turkeys in semi-confinement. Under this system, two hundred poults can be raised on an acre and land ordinarily used for turkey grazing is saved for other crops.



ON THE RANGE SYSTEM, TURKEYS CONTRACT BLACKHEAD FROM CHICKENS, PERISH FROM EXPOSURE, REQUIRE MORE LAND, RETURN LESS PROFIT
UNDER THE SEMI-CONFINEMENT SYSTEM, TURKEYS ARE LESS LIABLE TO BLACKHEAD, SUBJECT TO FEWER NATURAL HAZARDS, REQUIRE LESS LAND, RETURN GREATER PROFIT
SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

When turkeys roam the farm, mingling with chickens which often carry the dreaded blackhead disease, losses frequently are so heavy as to eat up all profits. When turkeys are raised in semi-confinement, they are put on ground free from infection and are kept away from chickens altogether.

Experiments conducted by the North Dakota Agricultural college showed that the feed cost of turkeys grown in confinement from June 1 to November 23 averaged less than 8 cents a pound. Other production costs, including initial cost of the egg, incubation cost, and brooder cost, probably run from $1 to $1.50 per poult. This should leave a substantial margin of profit in well-managed flocks, according to the Foundation.

Leo Horien spent a few days at Minneapolis last week.

LESSON 64

PRODUCTION: A silo has three advantages— it saves feed—when corn is put in a silo from 95 to 98 per cent will be consumed. There is very little waste. When corn is shocked up in the field and fed in the bundle not much over 60 per cent is consumed. The stalks are largely waste. Again the silo is convenient. There is no pulling of bundles out of the snow or carrying the stalks out of the mangers. Again, silage is a better feed than the dry bundle corn.

MANUFACTURING: A butttermaker must be a good judge of cream if he is to do first-class work. He must be able to grade the cream so that the butter he makes from the first-grade cream will receive first-grade when inspected by the Federal-State graders. Aagain, if the buttermaker is not a competent judge of quality, he may feel that he is not getting a fair score on his butter. Farmers should also know good cream. It helps to produce good cream and to agree with the buttermaker.

Weeds Get Hearing

Department from the former custom, the State Department of Agriculture Dairy and Food (N. J. Holmberg, Commisoner) will conduct the following meetings in Marshall county: in the City Hall in Argyle on June 8; and in the City Hall at Middle River on June 12, which this year will be open to the public. The local weed inspectors have been notified to attend as provided by section 8 (a), Chap. 377, Laws of 1925.

The chairman of the several township board become the local weed inspectors, unless the County Commissioners appoint inspectors, The mayors of the cities and the presidents of the village councils are the weed inspectors of these municipalities.

The field men, representing the State Department and the U. S. Department of Agriculture, will identify weeds brought in for illustration and will explain their habits of growth and propagation. When this is fully explained, the means of destroying and eradicating the weeds will be discussed, and a full explanation with illustration will convince and show how common barberry is a friend of black stem and a foe of the grain grower. This matter is very vital to the farming interests and will prove interesting to all property owners whose duty it is to prevent weeds fram spreading, and who must give aid to the barberry eradication campain if losses from stem rust are to be reduced.

The authority and the duties of the weed inspectors and of those whose duty it is to destroy weeds is not widely known. It will be of value to those who attend to learn something of the administration of the law, e. g.: Who is responsible for cutting roadside weeds? Who owns the lake shores? Who is responsible for weeds along ditches? Who pays the costs for destroying weeds? How does the common barberry spread black stem rust? What barberry bushes to destroy and how? Who knows the difference between the common and the Japanese varieties of barberry? These are but a few of the many question to be answered.

The meeting will be called sharply at 1:30 P. M. This will be an opportunity to learn something about matters that cost us a tremenbous amount of money each season.

Bridal Shower

Mrs. H. P. Wahlin, Mrs. Sam Lorentson and Mrs. H. Peterson entertained at a very pretty bridal shower given for Miss Ruth Swendby at the home of Mrs. H. Wahlin Tuesday evening.

The dining room table was very effectively decorated with blue and white streamers, a very pretty bridal cake forming the centerpiece. Seasonable wild flowers, and the blue and white streamers carried out the color scheme throughout the home.

The many blue and white baskets hung thoughout the home held beautiful gifts given by the guests, and the bride-to-be was kept busy answering alarm clocks hidden in the baskets.

Miss Rognlie gave a reading and Miss Torblaa a vocal solo, after which a very delicious two course luncheon was served by the hostesses.

Out of town guests were: Mrs. L. Swendby and daughter from Chisholm and Mrs. P. L. Anderson and Mrs. Jesse Sorum from Crookston.

Mrs. Carl Johnson, Mrs. C. Ellefson and Mrs. Victor Johnson motored to Warren Tuesday.

Martin Mattson and Jesse Sorum of Crookston spent Monday here.

All the teachers of the local school, Miss Fuller and Mr. Fricker were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Gunheim last Thursday evening.

Farmers Elevators

"The area covered by farmers' elevators is but one-fifth of the nation, yet they serve 900,000 farmers," according to a U. S. Department of Agriculture survey reported in the Farmers Elevator Guide.

"The unusual thing shown by this survey is that one-half of these farmers are not even elevator members. The average company has 125 members, but has 251 farmer patrons.

"The significance is that farmers' elevators endure by sheer efficiency. Nothing less than efficient service could attract and hold the patronage of farmers who are not members.

"When farmers have organized and operated co-operative elevators for more than a half centry, and at the end of the period the elevators number more than 4,000 and serve more than 900,000 farmers, more than half of whom are not even elevator members, it conclusively demonstrates that farmers can handle their own business efficiently, and keep it up."

Visited Creamery Here

Harry G. Anderson of the Agriculture Experiment Station, College of Agriculture. Fargo, North Dakota, who has been studying the Land O' Lakes Creameries in Minnesota with the view of learning what the L. O. L. has accomplished for the Minnesota farmers, visited at the local creamery all day Tuesday to get all the information he could in regard to creamery management.

Mr. Anderson stated that the dairy in North Dakota is still in its infancy and, has much to learn from its neighboring state. He has been greatly impressed with the improvement in quality of butter and the price that L. O. L. has been able to return to the produces of butterfat.

The Master Workman

After school days are over the young man must turn his thoughts to how he will earn his living.

In olden days the young man was indentured (hired out) to a master workman from whom he learned his trade. Often for a period of three to five years he worked for nothing; more often he paid for the oppotunity to acquire skill and trade knowledge from the master workman.

After the period of apprenticeship he journeyed about the country to learn more of his trade; hence the term journeyman.

A trade properly learned is a foundation for a happy, useful, and successful life.

With farseeing vision Mr. Dunwoody, who earned a fortune of millions in Minnesota and the Northwest, returned a large part of this sum as a gift to the residents of the state; he founded the Dunwoody Institute, located in Minneapolis, for free instruction for residents of the state.

Here are taught the leading trades met with in this section of the country: Auto, Building trades, Baking, Tractor, Bricklaying, Drafting, Machine Shop, Mechanical Drafting, Highway Construction and Surveying, Painting, and Paperhanging, Farm Mechanics, Sheet Metal, Electicity, Linotype and Printing.

The institution is open to men and boys of the state for a nominal fee, and to men and boys of the nation at actual cost. It is conducted without profit for the benefit of employers and employees.

Boys and men who are interested are invited to write to Dunwoody Institute, Minneapolis.

The following friends and relatives were entertained at the home of Mrs. Fred Larson Sunday afternoon: Mrs. Hans Knutson, Mr. and Mrs. A. Conklin, Mr. and Mrs. Julius Hoff, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Peterson, Mr. and Mrs. Willie Sorum, and Mr. and Mrs. Iver Larson.

To Trace Lost Roman Legion

Important Historic Discoveries Looked for in North of England.

Newcastle-on-Tyne, England.—A lost Roman legion, probably annihilated by savage tribes, and a wall built by the Roman emperor Hadrian across the north of England are important links in the history of the Romans in Britain which excavators hope to trace beneath the streets of this shipbuilding city. They also are seeking the ruins of the fort of Pons Aelii, which stood on the present site of Newcastle when the Roman soldiers held sway over the fierce northern tribes.

Roman galleys once floated in the River Tyne, now occupied by the modern shipyards which produced the Mauretania. It is believed that Pons Aelii overlooked the river. Wallsend, across the river, was also a Roman stronghold. The work to be undertaken by the North of England Excavation committee may produce one of archeology's most interesting chapters.

Sinks Shafts in Streets.

A section of Hadrian's wall about 80 yards long was discovered last year. In the coming excavations, shafts will be sunk in all streets east and west of the discovered portion of the wall. The barrier ran from Solway Firth across England to Tyne, but the eastern portion has never been definitely located. The gutters of Newcastle will be torn up in an attempt to locate it, and at the same time not hinder the passage of traffic in the streets. Experts believe that the wall will lead them to the center of the city, where they will discover the ruins of the old fort.

Long before Hadrian made tamed and conquered peoples build his wall, the Romans constructed an earthwork in northern England called the Vallum, and believed to have been a boundary marking the edge of the mighty empire. It was a sort of great ditch, apparently not originally intended for military purposes, although the first forts later were erected along it. The Vallum has been located at Benwell, whence the excavators expect to trace its course.

The famous Ninth Roman Legion, whose disappearance is one of history's mysteries, is believed to have been wiped out along the Vallum by a new generation of tribes which arose between A. D. 81 and 121. These tribes knew nothing of the might of Roman arms, and cared less about the powers of the emperor.

Refused to Pay Taxes.

They refused to pay taxes to Rome, and after the Roman soldiers moved out of the lowlands to the protection of the Vallum forts, the storm broke. The Vallum was stormed, the forts fell, and the Ninth Legion has not been heard of since. The Newcastle excavators hope to throw some light on its fate.

The Emperor Hadrian hurried to Northumbria when couriers brought him news of this disaster. He brought the Sixth Legion to the north country in A. D. 122 and subdued the rebellious tribes. Hadrian then set the captives to work building the wall with which he hoped to stem further invasions. It was constructed parallel with the Vallum. In the coming investigation it is hoped to determine why the emperor made the wall of varying thicknesses, perhaps due to a lack of material, or occasional economy.

Even if the secret of the Ninth Legion and the history of Pons Aelii remain undiscovered, the Newcastle and Wallsend investigators hope to make important contributions to the record of life in the British Isles in the days of the Romans.

W. C. ALEXANDER

Though head of his own corporation, a member of Mayor James Walker's reception committee to distinguished guests, and the citizen's jury commission of New York city, William C. Alexander of New York has accepted the additional responsibility of the program for the thirteenth annuel convention of Kiwanis International in Milwaukee, June 23-27, which will attract 8,000 visitors from the United States and Canada.

Each Year Is Leap Year for Papuans

Sydney, New South Wales.—In Papua every year is leap year. In the villages near the coast, the boys attract the attention of the girls by wearing adornments such as armlets, anklets, flowers, and nose and ear ornaments.

It was clear to members of the Nicholls-Conigrave arts and crafts expedition which has just returned to Sydney, that the onus of proposing marriage rested on the girls. At the feasts the boys ate little food in order to impress upon marriagable women how easy it would be to keep them. Tightly laced belts were worn by many of the youths desirous of a proposal.

Mosque of St. Jonah Holds Unique Relics

Beirut.—Excavations at Nineveh will be continued with greater vigor this season, according to Prof. Edward Chiera, director of the University of Pennsylvania expedition, in a statement here on his way to Iraq.

Three thousand years ago Nineveh had a "Kingsway" 60 yards wide. The great mound which covered the pitiful ruins of the royal palace has been fairly well explored. But another large mound, which probably covers the site of the great temple, escaped the excavator.

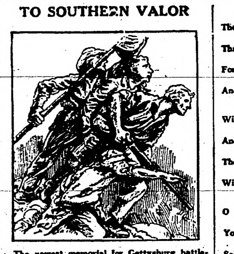
A small village straggles over it, and in the center is a famous mosque It is the mosque of "St. Jonah," and it contains not only the alleged body of the prophet, but one of the most wonderful relics of the world. The visitor is shown—and one does not need to be a zoologist to smile—a tooth of the whale that swallowed Jonah!

Airedale Pup Proves the Perfect "Office Boy"

Boston.—The perfect office boy has been found here. His name is Kent, he works at 88 Broad street, his boss is Perry Walton, of the Walton Advertising and Printing company, and, furthermore, he is only a year old. He is a thoroughbred Airedale pup. A visitor entering the outer office is greeted with a brisk bark.

Two forepaws on the office rail and an eager mouth awaits the visitor's card, message, hat or whatever is offered. This is promptly deposited on the desk of Miss Agnes Thorpe, Mr. Walton's secretary. Miss Thorpe, who trained Kent, expects be will be able to do outside messenger work before another year, while Mr. Walton declares the dog's presence is invaluable in getting business conferences, especially with strangers, a way to a friendly start.

TO SOUTHERN VALOR



The newest memorial for Gettysburg battlefield is a tribute to North Carolina men who fell for the Confederacy. It is the work of Gutzon Borglum.

At Gettysburg

(From Harper's Magazine.)

HARVEST

ONLY the seasons and the years invade
These quiet wheatfields where the armies crashed,
And mocking birds and quail fly unafraid
Within the forest where the rifles flashed.
Here where the bladed wings of death have mown
And gleaned their harvestry of golden lives
The fruitful seeds of corn and wheat are sown,
And where the cannon smoked an orchard thrives.

Long are the war years over, with their pain,
Their passionate tears and fury, and the sun
Lies hot and yellow on the heavy grain,
And all the fighting on these fields is done,
But in their peace the quivering heart recalls
The youth that bled beside these old stone walls.

THE CEMETERY

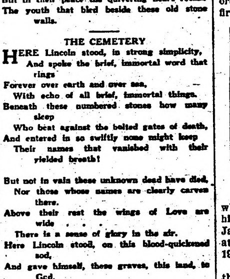
HERE Lincoln stood, in strong simplicity,
And spoke the brief, immortal word that rings
Forever over earth and over sea,
With echo of all brief, immortal things.
Beneath these numbered stones how many sleep
Who beat against the bolted gates of death,
And entered in so swiftly none might keep
Their names that vanished with their yielded breath!

But not in vain these unknown dead have died,
Nor those whose names are clearly carven there.
Above their rest the wings of Love are wide . . .
There is a sense of glory in the air.
Here Lincoln stood, on this blood-quickened sod,
And gave himself, these graves, this land, to God.

—Agnes Kendrick Gray.

Button of the G. A. R. Emblem of Great Cause

Money cannot buy the G. A. R. button because it is not for sale. Those of us who cannot wear it doff the hat to it and its wearer. It is a badge of courage. It was well fought for in a great cause. The fine thing about it is that after two generations the losers admit that the wearers of the G. A. R. button were on the right side. Time, the great solvent, has been at work. He (or it) is a windshield wiper to clear the glasses.



The G. A. R. has been a mighty force in parade and action. Today its ranks are thinned, but the old spirit remains fast; it will live forever, nothing of a spiritual kind can die. The souls of the dead will continue to march on through all the streets and lanes and highways of the United States.—Rocky Mountain News.

Salute

They wave a tattered flag and fondle dusty prints
That hold for them the memories of days long since
Forgotten by the men who know a stranger war,
And men who said that peace would reign forever more.

With rusty sabers dangling on their hips they come
And hardly stir the breeze with the beat of their drum,
They lead a line of younger men. Soon these pass by
With quicker step, and singing with their heads held high.

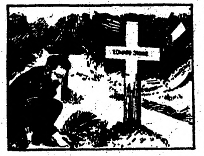
O men of Gettysburg! O men of Grant and Lee!
Your drums are hardly heard, but we, who crossed the sea,
Salute you in the comradeship of this last day.
Give us your flag, for we shall march ahead some day!

Dispute Over Question of World War "Firsts"

The question of who and what was first killed in the World war is disputed, just as it is in anything else.

The first American killed in that struggle according to records, was Edward Mandell Stone, who died February 15, 1915, while fighting with the French. The American Legion has so honored him as the first American to fall. Also killed before we declared war was a sailor—John Eopolucci of Washington, D. C. He was drowned when the American steamer Aztec was submarined off France, April 1, 1917.

The first combatant American soldier killed in the war, and the one honored by President Harding as "the first American killed in the war" and who has had a bridge dedicated to his memory as such, was Private James B. Gresham, who fell in action at Berthelemont, France, November 2, 1917.



Grave of Stone.

The first American officer killed in the war is said to have been Lieut. W. T. Fitzsimmons of St. Mary's, Kan.

An army nurse has the distinction of being the first officially recorded wounded American in the World war. She is Beatrice McDonald, a New York nurse trained at the Presbyterian hospital. She lost an eye when hit by shrapnel. She was awarded the coveted D. S. C.

The very first soldier killed in the war, say the French, was Corporal Jules Peugeot, shot while resisting advancing German troops on August 2, 1914, 30 hours before war was officially declared. A monument stands in his honor at Joncherey, near Belfort, Alsace.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Meade Tardily Given His Place in History

That General Meade was not honored with a statue long ago, in place of some who played a less conspicuous part, was largely because the value of his services was not fully recognized in the earlier years following the war. But the tributes of Grant and Lee to his military skill, the record of his long and faithful service prior to and following the battle of Gettysburg, a fuller recognition of the greatness of his chief victory when he had been but three days in command of the Army of the Potomac, together with his unblemished character, have served to give him his rightful place in the history of the nation and the admiration of his brother Americans.—Exchange.

Deserve National Tribute

The observance of Memorial day strikes a responsive chord in the heart of every true American citizen.

We cannot do too much for our soldiers, living and dead.

They are the men who represented us—yea, many of them died for us in the great crises of the world's history.

They made the supreme sacrifice for the safety and blessing of generations living, and generations yet unborn.

It is quite fitting that the nation should halt in its usual industrial rush for one entire day in order to pay fitting tribute to our worthy dead, soldiers in all our great American wars.

What Will you do When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria! At least five million homes are never without it. If there are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks. Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby, however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you a sleepless, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday ailments. Any hour of the day or night that Baby becomes fretful, or restless. Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every druggist has it.

Oklahoma Asphalt

A study of Oklahoma asphalt has been undertaken by the Department of Commerce at the bureau of mines experimental station at Bartlesville. The study was undertaken with the co-operation of Oklahoma officials to segregate the asphalt deposits from other similar material which has been found unsuited for highway work. It is expected that the results of the study will give much material to throw light on the origin of petroleum and underground conditions causing accumulations of petroleum.

ISLAND IN PACIFIC MAY BE SOURCE OF INFLUENZA

Epidemics Studied by Health Service Indicate Spread Across Ocean.

Washington.—The starting point of the influenza epidemic, which during the last winter swept from California across America and to Europe, where it recently abated, probably was an island in the Pacific. This is only a guess, but fresh evidence in support of it has just been received here by the United States public health service in the official report of the director general of health of Australia.

The significant feature of the report is that influenza was epidemic in Australia and near-by islands at about the same time that we were having it on the Pacific coast. This points to a source of infection in some Pacific island about equally accessible to Australia and California. The definite spot has not been located.

In the Society Islands an epidemic of influenza began in the middle of October. In the Cook Islands influenza broke out November 17, just one week after the arrival of a mail boat from New Zealand. The occurrence of several cold, unpleasant days following fine weather was thought to have aggravated conditions there.

The disease was of mild type; only about 300 or 400 persons were affected and the epidemic was over by the end of November.

In Tonga, another island near Australia, a mild influenza epidemic without any deaths commenced early in July and lasted through August and returned in November.

In the Fiji Islands influenza was widespread throughout the year and toward the close of the year was of an unusually severe type. In the British Solomon Islands an epidemic occurred during the last quarter of the year, but was over by January.

In Australia proper the influenza appeared to abate in the eastern states by the end of November, with the onset of summer weather. However, the influenza wave in south Australia reached its maximum in the middle of December, just as it did in the United States. Influenza cases appeared in Hawaii in August, according to reports from the United States army.

Knew and Liked Americans

The St. Mihiel cemetery, as it is officially called, is perhaps the most visited by the people of France of any American cemetery. Like all of our battlefield burial grounds it lies on land redeemed from the enemy by our arms, in this instance it happens that the area set free by American forces was a populous region, and surrounded by a populous region. Also it is a region where Americans lived and trained and fought for many months, and the people of those cities and towns and farm villages really knew the Americans, and really liked them.

What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

by Wyndham Martyn

W. N. U. Service

Copyright by Wyndham Martyn

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby, prosperous New York merchant, has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains. Miss Selenos, a former tenant of the Gray house, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings, as some form of practical joke. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker whom they have put in charge of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, explains to Pelham, that a dangerous pond near the house, in which several children have been drowned, has since been filled in, but he urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Hanby and Junior learn that the caretaker was known to the police as "Red Chapin" and had a bad record. Hanby considers asking Leslie Barron, long an admirer of Celia, and a husky youth, to join the house party. Mrs. Hanby declares she likes the house.

"You are wanted on the long distance, sir," she told Hanby.

"Hello!" said Hanby a few seconds later. "Yes, this is he speaking."

The voice that answered seemed faraway but very distinct. It was plainly that of an educated woman.

"I saw you at Pine Plains this afternoon. You are interested in the murder?"

"Naturally," he replied. "May I ask to whom I'm talking?"

"The name would convey nothing. Besides, it would not be the true one."

"Why not?"

"You'll see presently. Are you still determined to live at the Gray house?"

"Why not? I bought the place for that purpose."

"When you bought it, you had no idea of its history. You did not then know that it takes toll of every family inhabiting it. Happy families have gone there, but never a happy family left it."

"I am satisfied that with proper care these accidents could have been avoided."

"That's what the real estate people said when they wanted you to buy the place. They lied, naturally. All they want is their commission. Mr. Hanby, in your heart of hearts you know there is some inexplicable but dreadful curse on it."

"I am not weak-minded enough to credit such nonsense." He spoke with unusual violence. "With common precaution the accidents could have been avoided."

"Who told you so?"

"A Mr. Appleton." Hanby suddenly realized that he was an employee of the firm which sold the house. He recalled how Appleton had seemed to alter during the interview. In the beginning he had seemed to believe that something beyond human explanation hovered about the Gray house. Then he had become brisk and businesslike, and had spoken of carpenters' estimates.

"Of the firm of Douglas & Robinson?" There was contempt in the speaker's voice. "I see! Merely one of their clerks. May I ask what precaution that he could suggest would have saved the life of your unfortunate caretaker?"

"That was due to one of the vendettas common to the underworld."

Far away the musical laugh came over the wire.

"I don't see anything amusing in that," Hanby snapped.

"But you will," said the unknown. "It strikes me as very, very funny. May I ask you if you ever saw Red Chapin, Mr. Hanby?"

"No," he returned. "I don't relish that sort of thing in life or in death."

"I did. He was six feet in height, had hair of reddish brown, and carried himself very erect. This was a pose. He was pretending to be an ex-soldier. His usual habit was to slink along furtively, like the murderer he was. Now, Mr. Hanby, you are six feet in height, and you walk as erectly as ever a West Pointer did. We did not know you had engaged a man to watch the Gray house. Red Chapin was not killed because of a vendetta. He was mistaken for you!"

"I don't believe a word of it!" Hanby said violently.

"It would be safer for you and your family if you did. Next time there will be no mistake!"

"Are you threatening to kill me?"

Again the musical laugh was heard.

"That would be most unwise over the telephone wires, wouldn't it? No—we are warning you that it would be safer to take your family somewhere else. Why not a trip round the world? Or there are wonderful places in Long Island. You will find Pine Plains very cold in winter."

"If this is a joke, it's a rotten one!" Hanby cried angrily.

"It is more a joke to me than to you," said the unseen woman. "I scarcely think your family will consider it a joke when you are found dead; but perhaps they may. One never knows. Well, this is your last warning."

At this point Hanby was cut off. He shouted for Junior. Junior, startled by the unusual vigor of his father's voice, came running.

"I've just had a long-distance," said his father. "It is very important that I should trace from what station it was sent. Now, Father Sherlock, do your stuff!"

"You bet!" replied Junior eagerly.

"It was a woman who spoke—an educated woman with a youngish voice," continued Hanby. "I'm in the library with Mr. Pelham. Let me know what happens."

Pelham looked up as his friend entered. There was something different about him now. The look of indetermination was gone.

"Hil, you look as if you were about to scrap with some one, and rather enjoyed the prospect."

"That's exactly how I feel," Hanby said. "Bill, it is nothing new to a five-dollar-a-day detective to hear that his client has been threatened with violent death, so you won't be shocked to learn the sad news."

"Dad's Perfectly Safe," Celia Retorted.

"What the devil do you mean?"

"Simply this—a woman with a charming voice—Junior's trying to find where she talked from—said that Red Chapin was killed because they mistook him for me. My turn, it appears, is next on the list. All will be forgiven if I take the family to Europe or buy something on Long Island." Hanby squared his shoulders. "The old subconscious mind was right—I am in danger; but now that I know it consciously, the feeling of depression has gone. Bill, your salary is now five dollars and twenty-five cents a day. You can use the extra quarter for an insurance policy. You probably won't need any more clothes. Not a word! Dina's coming."

The two men stood up as Mrs Hanby came into the room.

"I've never been so thrilled in my life!" she cried. "The impertinence of the creature, in assuming that your death would be a joke!"

Hanby groaned. He saw it all. Dina had picked up the telephone upstairs in her bedroom, and had listened to the whole conversation.

"Which is it to be?" he asked. "Around the world or Long Island?"

"It's going to be Pine Plains," she declared. "Hil, you didn't recognize the voice, did you?"

"Never heard it before. I could only recognize that it was the voice of an educated woman, youngish and perfectly at ease."

"It was an Englishwoman's voice," Dina asserted.

"I'm not sure. The inflection might have been put on to deceive. Moreover, lots of our actresses get into that way of talking. You'd surely think that throaty contralto of Elsie Ferguson's was English, if you didn't know that she was born in Manhattan."

"This woman was English," Dina said, "and I'll prove it. She didn't say, as we do, 'around the world.' She said 'round the world.' The English always do that. An American woman would say 'on Long Island.' If you recall it, she said 'in Long Island.' That's like the English. They say 'in the street' when we say 'on the street.' I'm certain it was an Englishwoman."

Mrs. Hanby paused as Junior came in, wearing an air of importance.

"The call came from a booth at Grand Central," he reported. "It's impossible to trace it any more than that. It wasn't long distance at all."

Hanby rang the bell for Mary Sloan.

"Why did you say I was wanted on the long-distance?" he inquired, when the maid appeared.

"The lady said, 'This is long-distance. I want Mr. Hilton Hanby.'"

When Mary had gone, Hanby turned to his wife.

"The woman must have spoken some distance from the instrument, because it sounded like a long-distance. Very carefully done! Dina, do you still want to go through with it?"

"Of course I do! Do you suppose I'll have any other woman threatening my man?"

Dina's eyes flashed. Pelham looked at her closely. It was a new Dina to him. It was a woman who would fight like a tigress to save the man who was dear to her.

Pelham knew that no word of his would sway the Hanbys. Standing together, as they invariably did, they were not to be deterred.

"As the house detective," he said, "I realize that my clients have stampeded. I only recommend that no member of this household should go up there alone. Safety in numbers! All expeditions are to be accompanied by the house detective, or he resigns. All traveling expenses incurred by the said detective must be paid for by his principals."

Celia and Leslie Barron interrupted them. Celia, at nineteen, was one of those lovely, vital children of the age, incapable of fatigue, eager for fun, gifted with much wisdom where men were concerned, and intolerant of an age where chaperonage flourished and young people went to bed early.

Leslie Barron was a silent youth. Through family influence he might some day occupy a distinguished position in his father's bank. New Haven had just lost him, but he liked college so well that he was returning for postgraduate work—which, he thought, would be less tedious than work in the elder Barron's bank. It was his aim in life to marry Celia, but of her consent he was not yet sure.

"Well, Dina darling," said Celia, putting her arm about her mother. "Why this high color and the sparkling eyes? Has dad found out that you love Bill?"

"I'm fighting mad because I listened in and found your father talking to an Englishwoman with a lovely voice."

"Dad's perfectly safe," Celia retorted. "Sometimes I think we're not modern enough. I don't know a single household where the father and mother are like you two. Wandering parents, all of them. Sometimes I think mother is a sort of ingrowing vamp."

"She is," laughed Hanby. "Whenever I try to escape, she practices her devilish wiles on me. Do you think you can stand Les for a whole summer? I want him up at Pine Plains."

"You must dilute him with other boys," she retorted. "I couldn't stand having nothing but Les all that time." Celia looked at him, laughing. "See how eagerly he snaps at your invitation!"

"I accepted last week," said Les, "as soon as Junior knew about this new house. I've made plans for a golf course already."

"Who was the lady with the lovely voice?" Celia asked.

She knew that she had interrupted an unusual conversation.

"I'm not going to give myself away before your mother and all these witnesses. Go away and dance. We will join you presently."

When she had gone, Hanby turned to Pelham.

"Dina and I don't want Celia and the others to know. Junior is different. We shan't be going for a month, and things may have explained themselves by then."

"I hope not," said Bill Pelham. "I want to earn my money."

Spot Forever Famous in American History

Boston's famous Beacon hill acquired that name in 1634 when King Charles commanded the Massachusetts colony to surrender its charter and annulled all land titles. The whole of New England suddenly found itself partitioned among a favored few in the mother country, and the thumb of a royal governor general bore down hard. At the head of a commission holding the powers of life and death over the colonists was an archbishop who had acquired considerable reputation as an heresy hunter. The colony was only four years old, but in no uncertain spirit it rebelled and soon after John Endicot's sword had slashed the red cross from the royal ensign at Salem a fort was erected at Castle Island in Boston harbor. Citizens drilled earnestly on the common and in the small towns around. As a means of quick communication a beacon was erected on the highest eminence of the capital—and that hill was named, for as long, probably as America endures.—Detroit News.

African Tribal Language

One of the greatest difficulties of missionaries in the Sudan lies in the perfect babel of languages existing among its many tribes, a great challenge to the ambitious linguist, as there are no books of any kind among them, and no teachers. Added difficulties are the various intonations of each word, a wrong tone being used often completely changing the meaning of the word. Recently it has been discovered that in one tribe seven different tones are used.

Look for Kilauea to Become Active Again

Tremendous avalanches in the almost empty crater of Kilauea, Hawaii's "live volcano," again have given hope that "Madame Pele" might return to her traditional abode.

Pele is the goddess of volcanic fire, according to Hawaiian mythology.

The pit of Kilauea has been almost bare of flowing lava for several years, though still smoking. Yet there are fire cracks all over a vast expanse of the Hawaii National park, surrounding the crater, and ample proof that red-hot lava is just beneath the surface.

The avalanches have sheared off large sections of the crater's edge, so that land where spectators and autos could stand only recently disappeared into a yawning pit more than 1,000 feet deep.

One large party of round-the-world "trippers" arrived at the volcano just in time to witness a mighty avalanche.

Every Part of Grape of Commercial Value

Salvatore Castorina, the owner and operator of an Ontario grape farm, is said to have developed his industry to the point where every part of the grape, including the prunings from the vines, is used in the manufacture of chemicals and for other purposes. Principal among these are alcohol, cream of tartar, phosphates, chicken feed and fertilizer. He says that since it has been shown that ethyl alcohol can be obtained from both the grape itself and the vine prunings, he has now entered into negotiations with one of the leading gasoline companies for the entire output of his establishment for five years. The immediate manufacture of ethyl gasoline is contemplated, and through a subsidiary concern the company will utilize the other grape chemicals.

Valuable Salvage

The rumbler, a new device to salvage brass from worn out light bulbs, is announced by the New York Edison company. The name describes the noise made in reclaiming the brass socket shells, the only parts considered worth saving. In shape it is a cylinder, of 500-bulb capacity, with two sets of steel teeth set on bars inside. While the drum revolves, they chew to bits glass and filament, which fall out of holes in the bottom, leaving the shells shiny and clean. The company reclaims about 800,000 shells yearly. Until the rumbler was devised the work was done by hand.

Ten Million Trees

More than 10,000,000 trees have been planted in Louisiana during the 1928-29 planting season, according to a statement issued by the Louisiana division of forestry. The total of hand-planted forests and wood lots in the state now stands at 28,000 acres, which represents the planting of about 25,000,000 trees.

Most of the planting has been done by lumber and paper companies on their cutover lands. The combined output of the nurseries operated by these companies is about 2,500,000 trees.—American Forests Magazine.

Lightning Got Busy

Albert Hunt tells a believe-it-or-not of a bolt of lightning at Hornell, N. Y. While he was seated in the kitchen of the Hunt home on the Hornell-Canisteo road during an electric storm, a bolt of lightning hit the chimney and traveled downward, knocking the lids from the stove and lighting a fire that had been laid for the next morning. Paper and kindling were burning briskly when the family investigated. They found no apparent damage to the chimney or the stove.

Optimism is nine-tenths of success.

Crude Idea of Iron

The first iron ever used by man was called the "metal of heaven," for the very good reason, it is asserted, that that is precisely where it came from. It was iron from meteorites, found somewhere in the mountains of what is now Turkey.

Old Expression

"Once in a blue moon" was first used by Roy and Barlow in "Rede Me and be not Rothe" in England in 1528. It was formerly used to designate somet'ng that will never happen. E. C. Brewer in his book, "Phrase and Fable," says: "On December 10 1883, we had a blue moon. The winter was unusually mild." The expression is now used to mean very seldom.

Who are the people who have made this car such an overwhelming success?

The New Pontiac Big Six is scoring a tremendous success. All previous Pontiac production records have been surpassed. But the most interesting phase of Pontiac's latest and greatest success lies, not in the number of people who are buying it, but in the kind of people. Many outstanding lectures and demonstrations will be presented during Woman's Camp week at the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, June 17 to 20.

One of the new features of this year's camp will be the series of three basket weaving demonstrations under the direction of Miss S. Allen, representing the Brown Supply Company, Willernie. During the first demonstration, the women will make "Table Pads", followed by "Octagonal Trays" and "Hanging Baskets", thelast two periods.

All who wish to join these classes will be charged for material only. Aside from being very useful in the home, these articles will serve as a souvenir of the long-to-be-remembered week of rest, recreation and instruction.

Other important numbers on the program include lectures on "Planning Community Meetings" and "Nutrition in Hawaii", by Miss Eva L. Blair, University Farm specialist; two lecture demonstrations on "Attractive Desserts" and "Unusual Dishes for all occasions" by Mrs. Marjorie Child Husted, Washburn Crosby Company, Minneapolis; "Feeding for Egg Production" by A. M. Pilkey; "Finishing and Enamling Used Furniture", A. M. Foker; Purchasing Supplies for the Home", Miss Fanny B. Lippitt; "Attractive Flower Gardens", T. M. McCall, "Use of Sewing Machine Attachments", by Miss Viola M. Miller of the Singer Sewing Machine Company, "Selection of Fabrics" by Miss Retta Bede; and "Suitable Outdoor Games" by D. H. Lavoi.

This three day camp is open to all women in Noruhwestern Minnesota at a total cost of $3.75 for board, room, and entertainment. Last year 112 women from ten different counties and three states were in attendance.

LESSON 65

PRODUCTION: How many cows should be kept. This depends upon different factors, but chiefly upon the amount of money that needs to be made. The more money required, the more dairy cows should be kept, for good cows, properly cared for are money makers. A good cow will clear around $100 a year above the cost of feed at present prices of butterfat.

MANUFACTURING: Co-operative creameries have found that it pays to have the appearance of the creameries first-class both inside and out. The walls, ceiling and machinery are painted every year or two and a lawn with shrubbery and flower beds on the outside are common.

MARKETING: The road to market or to the consumer, taken by farm products before co-operative marketing, was generally from the farm to the local dealer; from the local dealer to the commission house; from there to the jobber and retail store, and then to the consumers. Now the big battle for economy is requiring a shorter road.

Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Co.

Tribute To The Cow

Grand and noble brute, of all man's animals friends she is the greatest. To her we owe the most. Examine into all the channels of trade into which she enters, and note the result. Should she be blotted out, a Sunday stillness would pervade the great stockyards of our large cities, and grass would grow in the streets. One-half the freight trains that plow the continent from ocean to ocean would sidetrack, for there would be nothing for them to do. Fifty per cent of the employees would draw no pay on Saturday night, and our tables would be bare of the greatest luxuries with which they are loaded. The great plains of the West that the cow has made to blossom like the rose would revert to the Indians, whence they came and millions of prosperous homes would be destroyed.

No other beast is like the cow. There is not a thing from nose to tail but is utilized for the use of man. We use her horns to comb our hair, her skin is on our feet and horse's backs. Her her hair keeps the plaster on our walls, her hoof makes glue, and her tail makes soup. She gives us our cream, our milk, our butter and cheese, and her flesh is the great meat of all nations. Her blood is used to make our sugar white; her bones when ground make valuable fertilizer, and even the contents of her paunch she has put through the first chemical process for the manufacture of the best quality of white board paper. Oh, you who would abuse the cow, I wish that I could for once take from your table as you are about to sit down to the evening meal all that the cow has placed thereon. I'd take the cup of milk, setting by the baby's chair; I'd take the cream biscuit, the custard pie, the cream for coffee. the butter, the cheese, the smoking roast of beef or steak or the sweet corned plate of juicy meat. In fact, I'd leave you to make your meal upon Irish potatoes, beet pickles and toothpicks.

No other animal works for man both day and night; by day she gathers food, and when we are asleep at night she brings it back to rechew and manufacture into all the things of which I speak. She has gone with man from Plymouth Rock to the setting sun. It was her sons that drew the prairie schooner for the sturdy pioneer, as inch by iuch they sought to prove that "Westwdrd the star of empire takes its way". The old cow grazed along behind, and when the day's march was done, she came and gave the milk to fill the mother's breast to feed the suckling babe that was, perchance, to become the future ruler of his country.

Who says that what we are to a great extent we do not owe to man's best friend, the cow? Treat her kindly, gently, for without her — words fail me to describe

It was the cow that made it posible for man to change the great American desert into a land of happy and properous homes. When she came the buffalo disappeared, the Indian tepee gave way to the church, school house and home, and where once the wild wolves howled, today children prattle, grass grows, flowers bloom and birds sing.

Seek Source of Solomon's Gold

Mystery of Antiquity May Be Cleared Up by English Expedition.

Washington.—Where did the queen of Sheba acquire the 120 talents of gold she presented to Solomon? Whence came the gold for King Solomon's drinking and eating vessels and that which embelished his throne of ivory? From what place did Hiram, king of Tyre, receive the vast treasure of gold brought by water in his hundreds of galleys?

"These mysteries of antiquity may be cleared up through the work of an English expedition recently appointed to examine the ruins of Zimbabwe in Mashonaland, southern Rhodesia," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"No connection between the ruins and Sheba's queen and Solomon and Hiram has been found. But the gold mines of Rhodesia were worked during an era corresponding to the reigns of those monarchs, and many relics found in the temples and other ruined buildings are distinctly Asiatic.

"The ruins of Zimbabwe are the remains of an ancient city which could have contained a huge population. They are located in the southeastern part of south Rhodesia, about 200 miles inland from the east African coast, and visitors go there from Victoria, the nearest town other than native villages.

Tourist Hotel Among Ruins.

"Victoria is on a railway line and Zimbabwe has an up-to-date hotel for tourists, situated in the midst of the ruins. Picturesque landscape features add to the attraction of Zimbabwe as a tourist resort. Much of the glamor surrounding the ruins has been dispelled by their neat appearance. Debris has been cleared away and immaculate sign boards point the way to the glories of the past by announcing 'To your right' or 'Follow the arrow.'

"Articles of Egyptian, Arabian and Persian origin have been found in the ruins. One relic is an Egyptian figure with a hieroglyphic inscription, partly defaced, but with the word 'Osiris' still decipherable. Osiris was the Egyptian god of the dead. On the figure was the cartouche of Thothmes III, a king of Egypt who ruled about the year 1450 B. C.

"Five soapstone birds were found which archeologists declare resemble images of birds sacred to Astaroth, a Phoenician deity. The instruments for making jewelry, domestic utensils and armaments are different from those used by the primitive African tribes before the advent of the English.

Buildings Are Round.

"The buildings of Zimbabwe are round. Few right angles have been found, and no evidences are apparent that any of the buildings were roofed. Except in the construction of the floors and steps no mortar or cement was used.

"The elliptical temple, with an interior circumference of 770 feet, is the largest and most intact of the buildings. The so-called Acropolis ruins are situated on Zimbabwe hill and are mainly fortifications. The eastern and western temples are situated on the summit of the Acropolis and it is in these two buildings that the most relics of Asiatic and Egyptian origin were found.

"Zimbabwe is the largest of some hundreds of stone ruins scattered over Rhodesia, so the uncovering of its history may supply the history of the entire country.

"Some 'explorers believe the Zimbabwe ruins are not an ancient Asiatic center of industry, but magnified kraals built by Bantu natives about 400 years ago. However, no explanation of the presence of the Phoenician and Egyptian relics has been made.

"Zimbabwe was the mythical 'dead city' of Sir Rider Haggard's 'She.' It also figures in his other novels, 'Allan Quartermain' and 'King Solomon's Mines.' The natives regard it with superstitious fear. These facts have helped make it a city of mystery and conjecture."

Coins representing a value of $24,775 remain unsold, however, and the state treasurer has now been authorized to sell these at par.

LINDBERGH'S PLACE AS AIR MAIL PILOT SECURE AGAIN

Mystery of Three Lost Bags Cleared Up in Mexico City; Philatelists Happy.

Brownsville, Texas.—Although the whole world is supposed to make allowances for a lover, stamp collectors of the country were beginning to be quite put out with Charles A. Lindbergh as an air mail pilot and to think he was a lot more intent on getting back to Mexico City than he was about safeguarding the cargo of letters he carried on the flight initiating regular mail service between Brownsville, Texas, and the capital of Mexico, when the mystery of three lost mail bags was cleared up recently and all question of Lindbergh's responsibility dispelled. The affair was about to become an international issue when the missing mail was found.

Lindbergh flew the mail from Brownsville to Mexico City March 10 and turned it over to postal authorities without a suspicion that any of it had been lost.

Soon afterward, however, the government began to receive complaints from stamp collectors concerning the non-receipt of mail they had put aboard the plane. A checkup showed they were right, but it failed to reveal the whereabouts of the lost mail.

The State department and other departments of the government were appealed to. Senators and representatives began to receive indignant letters from philatelic constituents, who hinted at "Mexican plots," discrimination and whatnot. The thing began to look serious when G. W. Dennett, postmaster o. Brownsville, received a long telegram from the postmaster of Mexico City, which explained everything.

The missing mail bags, he said had been found nearly a month after the flight, far out in the hollow all metal wings of the tri-motored monoplane which Lindbergh had flown.

There is a mail compartment in the center of the wing, and the motion of the plane in flight was credited with having thrown the three bags outward toward the wing tips, where they lay unnoticed and unguarded until the plane was undergoing a thorough periodical inspection at Merida, Yucatan.

To remedy the hardship worked on the stamp collectors whose mail was in these bags, the Mexican postal authorities set back their cancellation stamps and recanceled the letters under date of March 10 "so as to preserve their philatelic value." Once more all was serene. Lindbergh, unaware through it all that his star as a mail flyer was ever observed by a cloud, again has the unanimous support of the stamp collectors.

MRS. MOODY LAUNCHES OUT

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

SHE was a slender woman with a high color and bright dark eyes. There was a grating sound in her voice and she had a nervous laugh that was quite as apt to sound in the wrong places as in the right ones. Her neighbors thought there was something a little peculiar about her, but it took them a long time to find out that she was merely dissatisfied.

Her husband was much older than she, a gentle, kindly man who earned very faithfully a very small salary, for ordinary needs, but it could not be made to do everything. He was wont to say:

"Well, I'm earning more now, Addie, than I did when my first wife was living. I don't see why you can't manage the same as she did."

He was a twenty-dollar-a-week man, always had been and always would be. He simply could not earn more. Still he had saved a little. He owned his home and had a trifle in the bank, which is all that can be expected of a twenty-dollar-a-week man.

However, he had a wealthy brother, and one day this brother presented Mr. Moody with $6,000 properly invested. The brother meant it as a great kindness, but it proved to be a misfortune. For Mrs. Moody now had the means she had always coveted in order to "launch out." She called it that—"launching out."

"I'm going to launch out a little on the proceeds of that legacy, Mr. Moody," she said to him.

"Well, my dear," he conceded. But he sighed. He had stood behind the counter at Tuthill's corner drug store and smelled linament so long that he had thought of launching out a little himself—that is, of taking Addie where there were pine trees. He had lived amongst the pines in his boyhood.

But as he had given up to his first wife so he gave up to his second, and Addie had her way. She began with the house.

It was one of those gentle, old, white houses with a narrow veranda across the front, a narrow hall, a narrow stairway. There were four rooms downstairs and three up. For thirty years Mr. Moody had slept in the bedroom of the sitting room, but Addie wanted it now for a "den." Mrs. Orlow had a "den." Mrs. Orlow also, had an open stairway. Then Mrs. Rich had an archway between her living room and dining room, and Addie burned for such an archway. In fact, she wanted something of every house she entered, and the result was that the carpenters were puzzled as to how to please her.

For a month the house was dusty with plaster and noisy with the sound of hammer and saw. But the archway and open staircase was accomplished. There were other changes, too. The old house was fast losing its character.

Then came paperhanging and painting and Addie rested with the result. She was happy for the moment. But there came a day when all she could think about and talk about was the new hardwood floors that Mrs. Peple was having laid in her downstairs rooms. Yes! She wanted hardwood floors, and she got them, too. They were paid for out of Mr. Moody's savings. Just then Mrs. Morse next door bought a new dining room set. There was unfortunately "another just like it at Perry's," and Addie bought it.

Mr. Moody began to rub his head and wonder how it was all to end. He looked at his fast-diminishing account with a sigh and rubbed his bald head still more and almost wished that he had not been in such a hury to get married again. But there was nothing to be done save let Addie go her own gait.

And did she? Ah, yes! When Mrs. Mosher bought a blue-and-pink rug she bought one, too, and when Mrs. Niles ordered green overstuffed furniture she also ordered a set. The old-fashioned furniture was a mockery beside the new, and was speedily shoved out of sight. But there could be no further buying for that year, because the funds were all used up.

It was a cold winter and the open rooms were hard to heat. Mr. Moody missed his cozy bedroom, his warm corner. Mrs. Moody shivered in her thin blouses. She had, unfortunately for such a season, a handsome neck which must be displayed at all times.

The neighbors giggled and wondered. They went into the house and came out smiling. That is, some of them did. Others like Mrs. Niles and Miss Mosher were troubled of spirit.

"She has ruined the dear old place," they said to each other. "It was always so inviting and homey when dear Edith Moody lived there. This woman has no taste. She has mixed colors like a mad creature. And she had had that darling eggshell secretary varnished! It is clear desecration."

Mrs. Moody was beginning to see that her house was queer and disturbing. The colors jangled, there were drafts everywhere, and the new dining room furniture was too nice to use every day. They ate in the kitchen and were much cramped for room.

In January she fell ill of a bad cold. Mr. Moody had to leave his work to care for her. The neighbors were kind as could be. After all, she wasn't to blame for not knowing more.

But lying there in her bed Addie Moody did a great deal of thinking. She was upstairs for one thing, and she thought how much nicer it would be if she were down in the dear old bedroom which was so useless as a den.

"It's horrid, all horrid. What a fool I am," she thought, over and over. To her husband she said: "If I never get well, dear, what will you do with this dreadful house?"

"Don't talk so, Addie," he answered.

She got well, but he was tired out. He had to have a rest, the doctor said, and urged a Southern resort.

"Nothing to go on," Mr. Moody shook his head.

"We'll find something to go on," Mrs. Moody was firm. "If we have to sell the house."

"We couldn't sell the house. Nobody would buy such a looking place," Mr. Moody said. He added sadly, "I wish we could."

It was Mrs. Moody who got a buyer. How she worked to get that buyer! And how she worked to sell him the house! They were new mill people, just establishing a home, suddenly affluent, and with no idea of values. They took the new things—even the blue-and-pink rug. But Mrs. Moody reserved the old stuff for herself.

So they went to Florida for three happy months, and Mr. Moody grew rosy and merry again. But Mrs. Moody continued to be a little subdued.

When they came back they bought the old More house, which had been built after the same pattern as their own. It was going for a song, so they really made a good bargain.

"I suppose," Miss Mosher said the first time she called on Mrs. Moody, "that you are planning to do over this house."

Mrs. Moody colored.

"Why, no, I'm not," she replied. "Mr. Moody and I both think it is good enough just as it is."

Which proved to Miss Mosher that Mrs. Moody had learned something valuable. And this cannot be said of every experience of life.

Claims That Birds Are Equipped With Radio

How do migrating birds find their way? How is the robin able to return to the identical pear tree it nested in the year before? How can a humming bird, no larger than your thumb, steer a straight course over 500 miles of rolling water in a single flight across the Gulf of Mexico? Two hundred years of patient observation have given new answers to these ancient mysteries. One of the most startling of recent suggestions is offered by John T. Nichols of the American Museum of Natural History, in Popular Science Monthly.

Tiny "radio compasses," located perhaps in the brains of birds, may be the secret, he believes. "If nature has endowed birds with some innate electromagnetic quality," he says, "it would enable them to set their courses by magnetism just as aviators can follow the line of a radio beam projected from a certain point. The human flyer is kept in the lane of the radio beam by signals caught by his receiver. Some kind of natural 'radio compass' may do the same thing for the birds."

If this theory should prove correct, it would revolutionize our ideas of bird migration. It would explain why birds can maintain their aerial courses through thick and foggy weather, how the golden plover guides its flight from Nova Scotia to Venezuela, 2,400 miles over water and out of sight of land, and why storms fail to divert birds of passage from their routes. However, it would not clear up one puzzle. That is the mystery of the homing pigeon's ability to find its loft, even if freed as far as 1,500 miles from home and regardless of the compass direction of its flight.

Irish Claim First Smokers

That smoking was enjoyed in Ireland centuries before Sir Walter Raleigh plundered Spanish galleons and spread seed for disputes about coughs, carloads and candy, is the claim of Irish students of relics and art. They show that pipes of bronze and clay have been unearthed in very ancient Irish burial places, and in Kildare a primitive pipe was found between the teeth of a human skull more than 1,000 years old. A monument in Corcumore abbey, County Clare, erected to the king of Thomond, who was killed in battle seven centuries ago, shows the king lying down with a short pipe, or "dudeen" of the Irish, in his mouth. In days before the coming of tobacco, dried herbs were smoked.

So Sudden

Together they had broken the wishbone, and she held the longest piece.

"Now, what shall I wish for?" she mused. "Really, I can't think."

"Oh, wish for anything," he suggested brilliantly.

But still her brows wore a puckered frown.

"Oh, well, if it's as hard as all that I'll wish for you," he said obligingly.

"Oh, John," she cried happily, "you really wish for me, dear? Then you can have me! This is so sudden!"

England Long Barred Jews

All Jews, some 16,000, were expelled from England in 1290, during the reign of Edward I. Although Jews gradually went back to England during the centuries following, they were barred from all political offices of importance. It was not until 1858 that they were emancipated from political disabilities. In that year the house of commons passed a resolution enabling Jews to sit in parliament. Later in the year Baron Rothschild took his seat in the house.

What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

W. N. U. Service
Copyright by Wyndham Martyn

By Wyndham Martyn

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains. Miss Selenos, a former tenant, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, explains to Pelham, that a dangerous pond near the house, in which several children have been drowned, has since been filled in, but he urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Hanby and Junior learn that the caretaker was known to the police as "Red Chapin" and had a bad record. Hanby considers asking Leslie Barron, long an admirer of Celia, to join the house party. Mrs. Hanby declares she likes the house. Pelham becomes a member of the household, with the official title of "house detective." Over the telephone Hanby is warned by a woman not to subject his family to the dangers of the Gray house. Leslie Barron arrives making four able-bodied members of the Hanby household.

CHAPTER V

During the weeks before the Hanbys could occupy the Gray house there were no more unpleasant messages or telephonic communications to disturb them. Only one person had interested himself sufficiently to call up Hanby at his office.

The voice proclaimed itself as belonging to a name so indistinctly enunciated that Hanby was not sure whether it was Bayles, Vales, Bailey, or Valley. When he tried to make sure which, the voice replied with no clarifying effect. Hanby thought he might get it later in the conversation.

"I am calling you up," said the stranger, "to congratulate you on your purchase of the Gray house. You may recall that we met some time ago at the Metropolitan club."

Hanby remembered lunching at this distinguished club and being introduced to several influential men.

"Thank you," he said cordially. "You know the house?"

"Very well. I looked over it recently with the intention of purchasing it, but the accommodation was insufficient. As you perhaps know, I bought a larger place at Westbury."

Assuredly this was a Metropolitan club member! Thirty rooms were not enough for him.

"I want to ask you a special favor," the voice went on. "I am deeply interested in ornithology. I have even contributed to the literature of the subject. One of the reasons why I considered the Gray house was that it offers a natural sanctuary for birds. There was a lake there, which was filled in not long ago, and is now covered with dense creepers and flowering shrubs. Innumerable birds take shelter there—little birds, I mean—immune from their winged enemies and from man. I beg of you to preserve this retreat inviolate. Our rarer birds are dying out in an alarming fashion."

"What exactly do you want me to do?" Hanby asked.

"I want you to do nothing. Leave the place to the songsters. A bird sanctuary is not unsightly. To me it is beautiful. What, after all, are five acres out of two hundred? You will be rewarded by seeing some of our most exquisite song birds." The unknown ornithologist reeled off a list of names that made his hearer dizzy. "Purple finch, vesper sparrow, song sparrow, nuthatch, chickadee, ovenbird, junco, snowflake, phoebe, bobolink, indigo bunting, rose-breasted grosbeak, kinglet, wren and others."

"It's a fine idea," said Mr. Hanby warmly. "I'm glad you told me. I was just going to have the place cleared out, because I thought it was useless. I love birds myself, and I'm all for preserving them."

"I was told that you were a high type of citizen, Mr. Hanby," the voice said gratefully. "I hope to do myself the honor of calling upon you soon. Good-by!"

"Now, who the devil was it?" Hanby asked himself.

He spoke of the bird sanctuary at dinner. His family was enthusiastic.

"It's a beautiful idea," said Dina. "I was going to put a sunken rose garden there, but we have heaps of other places."

"Why do birds go there?" Tim Hanby asked.

"Because they get food and water there." His father had refreshed his memory on the subject. "There's a spring that keeps the shrubs and bushes alive and flourishing. Blackberries and other wild fruits and berries grow there in profusion."

"Did you say that the man's name is Bayles?" Dina asked.

"Or Bayliss, or Bailey—something like that. He seemed to think that I ought to remember him. He's going to call on us. He's probably a multi millionaire. Tim, I'm going to put you on your honor not to sit by that sanctuary and snipe those trusting warblers and orioles."

Tim, Hanby's second son, had a shotgun and a small rifle, and a passion for using them. A struggle went on in him.

"I promise," he said.

Tim's parents knew that, mischievous as the boy was, he would keep his word. He solaced himself with the thought that there were many rabbits to be had, not to mention crows, hawks, and bats.

"We are to regard ourselves as guardians of the birds who trust us. I look to the house detective to enforce these rules."

"Aye, aye, chief!" said Bill Pelham.

"I like the idea of a house being a sanctuary," Hanby went on. "Once within its walls, and outside worries may not introduce. The Gray house sanctuary—a place sacred to happiness! Happiness is not a vice, as they used to regard it when my grandparents were young. It's a sacred thing."

"Listen to the crane talking!" Celia scoffed.

"Crane?" he said.

"The Frankcrane bird," she laughed.

"I'd rather be that than a mocking bird," her father countered. "Wait till we get up there, mes enfants, and I'll undertake, old, decrepit, and pollyannish though I may be, to beat you at almost every sport there is—tennis, golf, swimming, and equitation."

"When were you on a horse?" Junior demanded.

Young Hanby had a wholesome respect for his father as an opponent at tennis or golf, but he had never imagined him as setting out to witch the world with noble horsemanship.

"Know, my son," replied Hanby, "that, like all great Americans, I was reared on a farm. Your grandfather's homestead bordered the beautiful stream after which I am named. If there are any of the old-timers left in that district, ask them what sort of a seat I had on horseback, and you will find that I rode in many a pony race ere I was Tim's age."

"The next thing to hear is that mother rode over the jumps at the Garden show," said Junior.

"Your mother rode discreetly on a side saddle years ago in Cleveland," said Dina; "and she is going to do it again."

"Junior," said Bill Pelham, "never think you can put over anything on those parents of yours. It can't be done. It is my turn to state that in my days of affluence I kept a saddle horse at Durland's."

With these kind but firm words the juvenile members of the Hanby clan relapsed into sulky silence, convinced against their will that, after all, they were not the absolute it.

"I wish my family was like this," remarked Leslie Barron. "We do nothing but quarrel at every meal. That's the main reason I'm going back to New Haven. I believe happiness is catching. I feel a different being here."

"You don't mean you feel actually happy here?" Celia asked.

"Absolutely," he answered.

"Family, friends, all!" Celia cried. "Look at a happy man, and then wonder what he looks like when he's sad!"

Les flushed a little.

"I feel happy inside," he said, defending himself.

"He smiled last Tuesday afternoon," Junior said. "I saw him. Sure he's happy. Let him alone, Celia."

"Shut up!" said Les. "She lets me alone too much as it is. Up there—"

"At Pine Plains," Celia told him, "Lona will be your constant companion."

Lona was the sixteen-year-old girl, now at boarding school.

"Not this time," Dina remarked. "Lona wants to go to Europe with three other girls and one of the teachers, and we're going to let her go."

"Look!" Celia cried. "His daily smile! And poor Lona simply worships him. He has driven her abroad, and now he laughs at the havoc he has wrought!"

When built, at the end of the Eighteenth century, the Gray house had been a square mansion of stone in twenty acres of meadow land inclosed with a five-foot wall. Succeeding tenants had enlarged it to its present size, and had acquired two hundred acres more of meadow and woodland. Ivy, Virginia creeper, wistaria, and trumpet vine fought for its walls giving it a softness of outline of which its builder could not have dreamed.

Very strongly built, its exterior was in perfect condition. War had passed it by, and time had treated it gently. Before the Hanbys moved into it, a careful renovation of the interior had given it a new and dignified beauty. The grounds had been molded to the new owner's desires. The Hanbys had moved from a duplex apartment into a satisfying home.

Dina breathed a sigh of content.

"I have always wanted just such a place as this," she said, squeezing her husband's hand.

"You never told me so," he replied reproachfully.

"I thought it was the unattainable," said Dina. "Let's go through every single room together. It's a home for our children, and Celia's children, and the children of Celia's children. It's adorable! I didn't know the hall was as big as this," she added, pausing in a lofty apartment thirty feet long and nearly as wide. "This wasn't according to the plans, surely?"

"I had it altered," Hanby told her. "Incidentally, I had to reduce our thirty rooms to twenty-eight. Isn't this a whale of a place for dances?" Eagerly he pointed out the great open fireplace. "The flue goes right up through the center of the house. That's a valuable feature. No heat is lost, as it would be if the shaft were on the outside."

Dina moved toward it. Over the green marble mantelpiece was something carved in old-English letters:

"THE SANCTUARY CLUB
"Rules

"No member shall do or say anything of which another member disapproves.

"No member shall disapprove of what any other member says or does."

"Gets 'em coming and going!" laughed Hanby. "Great idea, isn't it? Now for the billiard room. That's for Bill's special benefit. He can trim any amateur that holds a cue."

Dina looked from her own windows down on the tangled thatch of bush, bramble, and flower that was sacred to the birds.

"There's a scarlet tanager," she cried. "Look, Hil—the beautiful thing!"

From another window the glittering lake could be seen. As she looked, Celia, Les, and Junior, in bathing kit, raced toward it. Tim was elsewhere, bent on slaying rabbits. There was not a hint in the whole place of the tragedies which had happened within its bounds. Summer bragged on every tree.

The first dinner was one of those happy functions at which every one talks vivaciously and no one troubles to listen. Exclamation points ended every sentence. Les smiled openly and the house detective was off duty.

"My job's a sinecure," said Bill Pelham. "I really had no right to take it, after accepting the honor of being hoe man in chief to Dina."

"Your work begins tomorrow," Mrs. Hanby told him. "I want you to survey a place for a sunken rose garden."

"I'll set the alarm for daybreak," he said.

He was up very early next morning. Only Tim, rifle in hand, equaled him. Tim was after the early rabbit and the unheeding squirrel. Pelham had decided on a location for the rose garden when Celia stopped before him.

"'To labor that we love we rise betimes, and go to it with delight,'" he quoted.

Celia sat down on a grassy bank.

Sun Long Worshiped in Egypt and India

Since nothing was known of the rotation of the earth in the days of long ago, one can easily imagine how very real yet mysterious the movement of the sun must have seemed and how naturally it was an object of wonder and reverence. The sun's daily journey, its contest with the darkness and its final victory at the dawn of the new day are ideas which have led to endless stories.

Ra, the great sun god of the Egyptians, was thought to travel in a ship across the waters of the sky by day and return during the night through the kingdom of the dead. This god was always represented either as a hawk or as a man with a hawk's head in accordance with the belief that the hawk always flies toward the sun.

In India the sun was worshiped as the god Agni, who rode in a shining chariot drawn by blood-red horses. In ancient Hindu art this golden-haired god was portrayed as having a double face, seven tongues and seven arms. The number seven was held sacred by the Hindus and was thus employed to symbolize the numerous and varied duties performed by Agni.

Some Publicity

Publicity has indeed been developed into a fine art and the mortuary home advertisements now make everything sound so attractive that a man who likes to have things nice around him can hardly wait to go.—Ohio State Journal.

Hard to Set Limit to Height of Buildings

One-hundred-story skyscrapers will be as common in the city of the future as the twenty-story building is today, according to Dr. George A. Bole of Ohio State university. His prophecy is based partly on the development of a new kind of brick, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. It weighs only one-sixth as much as the usual varieties, but is said to have greater strength and fire-resisting qualities. Ordinary brick weighs 120 pounds to the cubic foot.

The improved form weighs but 20 pounds to the cubic foot. The new tile will defy a temperature of 3,250 degrees for 15 hours, according to reports. Because of its lightness and strength this material will permit higher buildings with more pyramiding, thinner walls and therefore less bulk, so that space will be saved for practical uses.

School for Commuters Something of Novelty

Carrying still further the new idea of education in the home, several educational institutions of southern California have combined to offer courses to suburbanites for study while traveling to and from their work. Fees are small, the pupil is self-taught, but may consult an instructor if he wishes, and the text-books are small and easy to carry.

More than twenty courses are listed by the school with more to follow if the demand warrants. Subjects which appeal especially to the suburban resident are included, such as home building, home gardening and real estate. Among the others are such varied choices as advertising, art appreciation, aviation, English investments, personal leadership, psychology, radio, salesmanship and stenography.

Natural Gas Waste

The problem of what to do with large quantities of natural gas which are going to waste is troubling the bureau of mines.

In many areas the gas cannot be transported for fuel and local conditions have prevented its being returned to the oil sands to form new oil. The result has been a tremendous waste. The bureau is seeking some means of converting it into products such as methanol, ammonia, formaldehyde and other such things which may be economically transported to markets.

Tomato Accident

Little Sally, age five, said to her mother: "Do you 'spose we will have any more of those 'tomato accidents'?" Unable to think of anything that resembled such a catastrophe, her mother asked what she meant. She said: "Why don't you 'member when that rain and wind knocked down all those houses and killed those people?"

Idea for Channel Tunnel

The latest idea for the English channel tunnel is that the tunnel would begin 11 miles from the sea at Monks Horton with an exit nine miles from the French coast. Trains would be pulled by electric engines, at 92 miles an hour.

Originated Dating System

The custom of dating events from the birth of Jesus Christ originated with a learned monk of Rome, Dionysius Exiguus, who compiled and computed the paschal cycle. Dionysius lived in the Fifth and Sixth centuries, dying about 555.

It May Be Urgent

When your Children Cry for It

Castoria is a comfort when Baby is fretful. No sooner taken than the little one is at ease. If restless, a few drops soon bring contentment. No harm done, for Castoria is a baby remedy, meant for babies. Perfectly safe to give the youngest infant; you have the doctors' word for that! It is a vegetable product and you could use it every day. But it's in an emergency that Castoria means most. Some night when constipation must be relieved—or colic pains—or other suffering. Never be without it; some mothers keep an extra bottle, unopened, to make sure there will always be Castoria in the house. It is effective for older children, too; read the book that comes with it.

Fletcher's CASTORIA

Alaska Garden of Eden?

A fossil apple, discovered beside a mastodon tusk, in the Tanana valley in Alaska, leads some archeologists with a sense of humor to look to the North country as the scene of man's origin, claiming the apple is the original used by Eve.

In talking theology to children, you have to be careful. They take everything literally.

DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The Doctor never did approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. For a free trial bottle, just write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. 1268 acres would make a big farm

AT Milford, Michigan, 1268 acres have been made—not into a farm—but into a Proving Ground for automobiles.

Long before your General Motors car is built, specimen models are sent to the Proving Ground. This fleet is tested in actual use. It has to meet every bad driving condition, from heart-breaking hills to slam-bang bumps.

But that isn't all. Other cars of American and European manufacture are bought and put through the same tests, so that General Motors always knows how its products compare with others.

The tests involve speed, power, endurance, braking, riding comfort, handling ease; fuel, oil and tire economy; body strength—every phase of car construction and performance.

When the specimen cars are finally able to meet every test, they are sent back to the factory. The car you buy is made exactly like them.

The next time you examine a General Motors car in your dealer's showroom, think of those 1268 acres. They would make a big farm. But they make a better promise of proved car value.

PRODUCTION; How many cows should be kept. This depends upon different factors, but chiefly upon the amount of money that needs to be made. The more money required, the more dairy cows should be kept, for good cows, properly cared for are money makers. A good cow will clear around $100 a year above the cost of feed at present prices of butterfat.

MANUFACTURING: Co-operative creameries have found that it pays to have the appearance of the creameries first-class both inside and out. The walls, ceiling and machinery are painted every year or two and a lawn with shrubbery and flower beds on the outside are common.

MARKETING: The road to market or to the consumer, taken by farm products before co-operative marketing, was generally from the farm to the local dealer; from the local dealer to the commission house; from there to the jobber and retail store, and then to the consumers. Now the big battle for economy is requiring a shorter road.

N. S. A. News

Plans are now complete for the annual Livestock Feeders' Day program to be held at the Northwest School and Experiment Station, Crookston, Monday, June 17. According to O. M. Kiser, Station Animal Husbandman, this will be one of the most interesting and instructive programs ever presented to a Red River Valley Feeders, Day audience.

Speakers from University Farm, St. Paul' include W. H. Peters, Chief of the Animal Husbandry division, who will discuss "Feeding Growing Pigs"; Dr. W. L. Boyd, Veterinary division, whose subject will be "Veternary Problems"; and Dr. W. E. Petersen, "Some Essentials for Success in Dairy Production". P. S. Jordon, Animal Husdandry at the West Central Station, Morris, will summarize the extensive lamb feedinf trials that have been carried on at that Station during the recint years.

One of the features of the day's program will be the inspection of the 32 grade Shorthorn baby beeves that have been fed on the following rations since last November: Lot 1. Ground barley, oilmeal, silage, alfalfa hay. Lot 2. Ground barley, oilmeal, alfalfa hay. Lot 3. Ground barley ⅓, Groun oats ⅓, oilmeal, silage, alfalfa hay. Lot 4. Ground oats, first half of feeding period, ground barley last half, oilmeal, silage, alfalfa hay.

Visitors will also appreciate the inspection of the station herds and flocks under the leabership of O. M. Kiser and D. H. LaVoi, who suggest that a little preliminary practice might be of value in connection with the popular weight guessing contest. The ladies are also invited to come with the men, and remain for the Annual Women's Camp, which opens the afternoon of Feeders' Day and continues through Thurs., June 10.

The heaviest hail storm ever witnessed at Duluth hit there about 4 p. m. Monday afternoon, doing damage to auto tops and windows. Hail stones weighing a pound and a half crashed car tops and dentod heavy fenders.

At Hibbing they had a cloud burst and hail storm Sunday evening. The greenhouse there was almost ruined.

At Detroit Lakes there was a twister that tried to move away part of the town and done damage to farms.

Members of several congregations of the Luthern Eree Church gave Rev. and Mrs. O. I. Raaum a susprise party Saturday evening. They were presented with a purse of $95.00 as a remembrance of their stay in Holt.

Rev. Raaum, who for the past nine years has served the Ringbo, East Valley, Bethlehem, Saterdal and Thorvik congregations has resigned his duties and will move out to the west coast about July 1.

Mr. Thomas and daughter Lucille visited with Mrs. Thomas at Warren on Monday.

Several people from Holt and vicinity took in the movies at Thief River Sunday evening.

Many of our local folks have already given the first half mile of the new highway a trial.

OLD FOLKS SAY DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Innocent Man Serves Seven Years in Prison

Detroit.—For seven years Bob Flaugher, with three citations for bravery in the World war, was a number in Jackson state prison because, officials now believe, he was unjustly convicted of bank robbery and sentenced to serve from 15 to 30 years.

Flaugher has been released on parole. His first days of freedom will be devoted to an effort to completely clear his name.

Flaugher says he had won a girl away from Fred Thompson. Later, in 1922, Thompson and Flaugher were arrested as members of the gang of four bandits that robbed a bank here. Thompson pleaded guilty and, to avenge the loss of his girl, implicated Flaugher, according to the latter.

Flaugher protested his innocence in vain. The girl now is married and has a family.

EERIE GHOST FOUND TO BE SIMPLY AIRY

Graveyard Mystery Is Only Freak of Radio.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Sounds of music and the quavering voice of a woman issuing from a mausoleum in Pine Hill cemetery at last has been exposed as those of—but it's a bit too early in the story to tell everything.

It all started a few weeks ago when a couple parked in a car near the cemetery heard a voice of eerie sweetness singing in the darkness.

The couple tarried no longer. The word went around that the ghost of a woman sang nightly in the cemetery.

Crowds collected along the roadside to listen to the voice that issued from the grave. Some, a trifle bolder than the rest, entered the graveyard to search for the source of the voice.

Coming upon the mausoleum, the bold ones heard a woman's voice and the notes of a pipe organ. Fear-stricken, they rushed back to tell the faint-hearted ones outside the fences of their discovery.

The crowds grew larger each night. Where no policemen were needed before to handle traffic on the roads near the cemetery, five were called upon to direct the great number of cars that drove by.

And then things reached a climax. A small group of investigators, including a reporter, decided to get at the bottom of things—ghost or no ghost. In they went, leaving a gaping crowd at the front gate.

"Hear that," one said, as they approached the mausoleum. Sure enough, a woman's voice came quaveringly from the tomb.

And then out of the darkness strolled a police officer.

"That's no ghost," he said. "Listen more closely and you'll find that's an outdoor speaker on a radio shop over there on Harlem road. The mausoleum catches the sound waves and when you stand close by you can hear the music and talking."

Thus the voice that was thought by many to be supernatural was later revealed as that of WGR, one of Buffalo's largest broadcasting stations.

Cheats Niagara's Swirl and Drowns in Bathtub

Buffalo, N. Y.—To escape death in the swirling currents of the Niagara river after his rowboat was upset by an ice floe, only to lose his life by drowning in his own bathtub a week later, was the fate of John H. Olst, twenty-two years old, of this city, whose body was found in a tub of water.

A defective gas heater was still burning in the bathroom. The coroner found that asphyxiation had first made the victim helpless and that when unconscious he had slipped under the water.

The circumstances of Olst's death recalled the fate of Bobby Leach, who went over the Horseshoe falls in a barrel, only to slip on an orange peel and suffer fatal injuries while traveling in Australia to tell of his exploits at Niagara falls.

Modern Fagin Trains Dog to Commit Theft

Watsonville, Calif.—Henry Andrews was arrested for sending his dog into an automobile accessory shop and directing the animal to pick up a small package which the dog brought to its master.

Theft of the package would have been completed successfully had not a policeman observed the dog enter the store while Andrews stood across the street.

The officer waited until the animal retreated with the package, which contained a motormeter, then nabbed Andrews.

Canwood, Sask.—A dairy cow, owned by Alfred Rasmussen, gave birth to five calves. All were dead when born, but were fully developed.

Fall River, Mass.—After leaping into a pond here, to commit suicide, Alexander Middell found the water too cold and swam back to shore.

SULTAN OF SULU NOW AIR MINDED

Potentate Has Plane Ride and Enjoys It.

Washington.—The sultan of Sulu, one of the few Filipino potentates still ruling under the protection of the United States, has become air minded.

According to advices reaching the War department, the sultan was taken on his first airplane ride recently in an army machine and liked it.

A few years ago tribesmen in the Philippines were overcome with fear when the "giant birds" of the army soared overhead. They could not understand the roaring machines driven by army airmen on cross-country flights across the island and often the planes spread fear and consternation.

Then the sultan of Sulu visited Manila. He was invited for a short flight. Capt. Donald Wilson piloted the sultan 5,000 feet above the city.

The potentate's retinue waited with quaking hearts until the sultan landed safely and grinning over his novel experience. In short excited sentences he explained the sensations of flying to his aides. They immediately besieged the army flyers to be taken up.

The pilots obligingly consented and others in the sultan's staff learned of the joys of soaring through boundless spaces far above the earth. News of their flights spread and the presidente of Bontoc expressed the desire for a short hop. Other members of the non-Christian tribes of the Philippine archipelago were flown and the news spread still further until the army air corps station in the islands was flooded with requests for flights in the "giant birds."

Teacher Urges "50-50 Dates" for Young Folks

Columbia, Mo.—Fifty-fifty dates for young men and women in college are advocated by Miss Nellie Lee Holt, instructor in religious education at Stephens college here.

Such dates are not only an economic necessity of the younger generation, Miss Holt believes, but are in keeping with the spirit of modern times.

Romantic Victorian love is dead, she points out, and in its place has grown a love based on "friendship, understanding and willingness on the part of the girl and boy to share responsibilities.

"Boys and girls should learn to share," said Miss Holt. "That is the reason I have become such a strong exponent of the 'Dutch' date. Generally speaking, girls receive as much allowance as boys. Then why shouldn't they pay for what they eat, for the show they attend and for the costly entertainment they enjoy?"

Girls of today, Miss Holt characterizes as "sound thinkers who do things in a wholesome and understanding way."

"Guardian Angel" Aids Travelers to Safety

Pilgrim Springs, Alaska.—One northwest Alaska trail has a strange guardian angel, according to a weird tale by travelers returning from a region over the Sawtooth mountains. In a valley across the range, they say, storms occur every day. The best dog teams are often bewildered. But when the visibility is exceptionally bad, so goes the story, drivers and their passengers are guided safely along the way by some well-outlined form, resembling a hooded monk, who is always accompanied by a huge dog. Old-timers claim the monk is an apparition or mirage encountered as the temperatures in various altitudes change, but it is difficult to convince those who have encountered the mystic trail blazer.

Many Important Crops Ruined by Insect Pest

Washington.—Man's battle to master insect pests that annually destroy one-tenth of the crops in the United States is an uphill struggle which may never be wholly won, Dr. A. L. Quaintance said. Damage will be much heavier this year unless the Mediterranean fly which has just appeared in Florida is checked.

Telling of the effects of science to reduce the damage by the insect scourge, Doctor Quaintance said many important crops could not be grown without the entomologists.

Without the checks now provided by science, insects would multiply so rapidly the world would soon be completely overrun, he said. Insects have several million descendants in the course of a year.

Health Chief Urges Planes for Funerals

San Francisco.—Airplane funerals were advocated here recently by Dr. William C. Hassler, city health officer, as a means of solving the avowed problem of shrinking space for burial grounds. He said San Francisco's available acreage will be exhausted in another 25 years and predicted that the last resort is the Sierra ranges or the ocean.

Either can be reached readily by airplane, he said, in a few hours from any part of California.

SNAKE BITE FATAL TO REPTILE EXPERT

Serum Injections Fail to Halt Deadly Poison.

New York.—For more than 30 years Charles E. Snyder, former head keeper of mammals and reptiles at the New York zoological garden in Bronx park, befriended snakes.

He fed them, made pets of some, and pointed to their comparative harmlessness and utility in public lectures.

His interest in reptiles led the veteran keeper on periodic trips to capture more of them. One morning, in the Ramapo mountains, one of them struck for the liberty of its mate, which was almost in Snyder's grasp. The former keeper died, a victim of rattlesnake poison which anti-venom serum failed to halt.

Serum Rushed to Hospital.

Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of mammals and reptiles at the Bronx zoo, had rushed serum to him at the Good Samaritan hospital in Suffern, N. Y.

Snyder, who was fifty-seven, died about 24 hours after the two poison fangs had sunk into the back of his left hand. It took him five hours to reach the hospital, a delay which was held responsible for his death, although even after such a lapse of time the failure of the serum to counteract the poison was considered unusual.

There was no trepidation in Snyder's mind as he struck into the Ramapo woods, accompanied by Paul Snyder, a friend and snake enthusiast.

They were on Little Tor mountain, pursuing separate trails 100 yards apart, when Snyder saw a rattler between four and five feet long gliding over a rock ledge near his feet.

As the snake squirmed into a crevasse Snyder ducked to catch its tail so that he might swing it out with a quick jerk into the open and pin it with a forked stick he was carrying.

Sinks Fangs in Hand.

As he stooped, another snake, apparently the mate of the first reptile, lunged from a hiding place in the grass. It sank its fangs into the hand. Snyder shrank back calling to his friend, and the reptiles took to cover.

With his companion at his side, Snyder sucked the two wounds, sought to squeeze out the poison and used a handkerchief as a tourniquet about his arm to shut off the circulation. Hospital and serum treatment followed, but to no avail.

Fish Worm Ranching Is New Western Industry

Los Angeles, Calif.—The Flapper Fish Worm ranch is located in the small town of Bishop at the eastern base of the Sierra Nevadas in southern California, the proprietor of which, says John L. Von Blon, writing in "Field and Stream," is a sunny-haired high school student of seventeen.

Working on the sagacious principle, as stated by herself—"any poor fish from the common human sucker to the golden aristocrats of the trout family will fall for a flapper"—she has developed an industry which turned out 20,000 worms for the opening-day sales.

"Ten acres is the whole extent of the ranch. Through it all the earthworms may burrow but the plot actually devoted to them comprises but 2,000 square feet. It is a patch of straw, hay, corn fodder and other decomposed materials about a foot in depth, with a pit four feet square in the center, where is sunk a bottomless box in which the breeding processes are carried on. As a protection against poultry, shrews, moles and other creatures of which the worms are natural prey and food, there is a screen cover.

"This nest is kept damp. Sour milk, cheese and bread crumbs, cornmeal, eggs and all sorts of table scraps are thrown into the box. The continuous propagating results are astonishing.

"Tiny worms emerge by millions from the cocoons in which the eggs have been laid. Soon they begin to make their blind ways to the outer edges—blind, because they have no eyes, but are guided by primitive, light-detecting organs. In due course they are dug up from the mulch and placed where they can be packed for market on short notice."

Reform School Lads Needn't Learn to Sew

Sacramento, Calif.—Sewing was ordered removed from the list of subjects taught incorrigible youths at the Preston reform school at Ione by E. E. Jensen, state director of institutions.

All the sewing equipment is to be transferred from the reformatory to the woman's ward at San Quentin prison, where, Jensen believes, it will be put to better use.

"The boys never did take to sewing," remarked the director, "they don't see any future in it for them."

Narcotic Addicts Turn to Use of Chloroform

Butte, Mont.—Increased obstacles placed in the paths of drug addicts have turned many narcotic users to chloroform, a veteran Butte physician declared. It is the practice in many Butte homes, he said, to use a few drops of chloroform to ease excitement and quiet nerves after a party.

GIRL, 18, MAY HAVE BEAU, COURT RULES

Great Modern Question Is Settled by Judge.

New York.—The weighty legal opinion involved that great modern question:

Might a girl of eighteen have a beau—or mightn't she?

All girlhood's future was at stake as pretty Josephine Pupica of Yonkers faced the bar of justice in Yonkers before Judge C. W. Boote.

Josephine had been haled to court by her mother for running away to a relative's home because she would not live up to the parent's rules of never associating with boys, handing over all her weekly wages, never staying out later than 10 p. m. and never visiting girls at night.

The girl's lips quivered and she told the stern court:

"I had to run away, your honor. Listen to those rules."

So the judge listened and then he pondered. It may be that he thought of the time when he used to have an occasional date with a pretty brunette like Josephine.

"I will lay down some new rules," he declared.

"You may remain out later than 10 o'clock. Say 11 or thereabouts.

"You may keep some of your earnings for yourself and also you may visit other girls at night.

"You may select your own clothes."

"But," exclaimed the defendant, "er, how about a boy fr—"

The court interposed, a twinkle in his eye.

"Oh, yes," he remarked. "You may accept the attentions of a respectable young man."

Josephine smiled. Girlhood had been freed from bondage!

Locate Iron Messenger of Space in Africa

Bloemfontein, South Africa.—Again chance has led to the discovery of one of those mysterious messengers that bear evidence that space is not empty. This time the news comes from the far northeastern corner of southwest Africa.

In the Grootfontein district a meteor lies in a tomb of limestone, a great, massive block of iron. There is nothing dramatic in its appearance—a lone block of metal in the veldt, but if one tries to visualize its arrival one finds a spectacle surpassed by few.

A black mass of iron, cruising through space, invisible to all. Suddenly, as it enters the earth's atmosphere, its great speed and the excessive friction set a blaze in a fraction of a second. An enormous fireball, white hot, it approaches the ground with an angry hiss. A terrific roar as it crashes through layers of limestone, a shower of sparks, sand, rocks and metals, a cloud of dust—and all is quiet.

A deep pit was excavated all around it to show the full extent of its huge mass. The whole appearance is remarkable—an almost flat, level upper surface 9 by 10 feet in size, with almost vertical sides about four to five feet deep. It is estimated that it weighs not less than 50 tons.

One specimen shown to the writer was a piece that had needed but the sawing through of a surface of two square inches, and that had required fully two hours of hard work.

11,500,000 Wed in India Under Age of Fifteen

London.—The extent of child marriage in India was shown recently by official figures which reveal that there are 8,500,000 wives and 3,000,000 husbands under fifteen years of age.

The figures are contained in a new statistical abstract for India, which the secretary of state for India has just distributed to the members of parliament.

According to these statistics, there are 110,684 husbands and 218,463 wives under five years of age, while 575,405 husbands and 2,016,687 wives are between the ages of five and ten. The total jumps still higher between the ages of ten and fifteen, with 2,334,066 husbands and 6,330,267 wives. Between fifteen and twenty there are about 4,000,000 husbands and 9,000,000 wives.

The figures also show that about 400,000 Indian girls are widows before the age of fifteen. Of these, 15,139 are baby widows under five years of age, 102,293 between five and ten, and 279,124 between ten and fifteen.

To Show Auto Speed

Boston, Mass.—Automobiles in Massachusetts would be equipped with varicolored lights to show the speed at which the machine was traveling under the bill being considered by the state legislature.

Jail Explorer When He Works Overtime

New Orleans, La.—The landlady rented a room to Edward White, fifty-three, who said he was an "explorer." In the middle of the night she heard the floor creak, and saw her new roomer in her room with a flashlight.

"What are you doing?" she asked.

"Exploring. That is, er—er—I am looking for matches."

White was taken to the city jail.

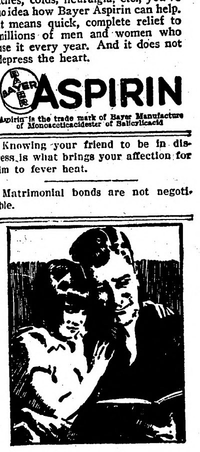
A DOZEN different things may cause a headache, but there's just one thing you need ever do to get relief. Bayer Aspirin is an absolute antidote for such pain. Keep it at the office. Have it handy in the home. Those subject to frequent or sudden headaches should carry Bayer Aspirin in the pocket-tin. Until you have used it for headaches, colds, neuralgia, etc., you've no idea how Bayer Aspirin can help. It means quick, complete relief to millions of men and women who use it every year. And it does not depress the heart.

BAYER ASPIRIN

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

Knowing your friend to be in distress is what brings your affection for him to fever heat.

Matrimonial bonds are not negotiable.



Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

— By —

Wyndham Martyn

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains. Miss Selenos, a former tenant, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, explains to Pelham, that a dangerous pond near the house, in which several children have been drowned, has since been filled in, but he urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Hanby and Junior learn that the caretaker was known to the police as "Red Chapin" and had a bad record. Hanby considers asking Leslie Barron, long an admirer of Celia, to join the house party. Mrs. Hanby declares she likes the house. Pelham becomes a member of the household, with the official title of "house detective." Over the telephone Hanby is warned by a woman not to subject his family to the dangers of the Gray house. Leslie Barron arrives, making four able-bodied members of the Hanby household. A phone call from a man who declares he is an old acquaintance of Hanby's and interested in ornithology, but whom Hanby cannot identify, urges him to preserve a part of the grounds as a bird sanctuary. The idea appeals to Hanby and he makes the promise. The Hanbys take possession of the Gray house.

"Bill," she said, "you must be fond of the Hanby clan to do this. Poor old Bill!" she murmured softly.

"Why poor?" he demanded.

"I know," she said wisely. "You can't fool me."

"I'm not poor," he retorted. "I'm rich. I have a family without the labor of supporting it. I'm much more sensible than you imagine. I adore your mother. She married the man she loved. Three things might have happened to me—I might have married another woman, and made her unhappy; I might have become one of those sour, cynical old devils who poison this earth; I might have drunk myself to death. I thought of doing all three at various times. I did try drinking for a year, but Dina made me feel like a d—d coward. I am now going to use some of your modern terms. I sublimated my love into affection for everything that was dear to your mother. That's why I bear your superior airs with cheerfulness. That's why I talk baseball scores with Tim."

"You love baseball," said Celia.

"I love you," retorted Pelham.

"About four years ago—the summer we had a house at Allenhurst—I cherished a hopeless passion for you," Celia confided. "It began when you used to do those fancy back dives at the Allenhurst pool, and was fanned to fury when you rescued that man from the surf. Did you ever suspect it?"

"Not a bit," he said. "Mine is an open, modest nature, shrinking and simple. You interest me strangely, Celia. Why did you drop me?"

"I went back to school," she said, "and there was an adorable being who taught us music. I wanted to practice Beethoven ten hours a day."

"Why did you drop him?"

"He was sent away for kissing a teacher—or, rather, for being caught kissing a teacher. After that Les rather amused me. I was then an emotionally old woman of seventeen."

"Are you really fond of Les?" asked Pelham.

"I wish I knew!"

"I thought one always knew."

"Not in these times," said Celia. "One meets so many boys. Les is on probation this summer. What about a swim before breakfast? There's a gorgeous high dive into twenty feet of water. I want to beat Junior at back diving. Please, Bill, give me a lesson!"

"You'll have to make it right with Dina," he said. "I'm hoe man in chief, and I want to keep my job."

"Dina and dad will be there before you, if you don't make haste."

"What? Taking advantage of me like that? I'll be in my bathing suit before you are!"

The two raced toward the house.

The swimming party was not ready for breakfast until half past nine. The meal was hardly begun when a package of mail was brought in.

"I'm going to send a postboy on horseback for it, when things are in running order," Hanby commented, sorting it out. "Tradesmen's invitations, mainly. Here's one from a Poughkeepsie undertaker, with most attractive illustrations of the latest in caskets."

Next he held up a large square envelope, lavender-colored, and adorned with a black coat of arms.

"Budleigh Salterton," he read. "I didn't tell you, Dina, that I wrote to Mr. Seymour weeks ago, asking if he had a chauffeur like the one Smucker described." Hanby frowned a little. "It's odd that his reply should come on our first breakfast here!"

"What does he say?" Dina asked.

Hanby slit the envelope.

"In the center is a crest," he commented. "Underneath is a simple English address. Listen! 'Seymour Manor, Bovey-Tracey, Ottery St. Mary, Budleigh Salterton, Devonshire.' That makes the Gray house fade into nothing! On the top left hand corner it says, 'Telegraph, Otterton.' On the top right-hand corner it says, 'Great Western station, four miles.'"

This was the missive that Hanby read aloud:

"HILTON HANBY, ESQ.,

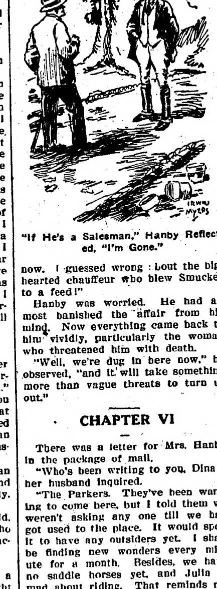
"My Dear Sir:

"Owing to a fishing trip in Norway my answer to your letter has been unavoidably delayed.

"During my stay in your country my chauffeur was the one now in my service, Richard Betterton. He is five feet nine in height, weighs one hundred and forty pounds, is dark, pale of face, with an aquiline nose—in fact, as you see, in every respect differing from the impostor who claimed to have held this position.

"I am, my dear sir,
"Faithfully yours,
"STANFORD SEYMOUR."

"I resign as hoe man," Bill Pelham said. "I am now the house detective. I report for work here and now. I guessed wrong about the big-hearted chauffeur who blew Smucker to a feed!"



"If He's a Salesman," Hanby Reflected, "I'm Gone."

Hanby was worried. He had almost banished the affair from his mind. Now everything came back to him vividly, particularly the woman who threatened him with death.

"Well, we're dug in here now," he observed, "and it will take something more than vague threats to turn us out."

CHAPTER VI

There was a letter for Mrs. Hanby in the package of mail.

"Who's been writing to you, Dina?" her husband inquired.

"The Parkers. They've been wanting to come here, but I told them we weren't asking any one till we had got used to the place. It would spoil it to have any outsiders yet. I shall be finding new wonders every minute for a month. Besides, we have no saddle horses yet, and Julia is mad about riding. That reminds me that I must order a habit and a side saddle."

Hanby was still thinking of the mysterious warnings.

"It's funny," he remarked presently, "that any one should take the trouble to feed Smucker for nothing. There must be something behind it."

"Junior and I will find out," said Bill. "It's beneath the dignity of the lord of the manor to sleuth."

"The first letter I opened," continued Hanby, pursuing his train of thought, "was from an undertaker noted for the simplicity and dignity of his funerals. He includes flowers. That's thoughtful! The next was from Seymour. Perhaps I shall now be called to the telephone to talk with another unknown conversationalist."

"My motto is eternal vigilance," said Pelham. "Carry on your business as usual—your faithful hawkshaw slumbers not nor sleeps. I'll tell you what I will do, Hil," he suggested briskly. "I'll beat you three sets out of four whenever you are ready. I've been reading a book on tennis tactics, and after committing it to memory I've burned it, so you can't read it. You haven't a chance!"

Hanby's mood was more cheerful.

"I wrote that book," he declared. "Want to bet?"

"Go and get into flannels," Pelham told him. "Hil's worried," he added, to Dina, when Hanby had left the room.

"I never saw him so before. Try and make him laugh at it, Bill."

Hanby's mood of depression passed very quickly. New daily interests so crowded one upon the other that there was no room for gloom or introspection.

The Parkers did not come. Parker's stomach, after many unheeded warnings, had finally rebelled against its owner's habit of taking three meat meals a day. Julia Parker wrote that her husband was about to be operated upon.

One day, walking down the drive, Hanby met a small, florid, neatly dressed man approaching the house—the sort of man to inspire confidence even among the most suspicious.

"If he's a salesman," Hanby reflected, "I'm gone. A man like that could sell me anything!"

The stranger bowed politely.

"Mr. Hanby, I believe?"

"Yes," replied Hanby, wondering what it was he was about to buy.

"My name is Appleton—Frederick Appleton. You are probably unaware of my existence."

"On the contrary, you are expected when the bass season opens. You were kind enough to give my friend Mr. Pelham some information about this house."

"As I was in the neighborhood, I took the liberty of coming to see your improvements. I have always been much interested in the Gray house."

"I shall be glad to show you over it and ask your advice. I find every day that there are a lot of things about country estates that they don't teach boys on farms—these improvements, for instance."

Mr. Appleton's manner was almost eager.

"May I ask what they are?"

"A big swimming pool between the tennis courts and the house, a new garage for six cars, a Japanese tea house, and a dozen smaller jobs."

Nothing pleases the new owner more than the opportunity to exhibit his property. Mr. Appleton was bored by nothing. He begged to be shown everything. He had no criticisms. He congratulated Hilton Hanby warmly.

"You will make this," he declared, "one of the stately homes of America. You have a genius for this sort of thing."

Only in one matter was his view opposed to that of the owner. He thought that the ground given over to the bird sanctuary would do admirably for ornamental glass houses.

"My wife and I wouldn't think of such a thing," Hanby asserted firmly. "We are for the conservation of bird life. You may not know it, but our rarer species of songsters are in serious danger of extermination. That bird sanctuary is a hobby of ours, and it will not be disturbed while we live."

Mr. Appleton wrung his host's hand. Hanby was surprised at the emotion written on this cheery, unlined face.

"It does you credit, sir," he exclaimed. "In my ignorance I have given no thought to such matters. It was criminal negligence. I did not know."

"As a matter of fact," Hanby confessed, "I was just as heedless as you until a month ago. Mr. Bayliss, whom I met at the Metropolitan club, told me all about it. I rather think he is president of the Ornithological society."

"The name seems familiar," said Appleton. "One of our national authorities, if I mistake not. I think I have read a notice of one of his books on the subject."

Appleton was sightseeing until luncheon. Hanby would not let him refuse to stay to the meal, despite the fact that he had a neat package of sandwiches and fruit.

The interior of the house charmed him greatly. He was filled with admiration at the rules of the Sanctuary club. The critical family circle approved of him.

Odd Sounds Gave Rise to Belief in Demons

South America has a moaning mountain. At certain seasons a deep note booms from Mount El Bromador in the Chilean Andes. In former days the natives listened to it with superstitious fear, while even a white man, hearing it for the first time, is startled at the mountain's "power." Another curious mountain exists in Nevada, though this one usually gives out a note resembling at first the jingling of bells and ending with a deep organ-like swell. In both cases the sounds are due to a peculiar formation of the earth, which under certain conditions of weather allows the separate particles to rub against each other and so produce uncanny effects.

Elgg island, off the Scottish coast, has its "singing sands," where at times each grain rubs against its neighbor, the whole making a singing noise. Similar sands are found in China. In England is a mountain which howls in such a way that formerly it was supposed to be the haunt of demons. This is Cross fell, in Westmoreland, where local conditions produce a gale with several peculiarities, including an awe-inspiring scream that at times can be heard for miles.

Resented Uncalled-for Slam at Dead Brother

Ralph W. Smith of the bureau of standards is conducting for the government a nation-wide investigation of taximeters, and he said in Washington the other day:

"This investigation doesn't mean that taxicabs, like taxidermists, skin you, and the men who take offense at us fail to understand. In fact, they're like Smith.

"A man came back to the home town after thirty years in New York and, of course, he inquired affectionately about this old friend and that.

"'And Bill Smith?' he said. 'How is dear old Bill Smith getting along?'

"'Bill,' said John Smith, a brother—'Bill is dead.'

"'What? Bill dead?' sighed the visitor. 'Ah, me, peace to his ashes.'

"'How dare you?' said John Smith hotly. 'Bill was as good a chap as ever breathed.'"

Doing the Impossible

Viscount Reading's speech in behalf of the Kellogg anti-war pact, which electrified the house of lords, led an editor to say:

"Lord Reading did the impossible. He electrified the upper house. I remember a remark he once made when he was over here as ambassador during the war.

"'Addressing the house of lords is the most difficult thing in the world,' he said. 'It's like addressing tombstones by winter moonlight.'"

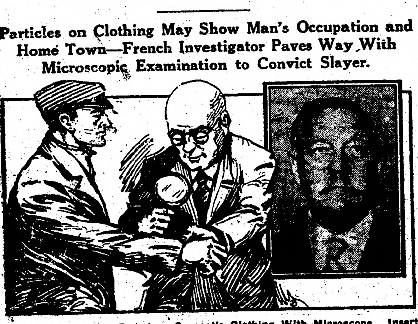
SCIENCE SHOWS SLEUTHS OF FUTURE MAY OUTDO EVEN SHERLOCK HOLMES

Particles on Clothing May Show Man's Occupation and Home Town—French Investigator Paves Way With Microscopic Examination to Convict Slayer.



The Modern Sleuth Examines Suspect's Clothing With Microscope. Insert Shows Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, Creator of Sherlock Holmes.

WHEN Sherlock Holmes looked at a man's shoes and saw red on them, the great detective of fiction could tell instantly the locality from which the man came.

Detectives of the future will be able to go Holmes one better, if one may judge from some of the scientific studies now being made upon dust particles.

Physicians have long known that dust flying in the air may cause certain ailments and city officials have seen to it that children's health on city playgrounds is protected against dust by certain dust-laying chemicals, such as calcium chloride.

Researches show that a man's occupation may be determined from the dust particles found on his clothing and, further, in many cases, police may learn the name of the city in which he has his home.

The matter seems simple enough, too. A steel worker will have fine particles of steel clinging to his clothing, no matter how often he may brush them. Such particles might be removed by brooms, vacuum cleaners or even magnets, but a sufficient number remains for determination by a microscope.

So likewise might other occupations be determined: a school teacher from chalk dust; a jeweler from gold and silver particles; a druggist from chemical specks; a lumberman from minute fragments of wood, and so through most of the scale.

In the same way a man's city may be determined by analysis of dust found in his clothing. If it contains much carbon or coal, he probably comes from Scranton; if copper, from Butte, Montana; if bits of minute coral, from St. Augustine, Florida, whose streets are paved with coral, and similarly down the list.

No one pretends that the list at this time is accurate. But some patient investigators in the future may compile a list of occupations, as well as of cities, with all the precision that the advance of science may bring to it and then the job of the detectives promises to be easier.

A few years ago a French scientist was able to help the police to convict a man suspected of a certain murder in a quarry. The suspect said he had been sleeping in the fields. Microscopic examination of the man's clothing revealed the presence of quarry stone traces. The man then confessed

Second Annual Creamery Picnic

The second annual picnic of Marshall County dairymen, sponsored by the creamery associations of Argyle, Alvarado, Alma, Gatzke, Holt, Middle River, Newfolden, Viking and Warren will be held at the beautiful and spacious old mill site in the town of Foldahl on Sunday, June 30th. Let us make this a grand social, recreational and educational event. The committees in charge have planned the following program. 12:00 to 1:30 picnic luncheon. Coffee, sugar and cream will be furnished free at this time. Music will then be furnished by the Warren Juvenili Band and the creamery operators will play a five inning game of kitten ball. The platform program will commence at 2:15 p. m. and will include an invocation by Rev. J. H. Pierce of Radium, an address by Rev. Dr. Grays of Thief River Falls, a declamation, "So Was I", by Loraine Holmstrom winner of Class A in the county contest, a song by Adeline Dahl of West Valley, an address by Mr. H. E. Meyer, manager of the Butter Sales Department of Land O. Lakes Creameries, Inc., "America" by the audience and music again by the Warren band. A short program of rocreational sports will follow, including another kitten ball game between the married creamery operators and dairymen and the single operators and dairymen and a horseshoe-pitching tournament played by quartets from the nine sponsoring associations. Refreshments will be sold at a number of stands and every provision will be made for the comfort and enjoyment of the huge gathering. No admission will be charged.

Send us the news of your community.

The road building outfits are going right along with the construction of the new highway north of town. The dredges are now up on the Hans Fosholm farm.

LESSON 66

PRODUCTION: Many a farm has been lost because the means of making the necessary income was not figured out. How much must the sales amount to a year to meet the expenses on a 160-acre farm with a $3,000.00 mortgage (average farm family in charge)? How much are the living expenses? The operating expenses, seed, feed, supplies, repairs, taxes, interest and payment on loan? The total of these expenses is the necessary income or what the total farm sales should be.

MANUFACTURING: Whitewash in the barn where milk is produced is like paint in the creamery where butter is made—both improve sanitary conditions. The barn should be whitewashed at the earliest opportunity after the cows are on pasture.

MARKETING: The farmer is not the only one who seeks to change the system of marketing butter and other farm products. The chain stores where one man or company may control several hundred stores have been eliminating commission houses and jobbers. They are going out as near the source of production to buy as they can.

Community Picnic At Red Lake Narrows

Two speeches of timely interest to this community are announced by Dr. J. T. Bowers, program chairman, for the annual Red Lake Summer Resort association picnic at the Red Lake Narrows Sunday, June 23. P. H. McGarry, director of the Ten Thousand Lakes association, will speak on "The Red Lakes as a Summer Playground," and C. A. Forges of the state highway department will speak on "Minnesota's Good Roads Program."

Mr. McGarry is proprietor of a large summer resort at Walker, and has been a leader in the development of Norhern Minnesota as a tourist playground.

According to plans, the tour will leave this city at 7 o'clock Sunday morning followed by a service car. Between 11:30 and 12:30 the company will have a picnic dinner on the grounds. Lunches will be served at the community store for those who do not care to bring their own. Free coffee will be served by the resort association. The Thief River Falls Juvenile Band of thirty pieces will play during the noon hour.

At 12:45, Olaf Neset, president of the association, will give the address of welcome. Supt. Mark Burns of the Red Lake Agency will respond for the Indians, who own the land upon which the resort is situated. At 1:45 a group of Indians will entertain with a ceremonial dance. Mr. Forges will speak at 1:15, and Mr. McGarry at 2:15.

From 3:15 to 5:15 there will be water sports of various kinds, with suitable prizes, Math Barzen, sports chairman says. The program includes swimming races, water basebell, tug-of-war, log rolling contest, motor boat races and launch rides. The bathing beach here is one of the finest in the country, and it is expected that a great many will bring their swimming suits. Ambitious anglers will also have an opportunity to try their skill with rod and line.

Roads will be patrolled all the way shortly before the picnic, Dr. Bowers says. County highway engineers of Pennington, Marshall and Beltrami counties have volunteered to instruct their patrols to go over the entire road in order to have it in the best of condition.

Postors announcing the picnic are being distributed in every town in northwestern Minnesota, and a delegation from a large number of communities is expected to join in the outing.

Selling Minnesota

We desire to call attention to the financial needs of a statewide organization which merits and should nave the support of this community. The Ten Thousand Lakes-Greater Minniesota Association has undertaken the work of selling Minnesota to the world, both as a great agricultural state and summer playground. Through its efforts the tourist business has increased to an extent where it now brings $90,000,000 in new money to the state annually. Its work in behalf of agriculture has just begun, but already the result is evident. The association needs money to advertise and carry on the work. Use the special coupon printed elsewhere in this issue and send in what you can spare.

Card of Thanks

I wish to thank my many friends for the gifts, letters and flowers sent me during my stay at the Warren hospital. Especially do I thank Mrs. Sam Lorenston, Mrs. H. Wahlin, Mrs. H. Peterson and the Holt W. C. T. U. for thier flowers.

Mrs. F. H. Thomas.

What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains. Miss Selenos, a former tenant, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Hanby considers asking Leslie Barron, long an admirer of Celia, to join the house party. Mrs. Hanby declares she likes the house. Pelham becomes a member of the household. Leslie Barron arrives making four able-bodied members of the Hanby household. A phone call from a man who declares he is an old acquaintance of Hanby's and interested in ornithology, but whom Hanby cannot identify, urges him to preserve a part of the grounds as a bird sanctuary. The idea appeals to Hanby and he makes the promise. The Hanbys take possession of the Gray house. A stranger introducing himself as Frederick Appleton, calls at the Gray house and is welcomed because of his interest in bird life.

After luncheon Hanby admitted that the workmen were not accomplishing what the contractor had promised.

"Since you bring up the subject," said Mr. Appleton, "may I point out the probable causes?"

He spoke with much assurance on work and workmen, on the cost of material, and on the manner in which grafting foremen could deceive even the intelligent but amateur scrutiny of a man like Mr. Hanby.

"I wish you were out of a position," Mr. Hanby said, when Appleton finished.

"May I ask why?"

"I'd ask you to be my agent here. Besides these improvements, I have three tenant farmers who want repairs for barns and houses, and I'm bound to say they seem most unreasonable. I came here to play, not to work."

Appleton smiled. He had the look of one who delights to bring good news.

"Things generally turn out for the best," he observed. "I left the employ of Douglas & Smith last week. Strictly speaking, I could not afford to do so; but, after almost thirty-five years, to have to take orders from one with not one-third of that service was too bitter. I am not a proud man, Mr. Hanby, but I resigned. This is a business trip. Mr. Clarke, of Amenia, is considering alterations, and I hoped he might select me to supervise them."

"It's Clarke's loss," said Hanby. "I need you more than he does."

Mrs. Hanby was very glad at the news.

"Where will you stay?" she asked. "There is no accommodation near."

"Perhaps you have a room over the garages," he suggested timidly. "I am accustomed to look after myself."

"All the rooms are occupied. Why not stay with us until something suitable turns up? This is an enormous house, as you know."

Appleton was made specially welcome because his coming exempted each member of the household from some unaccustomed and unwelcome task. Junior had been deputed to see that the workmen finished the swimming pool on time. Celia's arithmetic was strained at estimating the cost of lumber. These labors Mr. Appleton took over.

The Hanbys liked him for his simplicity. He told them about his wife, whom he adored—an invalid lady unable to leave New York because of some special treatment for rheumatism that she was taking.

The foreman of masons resigned directly he found a man over him whom he could not fool. Appleton's mild appearance deceived him. It was one of his grounds of grievance when he sought an interview with Mr. Hanby.

"You say Mr. Appleton swore at you 'something terrible'?" Hanby scoffed. "Don't lie about it! Mr. Appleton couldn't do a thing like that. But I'm liable to turn rough any time an inefficient loafer tries to put up a fool story like that. Get out!"

"Had the audacity," Hanby told his wife, "to say that old Appleton called him foul names."

They laughed together at the absurdity of it.

"I lost my temper, I admit," confessed Appleton, at lunch. "I explained that labor owed something to the capital without which it could not exist."

"You talked over his head," Hanby said. "I thought that must be it."

The old man bothered them very little. He did not intrude. It was his nightly habit to walk about the grounds, pulling at the single cigar he allowed himself, and then to retire. He insisted on making his own bed and keeping his room in order. The servants, after the untidy ways of Junior and Les, found him no trouble at all.

"He saves me twice his salary every week," Hanby declared, "and he allows me to be a gentleman of leisure again."

"Appleton is all right," said Junior, thinking of the overseer's job that had been his. "We all love him except Les."

"What have you against him?" Bill Pelham demanded. "Report all suspicious things to the house detective."

Les did not welcome the looks that were cast upon him.

"Nothing," he admitted. "I can't like every one, can I?"

"Les," demanded Celia, "tell me at once—what is it?"

"He reminds me of my Uncle Russell, if you must know. He has the same highly polished face. I don't like my uncle, and it's the association of ideas, I suppose."

"Les," Celia said severely, "I don't believe that's the real reason."

There was no doubt about Leslie's smile. He was a singularly good-looking lad when he smiled, with small, white, even teeth, and a mouth cut almost too well for a man.

"That's all you are going to get from me," he said.

"Leave it to the house detective," Pelham interrupted. "I'll give Les the third degree and report to you tomorrow."

"Les is full of prejudices," Celia answered. "Don't worry, Bill. He has a young and uninteresting soul. I like men of your age." She turned to her mother. "I confessed to Bill my hopeless passion for him at Allenhurst, but he wasn't even flattered."

"You were only fourteen. Try him now."

"Darling Bill," said Celia seductively, "I love you, and I shall have a hundred thousand dollars on my wedding day. Will you marry me just to spite Les?"

"If he'll be my best man. Will you, Les?"

"I'll be d—d first!" cried Les hotly.

"You see he's really fond of me," Celia announced. "Look at the fire in his eyes and the passion in his voice. If ever I marry him, he'll beat me."

"Sometimes I'd like to," Les admitted.

"Mr. Appleton," said Celia, "is a charming old gentleman with manners that Les would do well to copy."

"Charming?" Les cried. "Can any one show me how to gnash my teeth?"

"Hush!" warned Hanby. "Here he is."

Luncheon was the only meal at which he appeared.

"Afraid you were not coming," Hanby said cordially.

"I have just paid off the workmen on the swimming pool," he said. "The Japanese tea house on the tennis lawn will be done tomorrow."

"You certainly make them work," said Hanby. "I wonder how you do it!"

"I reward the efficient and discharge those who shirk their duty. It was my system all the years I was in the employ of Douglas & Smith."

"Mr. Appleton!" Celia called. The old man turned his smiling face to her. "I've made a very important discovery about the bird sanctuary."

"What?" he said, so quickly that they could see the news disturbed him.

"I was wandering past it last night after dinner."

"Unwise," said Appleton. "Mosquitoes. Be advised to keep away. So you made a discovery?"

"Yes—I saw a great black snake at least seven feet long."

"Is that all? My dear Miss Celia, you saw one of the most valuable of the ophidians. The black snake is a rat eater, a mouse hunter, worth his weight in gold to your honored parents in the protection of the song birds. Rats are the natural enemies of the birds. The black snakes are the natural enemies of rats." Instinct guided Mr. Appleton's eyes to Tim, who was at that moment meditating a snake hunt. "Tim will be wise not to kill any but venomous snakes, such as the copperhead."

"Tim is not going near the bird sanctuary," his mother declared.

After luncheon Appleton sought out Mr. Hanby.

"By the end of the week I shall have completed all the alterations," he said. "I have seen to the farm repairs, and have reduced your account keeping to a card index system well within the comprehension of your son."

"That doesn't mean you are leaving us, I hope?"

"Alas, yes. My poor wife has had a turn for the worse, and my duty is at her side. Darby and Joan, you know, Mr. Hanby—Darby and Joan!"

"I shall have to get some one to take your place."

"That should not be necessary," said Mr. Appleton. "Oh, dear me, no! You will have no more trouble with workmen."

"I'll see Douglas about it," said Hanby. "I'm going into town in a few days."

"I doubt if Mr. Douglas knows of any one. Everything in that line was left to me. In his desire to be courteous to you he might recommend some wholly unsuitable person."

Hanby sensed the dislike the former employee felt for the man who had failed to appreciate him, but this did not sway the new owner in the least. Nor did Appleton's offer to send a man meet with approval. Douglas was one of the biggest men of his calling in New York, and Hanby maintained that he would not recommend any but an expert.

When Appleton had gone, Bill Pelham asked Leslie a question.

"What was your grievance against that cheerful rotundity?"

"I didn't like the way he looked at Celia."

"My dear Les!" Bill protested.

"That's all right," returned Les, "but you didn't know my Uncle Russell."

"I've read enough about him in the papers."

"About his financial triumphs. I don't mean that. He was as wicked an old beast as ever lived—a calculating, smiling, respect-inspiring old libertine, and he smiled in the fatherly way that your old Applejack has. Now go and laugh and tell the others. Celia will think it a scream."

"I'll keep it to myself," said Bill; "but you won't mind if I don't agree with you?"

Poor jealous boy, he meditated, so unhappy at Celia's exasperating ways that he seized on the old-world courtesies of Appleton as offensive!

"Les," he said presently, "you'll have to get over those things."

"There are some things no decent man ever gets over," Les replied warmly.

"Hist!" warned Bill. "Who comes?"

A stranger stepped out of a station taxi, walked over the terrace, and rang the bell.

"Who's that?" Les demanded.

"Except that she is a professional woman forty-three years of age, height five feet five, weight one hundred and fifty, has two gold stoppings in the lower bicuspids, has never been married, is fond of hiking, and devoted to classical music, I can tell you nothing. But for those details she is a complete stranger upon whom I have never before set eyes."

"Bill, you're a marvel," said Les.

"I dare not contradict you. I am. It all comes out of a correspondence course on how to be a house detective."

"How can I check up on the teeth?" Les asked.

"You can't. That wouldn't be playing the game. It would be rude of you to ask the lady to open her mouth. Take my word for it."

Grass Grown in India to Make Match Sticks

The fact that lumber for the making of match sticks is becoming scarce in this country lends special interest to a report from British India to the effect that a grass is being successfully employed there for such purposes.

At Sholapur there is a factory that is making match sticks from a growth called Surya grass, abundant in some parts of India. The grass is cut into two-inch lengths, winnowed and screened to obtain uniform size, and then boiled in a revolving drum. Twenty-four pounds of Burma paraffin is sufficient for 7,000 boxes of matches.

Shaken through a horizontal sifter, the sticks are deposited in horizontal layers, which are secured in a frame for the dipping of the ends, and dipped in a solution of chlorate of potash, sulphate of arsenic, potash of bichloride, powdered gypsum and gum arabic. Six pounds of this mixture provide for the 7,000 boxes of matches. By an ingenious contrivance some of the closely packed stems are forced forward in the dipping so as to avoid the sticking together of the compact mass. After drying the matches are packed in cardboard boxes. Materials are so cheap that matches sell for 26 cents a gross.

Not Authentic Personage

Mother Shipton is supposed to have been an English prophetess. "The Prophecies of Mother Shipton" appeared as an anonymous tract in London in 1641. Afterward similar books and tracts purporting to be her prophecies appeared frequently. There is no trustworthy evidence that such a person actually existed.

CONSCIENCE AND OTHER THINGS

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

When Sally heard that Bob Warren was "engaged to a very lovely girl and was going to be married very soon," she thought philosophically. "Oh, well," and somewhat later, "I hope she has money;" and still later into a warm, damp pillow she whispered, "I wish I were dead."

But life had to be lived—existed, then. The world refused to stand still. Things were—and what could one do about it? Days continued to come and go in dull orderly procession, tinsel days with ashen hearts, fo. one must try to forget—must forget. Mustn't be too feverishly gay, laughter must not sound wild. People might notice. There was the bus to work in the morning; the children at school, eager, questioning; the kindergarten songs and dances; hand-work; lunch; games; the story period; health reports; sometimes an afternoon lecture; home; a dance or the theater—the days seemed to live themselves without her help.

Sometimes things hurt. On the bus in the morning there were little tortures. The sight of a friendly grin like Bob's could send a stab of stinging ecstasy through her heart followed immediately by a stab of another sort. At school she was constantly reminded of camp—Bob's young charges had fairly worshiped him. Pain and then dullness again.

Occasionally she would stop long enough to inform herself that she was a little fool, which failed somehow to produce results. This sort of thing went on for countless ages. (Normal methods of computing time would have made it three years.) In the meantime one heard indirectly of Bob, never from him. He had graduated from law school. He had accepted a position in his uncle's law office, he was making good, and he was still "engaged to a very lovely girl and going to be married very soon." Which last brought from Sally, "She hasn't any money."

About this time fate so decreed that one Neil Rogers should go driving on a dark and rainy evening, and run his expensive roadster into a tree. Neil was picked up by a passing motorist and brought to the hospital where Red Hartshorn was an interne. Between Red and Bob Warren existed a friendship that cause men to marvel and to remember a certain elusive passage from somewhere in the Bible. And—Red had been trying for three years to prove theories of his as to the general unspeakableness of Neil Rogers. Here was the enemy delivered into his hands.

Red worked swiftly. As an acquaintance of Neil's, it behooved him to visit the patient for the purpose of diversion, consolation, and encouragement. The methods employed to encourage the patient to a speedy recovery were somewhat out of the ordinary.

Said Red to Neil, with a carefully forced smile. "Of course, old man, you're not badly hurt! What put such nonsense into your head?"

And Neil, weakly, "Can't fool me Red! Saw your face when you glanced at the chart yesterday. Today, too—how long have they given me?"

"Oh come now Neil, that's all foolishness—"

But it was made evident to Neil that Red was trying to spare him. He interrupted. "How long?"

Red's smile vanished. He turned to the window for a moment, then again faced the man on the cot. "I—Oh, hang it all, Neil, you'll be all right!" with which he made his escape, leaving his victim in a truly lamentable state of mind.

The next day Mr. Rogers' nurse confided wearily to the interne that that patient of hers had decided he was going to die and couldn't be made to change his mind about it. This made Red very, very happy. He was destined to become even happier before the day was over for his next visit to the patient brought results.

Neil did not feel well at all. The belief that he had not not long to live had brought on new complications. He suffered acutely from a diseased conscience plus a colossal fear of his fate in the hereafter. He wanted to see Bob Warren, the sooner, the better. Sally Arnold, too. Yes, he must see Sally and Bob.

"Sally? Sally? Oh, yes, Sally!" Red responded brightly. "Why, I haven't seen Sally for a couple of years. Haven't the slightest idea where she is now. Heard she was teaching out West somewhere. And Bob's in Germany, studying. Chucked law for medicine. Haven't you heard?" Red went into elaborate detail.

It was indeed sad to see how untruthful Red had become, and really appalling was the pride he took in this unholy accomplishment. He continued, "Of course we can write to Bob and perhaps we can find Sally for you." He paused a moment to observe the condition of his victim, then concluded, "Though now that I think of it, Bob's on his way home for a few weeks' vacation—boat docks tomorrow. I'll tell him you want to see him."

The next day was eventful. There was, first, a visit to Neil by Bob Warren. What Bob heard caused him to wire hastily and expensively to Sally. Sally arrived on an afternoon train and went directly to her hotel without seeing Bob.

In the early evening there was again a visit to Neil. Sally sat in the hospital room armchair—a very white and tired Sally—trying not to notice the mockery in Bob's smile or the slight sprinkling of gray at his temples. Red Hartshorn sat near her. Bob was near the bed watching Neil.

Neil told his story in as few words as possible.

"Three years ago," he began, "we were all at Camp Westlake for the summer, and Sally was a councilor at Camp Pineywoods—remember?"

"Well, Sally—Sally—Bob—that is, Sally and Bob—were pretty good friends—" He hesitated a moment, then went on in rapid, jerky sentences.

It seemed that the great interest evinced in each other by Sally and Bob had not met with the entire approval of Neil Rogers. He couldn't imagine what Sally could possibly see in Bob, and how she could prefer Bob's company to that of his own charming self was beyond his comprehension. Her taste was truly deplorable. But so it was, and something, obviously, had to be done about it.

Neil's reasoning as he now told the story, had been thus: "Bob wants Sally, I want Sally. But Sally wants Bob, not me. So I don't get her. All right, I don't get her, but I'll see to it that he doesn't either." Which he proceeded to do.

The mail boxes at Camp Westlake were rude affairs built of wood, each with its wooden door that opened at the top. It was a simple matter to open the box every evening after Bob had mailed his letter, to extract the letter and to drop it carefully into the lake. Neil always recognized Sally's handwriting, so that, naturally enough, her letters to Bob shared the same fate. Not very difficult, either, was the task of starting the rumor that Sally Arnold of Camp Pineywoods was engaged to a man from home or that the New York girl who had a recent week-end guest at Camp Westlake was secretly Bob Warren's fiancee.

Sally's first reaction on hearing the gossip about "Bob Warren's new flame" was a non-inhibited desire to smile. When her letters remained unanswered she began to wonder. She remembered that the young lady referred to was not only very beautiful but also the daughter of a father who had (or so all the good people said) made history on the battlefield of Wall street.

Bob went through much the same experience and since they were both very sensitive and both possessed the unyielding pride of their kind, there was in store for them much pain—a season of torture and then three years of dull heartache.

For Neil there had been remorse of a sort always quieted, however, by the fear of swift punishment at the hands of Bob if he told.

The story over, Neil sank back on his pillow and closed his eyes. Bob turned to look at Sally, and it suddenly came to them both that three years is a long time to be separated from the Most Wonderful One in the World. It became necessary for Red to escort them speedily to where they might have undisturbed privacy.

This accomplished, he returned to the bedside of the patient. Here he found that confession had brought peace to the soul of Neil Rogers, so much so that he had forgotten all about dying and fallen peacefully asleep. Red regarded him tenderly, calculating the number of days that must elapse before Neil would be strong enough to leave the hospital. He smiled in anticipation as he thought of a little conference he would have with Neil at about that time—a conference behind closed doors where he would do unto Neil as Neil should have been done unto long ago; and after that Neil would again spend a week or two in a hospital and Red would seek treatment for bruised knuckles.

As he thought of all these things, Dr. Redfield Hartshorn became very, very happy.

Children Must Learn to Make Own Decisions

Most parents would be highly gratified if they could say that their children always yielded instant obedience to commands. But even if such children existed such a state of affairs would not be of most benefit to them, declares Dr. Frank Howard Richardson, child specialist, in Hygeia Magazine.

Why? Because children are by no means finished products. They are in training for independent existence when they must make decisions for themselves. If they obeyed unquestionably they would be mechanical robots and nothing more, Doctor Richardson asserts.

It is an interesting fact that the parent who has not put too much stress on obedience as such is the one who is most unhesitatingly obeyed when an order is given that must be instantly obeyed. In other words the habit that should be stressed in the young child is the habit of co-operation, of obedience to the laws that we must all obey, rather than that of obedience to parental whim, Doctor Richardson advises.

Pests Cure Paralysis

A certain type of mosquito, according to J. F. Marshall, director of the British Mosquito Control Institute at Hayling Island, has been found to cure paralysis in some cases. The experiments conducted consisted of inducing the insect to bite a patient suffering from malaria. Then it was induced to bite a general paralysis patient. Partial and complete cures were effected.

U. S. Breakfast Bill

Young America, which dallies with its breakfast and eats its cereal under protest, faced a tremendous total of breakfast foods as a result of the manufacturing of 1927. The total in pounds for wheat was not found, but for other grains was well over the billion mark, the Department of Commerce census indicates, and the value was $159,644,063.

Might Be "Antique"

Whether the word "sterling" on silver would destroy the value of the piece as an antique would depend upon the piece. The word "sterling" appears on Chester silverware as early as 1690. It is also found on silverware made in Cork, Ireland, at the end of the Seventeenth century.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescriptional product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

EXPEDITION WILL EMBALM GORILLAS

Complete Specimens to Be Brought Back to U. S.

New York.—Four scientists sailed from New York on the Aquitania for the highlands of tropical Africa, there to kill adult gorillas, embalm them and bring them home complete for anatomical study. The new specimens will give first opportunity for detailed comparison of the gorilla with man.

Columbia university, which will finance the expedition, announced its plans. The College of Physicians and Surgeons is co-operating with the American Museum of Natural History.

Henry Craven, who has explored in Borneo, Celebes, Africa, Australia and Greenland, heads the expedition. He is associate curator of comparative anatomy at the museum.

With him are Dr. William K. Gregory, professor of vertebrate paleontology at the university and curator of comparative anatomy at the museum; Dr. J. H. McGregor, professor of zoology at the university and research associate in human anatomy at the museum, and Dr. E. T. Engle associate professor of anatomy at Columbia.

They also will make special studies and photographs of the feet of the unshod natives who carry their equipment through the thickly grown highlands north of Lake Tanganyike. Dr. Dudley J. Morton, head of the committee in charge of the expedition, wants the data for his studies of the evolution of human foot and its disorders. The native feet are undeformed by shoes and will be compared with American feet.

The expedition will return next January.

Tired of Life, Blinded War Bride Kills Self

Clarksburg, W. Va.—Tired of a life of darkness and misery, Mrs. Fred A. Fratto, thirty, German war bride of Frank Fratto, thirty, ex-service man and coal miner, fatally shot herself through the right temple at their home at Shinnston.

Mrs. Fratto was a pretty little German girl in the picturesque city of Coblenz when the American army of occupation came there in 1917. There she met Frank, member of the American forces, and a romance blossomed rapidly. They were married and when the army left she and Frank settled at Shinnston.

There they lived happily until 1926 when the young woman developed a serious tumor infection of the brain. At a Richmond, Va., hospital where two tumors were removed, a surgeon's knife severed the optical nerve rendering her blind. Despondent because of her blindness, an infection that affected her mind and crippled her spine so she was an invalid, she decided she was better off dead and so decided on suicide, several previous attempts at which were frustrated.

Joan d'Arc Features Bring Movie Fame

Paris.—Only because she had the features of St. Joan, eighteen-year-old Simone Genevoix has risen from the mass of unknown French women to become one of the most popular of French moving picture actresses.

Mademoiselle Genevoix had never acted until a few weeks ago, and she was known only to her fellow townsfolk as a quiet and demure young girl who some day would make a good wife for one of the town's beaux. But French producers discovered she resembled Joan of Arc even in mannerisms and today she is among the most praised of French actresses.

Mademoiselle Genevoix is appearing in the new French film, "The Wonderful Life of Joan of Arc," which purports to be an authentic reproduction of the Maid of Orleans' life, and historians and critics have acclaimed her interpretation as superb.

Payroll Dropped From Airplane Is Scattered

Hutchinson, Kan.—Picking up $10,000 in silver and gold strewn over an area of 75 yards was the experience of William Carr, former guard for the payroll agent located in the Tampico oil fields of Mexico.

The money, wages for oil workers, was dropped by airplane from sacks in absence of a landing field. One day when the plane flew higher than usual, three sacks hit the ground, burst open, and scattered their golden contents over the surrounding area. Only $94 was missing when the guard had finished picking up the money.

Oklahoma Blind Man in Commerce Group

Edmond, Okla.—For the first time in the history of Oklahoma, and perhaps for the first time in the country, a blind man has been elected president of a chamber of commerce.

Philip C. Slack, blind since birth, was elected unanimously to the Edmond group. Coming to Edmond more than twenty-eight years ago, Slack has established one of the largest book shops in the state. He is a graduate of the Janesville (Wis.) high school for blind and the college for blind at Vinton, Iowa.

SEEK COMPENSATION FOR PRISON YEARS

Friends Move to Aid Man Wrongfully Jailed.

Madison, Wis.—An effort is under way here to obtain legislative compensation for John A. Johnson, sixty-five, who served ten years in prison for a crime it now generally is believed he did not commit.

Although Johnson confessed in 1911 to the murder of seven-year-old Annie Lemberger, he repudiated his confession just before he entered the gates of Waupun prison.

In 1922 he was pardoned by Gov. E. L. Philipp, who had been convinced the man confessed because of a morbid fear of mob violence.

There are more than 3,000 Madison citizens who now are certain society "robbed" Johnson of ten working years of his life and who have signed petitions asking the legislature to compensate him, as far as possible, for that which was taken.

Crime Committed in 1911.

Johnson, an employee of the city, has aged rapidly and is in none too good health. He still works, but his earning power is small and he and the wife who trusted him during his years of imprisonment are not enjoying the comforts they might have had.

Annie Lemberger, daughter of Martin Lemberger, was put to bed by her mother about nine o'clock the night of September 5, 1911. Several days later her body was found floating in Monona bay. She had been beaten to death.

Johnson was arrested three days later and was questioned by a detective. For hours he maintained that he was innocent—until the detective struck the vulnerable spot.

The officer, failing in all other efforts to make Johnson confess, told him that a mob was outside clamoring for his life.

Saw Man Lynched.

Johnson once had seen a man lynched at Darlington and the moment he heard that he was in danger of meeting a similar fate he became a cringing, terrified wreck. He confessed, begged protection, and when arraigned in court pleaded guilty, with the additional plea that he be hurried to prison and saved from the mob.

Despite the fact that Mrs. Johnson and two daughters, Stella and Bertha, testified that Johnson had gone to bed about nine o'clock the night of the murder and never left the house during the night, the man's plea of guilty was accepted and he was sentenced to Waupun for life.

Use X-Ray on Diggers to Halt Diamond Thefts

Cape Town, South Africa.—Observation posts with searchlights and special X-ray apparatus are stated to be among the means which the South African government is adopting to end the diamond smuggling in Namaqualand, in which women are said to be largely employed.

No stones have been produced from the state diggings since last February and the work is not proceeding until all the precautions against illicit diamond smuggling are completed.

The X-ray apparatus is said to be such as to make it possible to detect diamonds on or in a man passing an observer. While smuggling is admitted, the government denies that the stones are coming from the state diggings.

Sweeping of Jewelry Shop Floor Yields Gold

Cincinnati, Ohio.—An effort will be made to recover several hundred and probably thousands of dollars' worth of gold and other precious metals believed to have accumulated under a floor of a jewelry manufacturing firm here during the last quarter century.

The firm will move into a new location soon and officials are going to make sure they remove all their belongings, even to the tiny bits of metals in floor cracks and other inconspicuous parts of the shop.

Employees wash their hands in a sink that has no outlet and about $1,000 worth of precious metals is recovered this way each year. Sweepings from the floor yield about $200 worth a month.

Monks Work to Divert Traffic From Monastery

Cumberland, R. I.—The strange atmosphere which pervades the Cistercian monastery will become even more pronounced with the completion of a new stretch of highway under construction here.

Without outside aid, the Trappist monks of the monastery are building a new road, three-quarters of a mile long, to divert traffic from the main highway which now runs close to their retreat.

In carrying out this novel project, the monks are following the example of Henry Ford, who had a similar road constructed to divert traffic from his Wayside inn at Sudbury, Mass.

Will Dress Statue

Kovno, Lithuania.—Kovno's statue of the Greek god, Apollo, will be officially clad in a bathing suit henceforth. When a group of women protested against the statue's comparative nudity, the town council refused to remove the work of art. A compromise to dress the statue in a bathing suit finally was reached.

BRITAIN TO TEST NEW DIRIGIBLES

One Will Visit Canada, Other Goes to Egypt.

London.—The world's latest and most expensive experiment in aircraft construction will be given its first test soon when gas is blown into the bags of the R-100 and the R-101, Great Britain's new $4,000,000 airships.

Sir Samuel Hoare, British air minister, recently announced in the house of commons that the two new airships would make flights to Canada and India in the fall if the trial flights were successful. Air experts of the world perked up their ears at this announcement for Great Britain's failure in these two ventures may mean death for future airship construction.

The R-100, the air ministry has decided, will go to Canada, while the R-101 will make the first long flight to India and Egypt, where arrangements already have been made for handling the ship. It is understood here that the R-100 might include the United States in its itinerary if Washington extends an invitation.

But so far Sir Samuel has refused to divulge when the shed tests and first trial flights will be held. Previous delays, and subsequent questionings in parliament, have made him cautious. It was learned, however, that the bags will be filled some time in June, after which the first local flights will be made.

The construction of these two 5,000,000 cubic feet gas-filled airships is rapidly nearing completion after innumerable delays occasioned by changes in plans and the addition of many new devices which never before have been employed on giant airships. The R-101, in particular, represents several radical departures in the construction of the steel frame and in the arrangement of the interior.

As the R-100 is fitted with ordinary petrol engines, it was selected for the flight to America, whereas the R-101, equipped with Diesel engines, is more suited to the warm atmosphere which will be encountered on the flight to India and Egypt.

Pope Limits Use of New Vatican Money

Rome.—Officials of Vatican City will continue to receive their salaries in Italian money after the papal government's new money is issued, it was understood.

The papacy's own silver and gold coins will be few and their use limited.

Gold coins of 20 lire value and silver coins of 5 lire value (about $1.05 and 26 cents, respectively) are planned.

The coins will be used to purchase Vatican City stamps, to pay entrance fees to the art galleries and fees to the holy congregations, especially to the congregation of sacraments in cases of annulled marriages.

Robber Splits Loot So Creditors Can Get Pay

San Francisco, Calif.—Kind heartedness of a robber mixed with the oratory of Herman Krieger reflected satisfactorily upon the latter's creditors.

Krieger told police a man came into his house, drew a pistol, and forced him to give up $85. He said he pleaded with the man not to take all the money because he had to meet some bills.

"All right, guy," the robber answered; "we'll split it."

The robber counted out $42.50 and gave it back to Krieger.

The next day the creditors got their money.

Gives Away Old Shoe With Diamonds in Toe

San Francisco, Calif.—The fun started when Mrs. A. J. Jadig discovered her husband had hidden her diamond ring and his diamond stickpin in an old shoe—the old shoe she gave to the Salvation Army two days before.

The brogan search that followed Mrs. Jadig's discovery surpassed in excitement the annual city Easter egg hunts by far and was successful. Salvation Army workers found the shoe among thousands of others and, what was better, found the $3,500 worth of jewelry.

Begs for Life Term

Minneapolis.—Raymond Askley told Judge E. A. Montgomery he had proved a failure at everything, including being a burglar, and asked for a life sentence so he would have something to eat every day. The judge agreed.

$15,000 Frogs Are Loot in Robbery

Toledo, Ohio.—Toledo's latest robbery, involving two frogs valued at $15,000, is shrouded in mystery.

Dr. Robert Wald, owner of the high-priced amphibians, told police they were stolen from their tank in the rear of his home.

Raised on artificial food and imported from Louisiana, the hoppers were the subjects of an important experiment, intended to prove whether amphibians could be raised in artificial surroundings in sufficient number to warrant commercial investment.

YOUTH CAUGHT BY HUNCH PAYS WITH HIS LIFE

Policeman Who Couldn't Pass "Exams" in Clever Piece of Work.

Fresno, Calif.—When Allen Ellis, Fresno minor, was hanged in San Quentin prison recently, it was testimony to the worth of a "hunch."

The hunch was that of Policeman Dana H. Tullis.

Ellis shot and killed Charles O. Weisert, Fresno automobile firm accountant, when the latter scornfully refused to raise his hands at the bandit's command. William Kreiger, nineteen, drove the light roadster used by Ellis and Lowell Davis, eighteen, in the holdup job.

The murder took place about ten o'clock at night in one of the best residential districts of Fresno last June 5.

And within two hours the city of 75,000 persons was fairly aflame with indignation. Weisert was widely and well known. The city had suffered a recent plague of boyish bandits—later established as the Weisert murder trio—preying upon gasoline service station operators, small store owners, and occasional residential pedestrians.

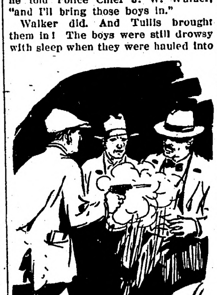
Not a Single Clew.

All of the city's 175 policemen were turned out for the midnight man hunt. And not a single clew was developed!

Then came Dana H. Tullis, typical heavy-bodied "flatfoot" beat man, with a hunch!

"Give me a car and another man," he told Police Chief J. W. Walker, "and I'll bring those boys in."

Walker did. And Tullis brought them in! The boys were still drowsy with sleep when they were hauled into police headquarters in the early morning hours. They had but fallen asleep in their beds at Sanger, 13 miles east, when Tullis, a second Fresno officer and a Sanger constable roused them.



Killed Charles O. Weisert.

Tullis had seen the youths riding aimlessly about the city's streets earlier in the evening. He had known of them as irresponsible characters.

And, as he explained it, he had the hunch!

A curious sequel followed Tullis' feat. Officials thought to reward Tullis by a promotion to detective sergeant.

Fails on Examination.

Tullis failed to pass the civil service examination! He couldn't read and write well enough!

Kreiger pleaded guilty, and received a life sentence. Ellis and Davis stood trial. Ellis, as the "triggerman," was sentenced to the gallows. Davis got life. Kreiger and Davis both are in San Quentin prison.

Ellis' attorney, W. A. White, used every resource in attempting to free the youth from the gallows' threat.

He appealed to California Appellate and Supreme courts, and all without avail. He rested his case on the assertion that Ellis lacked four days of being eighteen years of age—the minimum age subject to capital punishment in California—at the time of the murder. All appeals failed. California school, court and community records show the boy to have been but four days lacking of nineteen years at the time of the Weisert slaying.

Beauty Betrays Girl Sought as Gem Thief

Atlantic City, N. J.—Nineteen-year-old Ermyntrude Smith, red-haired and pretty, was arrested on the Boardwalk here recently on a jewel theft charge made by Milton A. Mackay of Pittsburgh, her former employer.

He accused the girl, who was a nurse maid in his home, of stealing $10,000 in jewelry and clothing while the Mackays were visiting in New York.

Miss Smith was in a rolling chair when she was arrested. Police declare her attractiveness aided them to recognize her. She was held without bail for extradition. She confessed the theft, according to police, and said she sold the gems to an unnamed man in the Bronx for $40.

Catch "Wild Man"

Dawson, N. M.—New Mexico's wild man, who for more than six months has lived in a mountain peak cave, subsisting on sheep stolen from ranches and eaten raw, has been captured and placed in an asylum near Dawson.

Horned Brazilian Frog Small but Dangerous

A horned Brazilian frog which barks like a dog when it loses its temper, is one of the latest arrivals at the reptile house of the New York Zoological park.

The strange frog is five and a half inches long and green-bronze in color. The keepers were warned that the animal was dangerous, but they were inclined to disregard this on account of its small size until they saw it aroused. Apparently averse to publicity, the frog made as if to attack a photographer who had come to take its picture shortly after its arrival, says Popular Science Monthly. It jumped at the man, snapped its jaws and barked furiously, in much the same manner as does an angry dog.

One of the curators, after examining the frog, said that it could inflict a painful wound with its strong jaws and teeth.

Reindeer Possibilities

Reindeers have high commercial value. They can be used to replace Eskimo dogs, or as pack animals. Their flesh is excellent for food. Their hides make sleeping bags, boots and other clothing suitable for use in the Arctic and reindeer milk is reported to make excellent cheese. Man can almost subsist on the products these animals provide, yet they live at practically no cost to the owner. In the future the tundras of the subartic regions will no doubt be stocked with these herds as the slopes of the West are stocked with cattle and sheep at present.

Rare Finny Specimens

The Danish scientific ship Dana has found two unusual specimens of deep sea fish in Australian waters. One is the female deep sea angler. Her mouth is of extraordinary size and she carries the male angler, a tiny fish in comparison to her own bulk, attached to her body. The other is a lantern fish, a habitat of deeps where it is believed no daylight penetrates. The fish has its own phosphorescent lights, strung along its sides like a row of portholes on a steamer.

Cannibal Gypsies

When nineteen gypsies at Prague, Czechoslovakia, confessed to a dozen cases of cannibalism the attorney general refused to believe them. Gypsies have a reputation as boasters and liars, and the strange confession was understood in that way. An investigation was made, however, and the evidence was unmistakable that the nomads had actually been eating human beings. Two of the gypsies were women.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Monarch Not a Myth

Good King Wenceslas really lived a thousand years ago. In the old Christmas carol we commemorate his kindness. In a bronze equestrian statue the citizens of Prague commemorate his statesmanship, which brought a bloodless peace and independence out of defeat and thralldom to the country which is now Czechoslovakia.

WHAT DR. CALDWELL LEARNED IN 47 YEARS PRACTICE

A physician watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the system and is not habit forming. Syrup Pepsin is pleasant-tasting, and youngsters love it.

Dr. Caldwell did not approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for anybody's system. In a practice of 47 years he never saw any reason for their use when Syrup Pepsin will empty the bowels just as promptly.

Do not let a day go by without a bowel movement. Do not sit and hope, but go to the nearest druggist and get one of the generous bottles of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

Decentralization of Manufacturing Brings Markets for Products Closer to the Farm—Gives Employment and Better Standards of Living to Rural Communities.

By T. R. PRESTON
President, American Bankers Association

T. R. PRESTON

NO class of people has been more diligent in trying to understand the agricultural problem than the bankers of this country. The agricultural problem is a real problem and demands the best thought of everyone. This country cannot continue along happy lines with only sections of the country prosperous. Prosperity must be passed around if anybody is long to enjoy it. This question cannot be solved by the farmers alone, but the majority opinion is that there is no legislative remedy for agriculture. It is an economic question pure and simple and must be worked out accordingly.

A few years ago it was contended that agriculture did not have sufficient credit facilities. That proposition was often made a political question. I do not presume there are many who will question the fact that agriculture now has ample credit facilities.

Mixing Farms and Factories

It is a fact that no community and no state has ever become great purely from agriculture. It is not to the interest of New York and other great centers to see the small communities and the agricultural sections losing their wealth and importance. In the end it will react upon them to their disadvantage.

There seems to me a real remedy for these small communities and also for agriculture. This remedy, which is the mixing of industry with agriculture, is now being applied in many localities with satisfactory results.

Industry and agriculture are better balanced in Ohio, North Carolina and Pennsylvania than in any other states of the Union, and in these states there is no serious agricultural problem and we hear little complaint from the farmers. This mixing of industry and agriculture is called by some decentralization of industry.

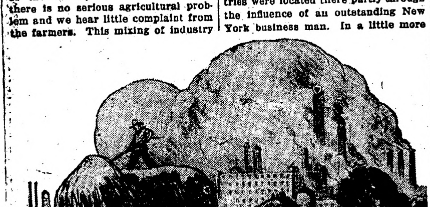
I would not suggest that manufacturing institutions move from the cities to the small villages, but I do think it would be better for this country for future industries to be placed in these small villages rather than to be further congested in the great centers. This would in part also be a solution of our labor problem. The bringing of industries to small villages increases the market for agricultural products, gives employment to surplus labor, elevates the standards of living, increases public revenue, reduces taxes and vastly increases educational facilities.

Two Striking Examples

I believe I can give you two striking examples from my own state to prove this proposition, and I mention these because I am more familiar with conditions there than elsewhere.

Twelve years ago Kingsport, Tennessee, had a population of about one thousand. Great industries like a large camera company, a big cement plant and a number of other industries were located there partly through the influence of an outstanding New York business man. In a little more than twelve years these have brought the population of that city up to seventeen thousand. Just a few miles away, at Elizabethton, they are building a great rayon plant, the first unit to cost $5,000,000. The population of that town is now two thousand, but it is estimated that this will be multiplied by five in less than two years. It is stated that the total investment in manufacturing industry in that community within a period of five years will probably reach $50,000,000.

The balancing of industry and agriculture will solve most of our so-called agricultural problems and we will not need such political measures as will in my opinion, do harm if enacted to the very class they pretend to benefit.



Mixing Industry With Agriculture Means Prosperity for Rural Districts

The Polaris Chronometer

IN 1869 Uncle Sam purchased a chronometer known as the "Negus 1806"—of foreign make, but American assembly. In accordance with custom, it was sent to the Naval observatory at Washington for adjustment and regulation for ship service.

On June 28, 1871, it was assigned to the good ship Polaris which went north on a polar expedition. The Polaris was crushed in the ice. Some four years later this chronometer was found in the snow at Newman's bay, Alaska, by Captain Nares of the British navy, who sent it to his government which, in turn, returned it to Uncle Sam.

The observatory had it carefully overhauled, wound and started. Despite the fact that it had been exposed to a temperature estimated to be 104 degrees below freezing point—no other chronometer probably ever was exposed to such an extreme degree of cold—the Polaris (which the observatory now dubbed it) astounded the officers, after it got "warmed up," by keeping time with a variation of but one-tenth of one second per day.

Wearing a "Distinguished Service" medal, so to speak, Polaris long was a resident of the observatory—being pointed to with pride when anyone wished to know how accurately a good chronometer could be when it took a notion.

It formed a part of the naval exhibit at the Panama-Pacific exposition at San Francisco in 1915 and saw service at the Mare Island navy yard, California. After a time it was returned to Washington for reconditioning, was dispatched to the navy yard at Brooklyn, N. Y., for duty and later was viewed by the throngs that visited the naval exhibit at the Sesquicentennial in Philadelphia in 1926, at the close of which it went back to Washington.

FARM WASHINGS Made Shorter and Easier with the MAYTAG
For homes with electricity, the Maytag is available with electric motor.

WHY spend the better part of a day washing when the Maytag will do it in an hour or two? Farm homes with or without electricity can enjoy the Maytag cast-aluminum tub and Gyrafoam action; the convenient adjustable legs and the handy hinged lid; enjoy the Roller Water Remover, with a flexible top roll and a hard bottom roll—the latest, safest and most thorough method of wringing the clothes. It spares the buttons, automatically adjusts the tension and reverses the drain plate.

The Gasoline Multi-Motor

This is the only gasoline engine made for a washer by a washer company. It represents fifteen years development—high-grade in every respect and so simple and compact that it is interchangeable with the electric motor by removing only four bolts. A thrust of the pedal starts it.

The elevator there has been closed for the past year and is now to undergo extensive repairs and an addition to be built in which the company will install a feed mill. Mr. Thomas will move there household goods to Greenbush as soon as a house can be secured.

Second Annual Creamery Picnic

The second annual picnic of Marshall County dairymen, sponsored by the creamery associations of Argyle, Alvarado, Alma, Gatzke, Holt, Middle River, Newfolden, Viking and Warren will be held at the beautiful and spacious old mill site in the town of Foldahl on Sunday, June 30th. Let us make this a grand social, recreational and educational event.

A very good program has been lined up for the afternoon.

Card of Thanks

As we are leaving Holt we take this opportunity of thanking our friends and customers for their patronage and courtisy extended us during our stay with you. We have made many friends whom we regret to leave, but to all we extend our thanks and best wishes. Sincerely,
Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Thomas.

Fourth of July Notice

The Holt postoffice will be open only two hours between 10:30 a. m. and 12:30 noon on Independence Day, Thursday July 4th. Postmaster.

The crops here are looking fine. Local showers which have been the general thing in this territory almost daily the past week, have given them a good boost. The hay crop is soon ready for the mowing machine in some places.

Marshall County Fair

With the greatest array of grandstand attractions that has ever appeared before in the county and indications pointing to the largest display of agricultural exhibits, final plans are now practically completed for Marshall County's 23rd annual Fair at Warren, July 8, 9 and 10, according to J. A. Grindeland, secretary of the fair association.

"The county fair is a nonprofit organization with a purpose in view to instill in the minds of the people of Marshall County the achievements this county has gained in the lines of agriculture and as a side issue to provide a short period of recreation," said Wm. Forsberg, fair association president.

Advance inquires indicate that the exhibit buildings will be taxed to thier limit, as countless numbers of new exhibitars are planning to arrange products at the 1929 fair to compete for the $1,700 of premium money.

Boys and girls club exhibits will be a big feature of the 1929 fair, as the county has the largest enrollment in club work in its entire history, and orrangements have been completed to transport all exhibits to the county fair grounds for exhibition purposes, A. D. Collette, county club leader, announced recently.

Visitors to the fair this year will witness the return of horse racing on the Marshall county track at Warren after an absence of eight years. Fleet horses from Southern Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa and South Dakota have already entered the races, thus indicating some exceptionally fast races for the three day program.

"The Festival of Fire", a stupendous feat in fireworks arranged by the same company that produces the fireworks program for the State Fair. will delight thousands the first two evenings of the fair. Several tons of fireworks are now on the way to Warren. A representative of the company will be in charge of all operations.

Grand Stand attractions are of the highest calibre ever offered to a Marshall county fair audience. The fair association has paid a greater sum of money for attrations this year than ever before in an attempt to give the visitors the best entertainment possible. Two bands will furnish music daily as contracts have been signed with the Red Lake Falls band of 40 pieees and the Warren high school band of 35 pieces for the three day exposition.

Make your plans now to attend one or more days of your county fair, and don't, forget to bring the children.

Mrs. Alfred Bjerken and daughters Alette and Vernalee returned to their home down at Mahnomen after a weeks visit at the Ole Reierson home.

Remember Please! That July 4th comes on Thursday, and we want to put out the news on Wednesday, July 3rd. Bring in yours copy as early as possidle. None will be taken after 5:30 on Tuesday, July 2nd.

Record Attandance

With over 140 women from eleven northwestern Minnesota counties and two states enrolled a new record of attendance was established at the Fourth Annual Women's Camp at the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, during the past week. According to E. R. Clark, acting registar, the camp idea is becoming more popular each year, as it offers an unusual opportunity for farm and city women to combine a long-to-be-remembered vacation with valuable instruction.

Inspirational addresses were delivered at the daily assemblies by Dean W. D. Coffey, University Farm, St. Paul; Mrs. I. W. Kinder, Crookston, President of the Polk County Federation of Women's Clubs; and Mrs. E. E. Green, Secretary of the 1929 Camp and Ninth District Chair of Community Service.

Special lectures included T. M. McCall, Horticulturist; A. M. Pilkey, poultryman; A. M. Foker, agricultural engineer; Coach D. H. LaVoi, livestock; Miss Fanny Lippitt, and Miss Retta Bede, home economics, all members of the Northwest School staff, assisted by Miss Eva L. Blair, Agricultural Extension Division University Farm, St. Paul; Mrs. Marjorie Child Husted, Washburn Crosby Company, Minneapolis; Mr. and Mrs. Roscoe Brown and Mrs. Alice S. Allen of the Brown Supply Company, Willernie; and Miss Viola M. Miller of the Singer Sewing Machine Company.

Mrs. Emma Wright, Middle River, was elected President of the 1929 Camp; Mrs. E. E. Green, Crookston, Secretary; Mrs. Ed. Filipi, Angus, Chairman of the Self Government Committee, assisted by Mrs. V. C. Noper, Thief River Falls, and Mrs. A. F. Stroble, Angus,

The following from Marshall County attended the 1929 Camp: Radium—Mesdames H. Myrha, Chas. Loeslie, George Rock, Paul Horter, Joe McGregor, Sr.; Stephen—Mesdames Ray Merdink, Anna Peterson, Henry Hoper; Argyle—Mesdames Fred Tiedt, S. Gerber, George Parr; Middle River—Mesdames Albert Stephen, Wm. Kezar, Emil Peterson, Emma Wright; Warren—Mesdames John Nelson, Geo. Anderson, Andy E. Morkassel, J. W. Mapps, J. H. Pierce, Wm. A. Selling Minnesota

We desire to call attention to the financial needs of a statewide organization which merits and should nave the support of this community. The Ten Thousand Lakes-Greater Minniesota Association has undertaken the work of selling Minnesota to the world, both as a great agricultural state and summer playground. Through its efforts the tourist business has increased to an extent where it now brings $90,000,000 in new money to the state annually. Its work in behalf of agriculture has just begun, but already the result is evident. The association needs money to advertise and carry on the work. Use the special coupon printed elsewhere in this issue and send in what you can spare.

LESSON 67

PRODUCTION: When we begin to make a careful study of individual cows as to how much each cow produces, a real start is made in the business of dairying. This leads to better breeding and more productive cows.—to cows that produce 300 pounds of butterfat a year instead of 150 lbs; cows that bring $150 a year instead of $75, and that sell at dairy cow prices instead of stock-yard prices.

MANUFACTURING: The milk that won first prize at the World's Fair in Paris some 25 years ago was produced on an Illinois dairy farm. It was two weeks old when judged. The secret of its wonderful keeping quality was absolute cleanliness and low temperature. This is well to remember in producing sweet cream. Keep it cool.

MARKETING: A business that goes on sucessfully from one generation to the next is a business that changes its methods to meet changing conditions. Shall co-operative creameries stand still and not change their methots of selling that they started out with 40 years ago?

Diagnosis of "TB" Is Now Assured

Tuberculin, Used in Test, Has Been Reduced to Absolute Purity.

Atlantic City.—Two great scientific advances of far-reaching consequences in the diagnosis and treatment of tuberculosis were disclosed in reports rendered to the National Tuberculosis association in annual session here. Tuberculin, the substance used in the test for detecting tuberculosis in human beings as well as cattle, has been reduced to absolute purity, something heretofore never achieved, so that it can be supplied wholly free from other substances which have affected the accuracy of these tests in the past. The details of this process were described by Dr. Esmond R. Long and Dr. Florence B. Seibert, of the University of Chicago. The second research achievement consists of the production of a wholly new mechanism for testing the individual for the presence of tuberculosis, which is expected to render the detection of this disease possible within three or four days of infection instead of an average of two months afterward, as is at present the case. This was disclosed in reports submitted by Drs. Florence R. Sabin, C. A. Doan and C. E. Forkner of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research. Both these scientific groups conducted their studies in co-operation with the medical research committee of the National Tuberculosis association of which Dr. William Charles White of Washington, is chairman.

Makes Diagnosis Exact.

Diagnosis of tuberculosis will become much more exact by reason of the perfection of tuberculin to crystalline purity, according to scientific authorities in attendance at the meeting. Particularly in the examination of children suspected of infection will the new tuberculin be of great value, for heretofore it has not been certain, in the individual case, that a positive reaction was not caused by one of the various impurities which were known to exist in the tuberculin used. The skin test has always probably been complicated by elements in the test fluid other than those which indicate the disease. It will also affect directly the testing of cattle, and reduce the number of animals which are slaughtered because they react positively to tuberculin and yet show no signs of tuberculosis.

Research work is to be continued by Doctors Long and Seibert of the University of Chicago to discover to what extent the avian type of the disease in chickens and the bovine type in cattle may be the cause of the human disease. Authorities state that the work already done in eliminating foreign elements from tuberculin will affect the diagnosis of other bacterial diseases in a similar manner, rendering methods much more accurate and dependable.

The new test devised for the earlier diagnosis of tuberculosis by members of the Rockefeller institute utilizes a small quantity of the blood of the patient. The red corpuscles are removed and the remaining serum diluted and placed in a test tube containing one of the fatty fractions of the tuberculosis germ, known as phosphatide. If the patient has tuberculosis there will be a precipitate, but if the disease is not present, nothing at all will occur. This new test will also be of use in distinguishing between cases of meningitis which are tuberculosis and those which are not, something which science has heretofore been unable to do early in the disease and accurately.

Result of Long Study.

In commenting on these two achievements, Dr. Kendall Emerson, managing director of the National Tuberculosis association, stated that these definite and significant results are the reward of seven years' work by the scientists engaged in various related realms of research. This particular branch of research has been directed under a system of counselors drawn from leading scientific men of the country. From time to time these men have held meetings, listened to reports of progress by different workers in allied fields, and as a "jury of scientific peers" have assisted the plan of attack on problems, advising lines of effort to be pursued.

The "chemical jury" of the research committee which established the base line for these studies includes: Dr. Paul A. Lewis, Rockefeller Institute; Dr. Allen K. Krause, Johns Hopkins hospital; Dr. Esmond R. Long, University of Chicago; Drs. Eugene L. Opie, H. R. M. Landis and Charles J. Hatfield, Henry Phipps institute; Prof. Treat B. Johnson, Yale university; Prof. Hans Zinsser, Harvard Medical school; Prof. John J. Abel, Johns Hopkins Medical school; Prof. A. N. Richards, University of Pennsylvania; Dr. Linsly R. Williams, National Tuberculosis association; Dr. William Charles White, Washington.

Baseball Team Puts This Town on Map

Imbler, Ore.—This little eastern Oregon town, not listed on some maps, and identified in the postal guide as "Postoffice No. 50,550," has a high school baseball team that holds a record of two no hit no run games this season, as well as the title of being one of the best high school nines in the state.

In the middle of the last no hit no run affair with Joseph High, which Imbler won, 15 to 0, the local coach took Marion Pugh out of the pitcher's box and placed Lyle Leadbetter in. Pugh had held the opponents hitless and his successor continued the remarkable twirling.

Records show that Imbler has performed similar feats in previous years.

Feminist Move Finds Small Favor in Tunis

Tunis, North Africa.—When Arab meets Arab amidst the picturesque white-washed houses of Tunisia, the pair may talk about everything under the eternally blazing sun except their wives. It is against etiquette, for, socially, Arabian women do not exist.

"How's your father?" the Arab may say, but never "How's your wife?"

Feminine emancipation has made no advance here in Tunisia, where the women folk rank as vassals or domestics. They look with veiled but envious eyes toward their sisters of Islam under the modern rule of Kemal Pasha in Turkey, whose order that all women go unveiled is regarded as profane by the older generations here.

There have been many attempts in recent years to bring Tunisian women into line with their more modern neighbors, but always the ingrained religious conservatives of the country resisted the suggestion.

TEXAS CITY HAS HOT DOG PHILOSOPHER FOR MAYOR

Official Is Fat, Jolly Man, Interested in Making People of City Happy.

Dallas, Texas.—Hot dog philosophy in Dallas, Texas, elected J. Waddy Tate mayor of Dallas recently over a candidate who is a prominent banker.

Known as the hot dog philosopher, Tate was chosen by a vote of the common people. He made the race as an independent candidate. His total expenditures amounted to $218 during the month's campaign, while his opponents spent $150,000.

The high point of Tate's campaign was a hot dog party for 10,000 citizens. All who attended wore blue shirts—a labor symbol. This was the largest political rally ever held in Dallas. Tate's hot dog philosophy is based on a series of platform planks, one of which would permit erection of hot dog stands on the shores of a municipal fishing resort. His opponent would have restricted the resort against such buildings.

"I would rather see a happy group of poor picnickers buying nickel hot dogs after a day's recreation than have them pay a dollar for chicken sandwiches," Tate said. Other reforms he proposes include three eight-hour shifts on all street improvements where construction disrupts traffic. Promises of increased salaries for trolley operators and paid vacations for city labor were dubbed foolish by Tate's opponents. Their reference to them as hot dog philosophy was taken up by Tate and turned to his advantage.

The hot dog mayor took office recently after an inaugural ball and public installation, the first events of this kind ever held by a city official in Dallas. The dance was held for a local charity and a dime admission was charged. Tate explained he wanted the fee small so his poor folk friends could attend.

A resident of Dallas for thirty-one years, Tate is a born Texan. A spellbinder himself, he refuses to listen to buncombe artists. He convinced the public that donkeys in the parks for the children were more important than theoretical tax issues.

In 1897 Tate became general agent for the Chicago Great Western railroad for the Southwest territory, with headquarters in Dallas. This was the pioneer line to attempt to get Texas business. Tate remained with the company until 1928, when he was offered the vice presidency of the line. He refused because it meant leaving Dallas.

Tate is a fat, jolly man, interested in making Dallas folks happy. He was reared in Houston, Texas, served as a printer while a young man, and still holds a card as an honorary member in Typographical union No. 87.

THE POOR THING

WELL, it was nice to be going somewhere. That train whistle this morning would not be laughing at her the while it invited. For she, Annis Randall, was going somewhere. Up at 5, she had done a good day's work before pleasuring. And so she would have a good time. Nice of those club women to remember that her mother had been a member, nice of them to take her mother's daughter to the federation meeting.

She drew her little black "crush" down over her soft hair, got her gloves, pressed a tiny perfume bottle against her handkerchief, went out into her yard. Oh, there they were. The long shining blue car came to a gentle stop; its marvelous door opened. She put her small foot on the step and there she was on a soft cushion between Izzy Hall and Iona Wright. The middle for her, they said, because she was small. The two women in front smiled good morning. The car swept into Main street and out into the country.

Mrs. Durant was a good driver, Annis knew. But how fast the country flew past. She had wanted to see it. But it was merely a glimpse she had of Holsteins, black and white, against a pasture rich green. She tried really to see a tiny black cabin under a flaming creeper. She had to do merely with knowing it was there. Izzy Hall and Iona Wright were mountains, she could neither tunnel, scale nor go around. And Mrs. Coulter in front had her curtain down. My, how hot. All the glass tight shut to keep out "drafts." Years ago when she went buggy riding she had to dress some even on a rather warm day. This car was hotter than she ever kept her house. Well, when you could afford to be hot you were, she supposed. But, oh, my, she felt sick, very sick. But she mustn't be Mrs. Wright pressing on her right side. Mrs. Hall on her left, she couldn't be sick. She couldn't move. If she listened to what they were saying maybe she would forget. She listened.

"My, I've got a full week before me," Mrs. Hall was saying. "Today and tomorrow the federation. Wednesday the Country club benefit bridge. Thursday the Rotary Inn luncheon, and Mrs. Durant's dinner. Friday I've just got to go to Joplin to get me some shoes. Saturday—"

"Yes," agreed Mrs. Wright, "a body never has any time any more. I've got all you have and more. Doctor wants me to entertain those Loomsies, missionaries from India. I suppose I'll have to but Doctor is always feeding those people going around talking about old foreigners—"

"Well, when you're so busy it does seem a shame."

"I never have any time, always somewhere I've got to go or somebody I've got to entertain or a club paper to write or a bazaar to make something for— H'm, here we are—"

Annis was glad the doors opened. She staggered, but nobody noticed her. After three breaths of air of course she felt better. Mrs. Hall and Mrs. Wright groaned as they climbed the stone steps leading up to the church where the federation met. Why did they make so many steps into a church? No wonder people didn't come much! Annis behind them wished there were more steps. She needed the exercise, air. But it was nice to be going somewhere. She felt interested in things.

The church was big. It had a pipe organ. Perhaps some one would play it! Sunshine came in through stained windows. What a lovely color effect the hats and dresses and coats of the club women made. Flowers, too, were everywhere; crimson dahlias, cosmos, zinnias, palms against the organ. Was that lady up on the platform speaking? She might be. She nodded her head, lifted her right hand, smiled, her lips moving. A gentle murmur. Yes, she was speaking She bowed, left the platform. A patter of applause. Another lady came to the front of the platform, said tickets for the luncheon were in the vestibule. A speech by a man about Nicaragua, Geneva, the World court. This was very interesting. She had read about these things. Mrs. Hall whispered to Mrs. Wright that she was going to die of sleepiness! What did they want to hear about Nicaragua for? Reports from clubs were called for. Some of these Annis heard, some she did not. The country women's clubs interested her most. Lunch time. They got those tickets in the vestibule, and a great crowd began to swarm down the stairs to the basement dining room. Little Annis got squeezed nearly to death. Scared and faint, she wiggled into a corner to stay until the crowd went past her. Mrs. Hall and Mrs. Wright were in front of her. They were talking. They did not know she was near them.

"The poor thing! I'm glad she came. Just stays there in that house of hers, never goes anywhere. What an empty life!" Mrs. Hall in her thick voice said.

Mrs. Wright was smiling. "I was the one to suggest to Mrs. Durant that she bring her. 'Who would like to go to Iona?'" she asked me, and I had happened to look out from my sleeping-porch and see Annis hoeing—she does all sorts of men's work, you know—and I said, 'Annis Randall.' And so the poor thing got one happy day, one day of real living."

Her sides gouged by elbows, her feet mashed by stepping clubwomen, Annis tried to realize that she was having a happy day, a day of real living. She ate cold mashed potatoes and cabbage slaw, prodded with her fork an invincible, apparently petrified chicken back, drank luke-warm coffee out of a thick handleless cup and felt better. The afternoon program concerning legislation was not uninteresting, if you had read anything in the newspapers. She sat beside Mrs. Durant who took notes. She admired sober, efficient, intelligent, wealthy Mrs. Durant, always trying to do her duty.

The ride home was much like the morning ride. She had to imagine the country. Mrs. Hall and Mrs. Wright discussed housecleaning, bridge, soap, reducing diet.

"Thank you, very, very much" she trilled as she got out of the big car in front of her old pillared, shabby house. She smiled at the four women regarding her. But they did not smile. They felt sorry for her.

She breathed and breathed the sweet air of the late afternoon. A baby boy of three came toddling from a neighbor's, smiled up at her. She bent and kissed him. "Come and get your cookie," she told him.

Her cat arched his back against her ankle welcoming her.

She changed her dress, went into her garden, pulled two tomatoes, cut off some leaves of lettuce, cooked potatoes and a chop, set her table, a bowl of yellow chrysanthemums in its middle. A young girl came in with material for a party dress, wanting a design. Joey Cooper brought her mail. In the peace of her quiet, ordered, flower-fragrant house she opened a letter postmarked New York. Her latest designs had been eminently satisfactory. Could she send more? The demand for her handkerchiefs was steadily increasing.

She sat presently with squares of linen beside her, a drawing-board before her, a pencil between her fingers She began to work, to create beauty.

"The poor thing!" she heard a thick pitying voice ejaculate.

The poor thing smiled.

Small Animal Provides Sustenance for Whale

How the largest animal in the world catches one of the smallest for its food is shown by an exhibition at the Natural History museum in London, to illustrate recent investigations of the lives and habits of whales.

Last year a British government vessel, the Discovery, took a party of scientists on a voyage to the Antarctic ocean, now the greatest whaling ground of the world. The chief food of the gigantic sea animals was found to be a tiny water creature like a shrimp, but smaller. Living by millions in the icy Antarctic waters, these shrimps are scooped up by the whale in gigantic mouthfuls, filtered out of the sea water and swallowed alive.

In the exhibition in London are shown samples of this living whale food, also of the still tinier microscopic plants called diatoms, which live in the surface layers of the sea and form, in turn, the chief food of the shrimps. Like all other terrestrial creatures, the Antarctic whales get their food, the scientists of the Discovery found, from the rays of the sun.

These rays fall on the surface of the sea, are absorbed by the tiny diatoms and enable these plants to manufacture food, just as sunlight works the food-making process of ordinary plants that live ashore. Then the uncountable billions of diatoms are eaten by millions of shrimps.

Always Handy

Brown's wife was musical. She had other faults as well. But Brown was a good husband, and when she showed a desire to learn the violin he promised to make her a present of one.

"A violin for your wife?" said the assistant at the music shop. "Certainly, sir. One with a chin rest?"

"Yes," said Brown. Then, as a brilliant idea came to him, he hurried after the assistant and caught him by the sleeve.

"Make it a detachable chin rest," he said, "so that she can still use it when she is not playing the violin."

Uses for Animals' Blood

For the most part the blood of animals that are slaughtered for food has gone in tankage to be worked up as fertilizer. In the past few years many other uses have been found for it. It is separated into a clear-colored serum and a red liquid. Both are then reduced to powder form. The commercial haemoglobin is used in finishing leather, as a binder for sawdust, and to a limited extent it is introduced into the feed for animals. The blood albumen is used in the tanning, textile, paper and wood-working industries.

Gambling Institution

A "bucket shop" is an office where people may gamble in fractional lots of stocks, grain or other commodities which are bought and sold on the exchange. The bucket shop uses the terms and outward form of the exchanges, but differs from them in that there is no delivery, and no expectation or intention to deliver or receive securities or commodities said to be sold or purchased.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Diamond's Origin

According to Greek legend, the diamond owed its origin to a beautiful, pure-minded Greek youth of that name, who had helped to care for the great god Jupiter in his cradle. Unwilling to see this beloved Diamond suffer the ills and final extinction of other mortals, Jupiter transformed him into pure crystalized carbon, the hardest and most brilliant substance in nature, thus securing his immortality.

What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

by Wyndham Martyn

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains. Miss Selenos, a former tenant, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Hanby considers asking Leslie Barron, long an admirer of Celia, to join the house party. Mrs. Hanby declares she likes the house. Pelham becomes a member of the household. Leslie Barron arrives making four able-bodied members of the Hanby household. A phone call from a man who declares he is an old acquaintance of Hanby's and interested in ornithology, but whom Hanby cannot identify, urges him to preserve a part of the grounds as a bird sanctuary. The idea appeals to Hanby and he makes the promise. The Hanbys take possession of the Gray house. A stranger introducing himself as Frederick Appleton, calls at the Gray house and is welcomed because of his interest in bird life. Hanby foresees trouble in connection with work to be done on the estate with which he is unfamiliar, and gladly engages Appleton as his agent.

"Bill," said Les presently, "you give me the idea of being constantly on the watch."

"What do I get five and a quarter a day for?"

"Seriously, Bill, what makes you look as if you thought there was something menacing around?"

"Do I give myself away to that extent? How artless of me! I thought I was just registering firm determination."

"I've seen you stalking around at night. Why? Let me in on it. You know I'm not likely to spill it. Bill, as man to man, what makes you look so darned anxious?"

Bill Pelham lowered his voice.

"As man to man, Les, there is danger. I have made some very remarkable discoveries. You mustn't tell even Junior, because Dina has some psychic way of knowing when her children are worried, and this is not a matter for joking. Here's Junior now."

"Hi, Bill!" Junior shouted, coming toward them. "There's a lawyer lady all the way from New York. Dad wants you to come."

Bill Pelham looked at Les with triumph.

"You see that every one of my statements has been verified. I stated distinctly that she had come from New York to see me. Her shoes were bought at the one city in America where they are sold. Her gloves could only have come from Mustrell's, on the Avenue. I recognized the crumb of cake on her second chin as made only by Mary Elizabeth's New York branch."

The house detective made his way to the big hall. The brisk professional woman was introduced as Doctor Byers.

"I hold degrees in medicine and law," she said. "I really can't say whether I'm here today as a lawyer or as a psychopath."

"Bill," said Hanby, "the great Selenos mystery is about to be cleared up."

"I can hardly agree that it is a mystery," objected the visitor.

"At all events I'm glad you came, and not your vengeful client. She is a dynamo of unpleasant energy."

"How little you know her!" Doctor Byers commented. "If one may regard her as a dynamo, she is the kind of dynamo which uses all its force for a few moments and then has long periods of inertia, during which current is being generated for some future use. I am not sure that my knowledge of dynamos is sound, but you no doubt get my meaning. After her interview with you my client was prostrated for a month. She is intensely nervous now—too nervous, in fact, even to come here."

"I'm bound to say she made a very poor impression on me," Hanby said.

"It is her unfortunate way. She suffers intensely from delusions of persecution. She particularly loathes and despise men—unjustly, I believe."

"What is her interest in this house, from which she was evicted for nonpayment of rent?"

"That's the very thing I've come about, Mr. Hanby. You don't mind if I smoke a cigarette, do you? Thanks! I must ask you to be patient for a few moments. It is a truism to say that everything is relative, isn't it? Very well, then. If you, or I, or Miss Selenos, believe in our hearts that some one thing or another, apparently insignificant in itself, is the most vital thing in our lives, that thing is actually the most important. This is modern teaching. The trouble is that we judge the interests of others by our own standards." She turned to Bill Pelham. "Jazz music, to you, may be the most important thing since Tubal Cain's time. I despise it. To me a fine symphony orchestra represents music at its apotheosis."

"I knew it," declared Bill, gratified. "I said so."

"I don't think you quite understand," said Doctor Byers, a little puzzled.

"I think we do," remarked Hanby. "What you mean is that the thing motivating your client will seem very insignificant to us. What is her interest in my house, and why did she desire me not to live here? I should like to know how my family can desecrate it. I think that was the word she used."

"Undoubtedly the Poor Creature Is Mad," Said Hanby.

"All she wants to do," said Doctor Beyers, "is to be allowed to remove something she buried here. She has had great trouble. It seems that Douglas & Smith referred her to a Mr. Appleton, who had complete charge of houses and properties listed in this county."

"A most conscientious man," Hanby said warmly. "I know him well."

"Perhaps too conscientious. My client, having vivid dislikes, immediately declared him to be a libertine, scoundrel and thief."

"Your client," asserted Hanby, "should be in the county asylum for the insane."

"I disagree. She is neither dangerous nor likely to become a charge on the community. She believes that Appleton arranged the eviction in order to spite her. Certainly it need not have been so drastic. She did not refuse to pay the rent because she was without means. She refused because certain alterations were not carried out. These alterations were not embodied in the contract that Appleton drew up. Legally she had no case. She is sure that Appleton deliberately tricked her. She was so upset that she went to Algeciras to live. When she came back, she made another effort to rent the place through Douglas & Smith. They referred her to Appleton again, and he refused."

"Why?" Pelham asked. "It stood empty long enough."

"Appleton would not recommend her to old Miss Coryell, who owned it, as a suitable client. Miss Coryell believed in him implicitly. It seems amazing that Mr. Douglas can place such reliance on him."

"Not amazing to those who know him," Hanby retorted, unable to see why Frederick Appleton should be criticized thus.

"My client appealed to successive tenants to allow her to remove what she had buried, but again the Appleton influence intervened. One tenant, a Mr. Seymour, seemed likely to be agreeable, but Appleton stopped that. He informed Mr. Seymour that a tenant has no legal right to allow any excavation without the consent of the owner, Miss Coryell. Like most Englishmen, Mr. Seymour was afraid of offending against any such statutes as hedge about landowners, and had to refuse. He laid the blame squarely on Appleton. My client, having no legal adviser at the time, behaved with great unwisdom. She hired men to go there by night, and Appleton bobbed up in time to prevent them from entering. I regret to say that Miss Selenos made a regrettable scene."

"I am bound to say I am not drawn to her," Hanby remarked. "I had a very unpleasant interview with her. What has she buried? Why did she bury it?"

"Mr. Hanby," Doctor Byers said in her pleasant voice, "forget for a minute that she offended you. Consider her as a lonely old woman grievously deceived by a man forty years ago. Is she the first to become embittered? Is she the first to turn to what we call the lower animals?"

"You mean those dogs?"

"I mean those dogs. The dog is the only animal that has ever made an alliance with man, the only animal that will brave death for its owner, the only really unselfish thing in the world." Doctor Byers looked about her. "You have everything—one of the loveliest women in America for a wife, beautiful children, riches, and this home. My client has nothing but her love for dogs. The second shock of her life was when four of her dogs were poisoned here. I suppose, if I tell you she believed that Appleton did it, you will smile."

"Undoubtedly the poor creature is mad," said Hanby.

His voice was not so vindictive now. It was true, he thought, that he had everything—health, happiness, freedom from monetary care, a friend like Bill Pelham. Insensibly his mood softened.

"She had leaden caskets made and buried them out on a little lawn where a sundial stood. It shocked her immeasurably to learn that Mr. Seymour had removed the dial and made a tennis lawn. She is now in a position to pay for any damages. I may say I am here to make you an offer for this house considerably in excess of what you paid for it."

"It is not in the market," replied Hanby.

"Then will you let her have the little lead coffins removed?"

Hanby smiled a little.

"I suppose you know that my family, who are devoted to that grass court, will be singularly pleased."

"She is prepared to pay."

"No money will buy a ready-made grass tennis court," he reminded her.

"Is that a refusal?"

"Does it mean so much to that old woman?"

"It means so much that you would not believe it."

"All right!" Hanby said, sighing "Go ahead!"

But the lawn was not wrecked. With a sharp steel probe, the house detective discovered the leaden boxes. They were immediately under the net. The removal was skillfully done. Even Junior did not know it had taken place.

"Now that it is all over," said Doctor Byers, "I am commissioned to ask Mrs. Hanby if she will accept this emerald."

Hanby could see that the stone, set in a pendant, was of great value.

"We couldn't think of it," he declared.

"Why not? My client, now that her California property is clear, is certainly worth $5,000,000. She is a very remarkable woman. Please notice that she did not offer this as a bribe. If you do not take it, her directions are explicit. I am to throw it into the lake."

"Oh, Hill!" said Dina, later. "This is another of the things I've always wanted. It's the most gorgeous stone I've ever seen!"

"You never told me so," he replied, almost jealously.

"It would have made you unhappy to know there was something you could not give me."

"So that's the Selenos mystery!" he said, meditating. "Poor old soul! She couldn't bear the idea of young barbarians at play on her burying ground. Well, if she's happier now, I'm glad, but as a mystery it has flivvered badly."

Historians Unable to Place Queen of Sheba

The nationality of the queen of Sheba, mentioned in the Bible in connection with a visit to King Solomon, is unknown for certain. It is supposed, however, that "Sheba," is merely a variation of the word "Saba," which was the name of a country on the Red sea in southwestern Arabia. This region is now known as Yemen. The Sabeans were dark-complexioned white people and belonged to the same general family of mankind as the Hebrews. They had extensive colonies in Africa, where they mingled with the Ethiopians, with whom they are sometimes confused. The Abyssinians have a tradition that the queen of Sheba who visited Solomon was a monarch of their country and their royal family claims descent from Menelek, an alleged son of the queen of Sheba by King Solomon. The queen who made herself famous by her spectacular visit to King Solomon was very likely the same person known in history as Queen Balkis of the Sabeans.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Largest "Rooms"

The word "room" is not always interpreted in the same way. Some of the places listed might be excluded under some interpretations of the word. Among the largest of which we can find record are the battle gallery of Versailles in France, which is 394 feet long, 43 feet wide. The glass gallery in the same building is 235 feet long, 35 feet wide and 42 feet high. The great hall of the Vatican library, in Rome, is 220 feet long while the Galleria Lapidecia in the Vatican is 700 feet long

New energy for work in this Wake-up Food

POST TOASTIES

START your breakfast with a heaping bowl of golden crisp Post Toasties in milk with fruit —and you've made a grand start on the day. Energy is what people need in the morning. Here in Post Toasties, the Wake-up Food, is the kind of energy that gets to work for you quickly. It's called the Wake-up Food just for that reason!

And it's so good for boys and girls and grown folks because it is so easy to digest. They all just naturally take to that wholesome, delicious corn flavor.

Tumble the crisp flakes right out of the package into the bowl—they're easy to serve. Don't forget—there's just one way to get the Wake-up Food. Ask your grocer for Post Toasties—in the red and yellow wax-wrapped package.

No Time for Business, With the Smelt Biting

Charles Francis Adams, who resigned as treasurer of Harvard university to become secretary of the navy under Hoover, is as typical an Adams as Samuel, John Quincy and all the rest, and inherits from them a love of the sea and fishing and sailing—also their characteristic independence.

The story is told how, while he was practicing law and was scheduled to make a plea before the Supreme court he could not be found and finally a deputy sheriff was sent to procure his presence. The officer traced the lawyer to Hingham, Mass., hired a boat and rowed out to Hangman's island and found Mr. Adams.

The lawyer sent him back with a line scrawled on the back of an envelope:

"Can't come now; the smelt are biting like thunder."—Los Angeles Times.

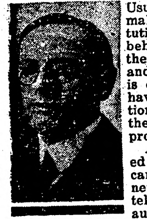
Investigations of Various Schemes for Defrauding Public Out of Money Disclosed by Bankers Association—Many Kinds of Fake Industrial Promotions Used as Bait.

By W. R. MOREHOUSE

Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association



W. R. MOREHOUSE

MILLIONS of dollars raised under the disguise of charity go to line the pockets of promoters. Ticket sales on raffles are commonly used, and while the loss to any one person who buys a ticket is small the aggregate loss for the United States runs into millions of dollars. Usually the promoters of these schemes first make a contract with some charitable institution to conduct a campaign for funds on behalf of the institution. They are to run the campaign in the name of the institution and share the proceeds. The whole scheme is often one of deception. To those who have been led to believe that their contributions go practically 100 per cent to charity, the following case we investigated should prove illuminating.

A number of promoters recently contracted with a charitable institution to put on a campaign to raise funds by the raffle of a new automobile. So far as the public could tell from the banners used in displaying the automobile, the full amount of the sale price of the tickets went to the institution. There was nothing to convey any other impression. Apparently it was open and above board and was being conducted by men who were contributing their time gratuitously.

For several days a new automobile, mounted on a truck, was driven up and down the streets, with banners telling about the drive for funds for the charitable institution. One day the truck would go by displaying one of the popular makes of automobiles. A few days later it would parade by displaying some other popular make. Periodically the truck would pull into the curb where it would park for several hours while the promoters pleaded with passers-by to take tickets on the raffle and thereby help a deserving charitable institution to meet its bills.

Thousands "Touched"

Thousands of people, touched by the appeal for help, bought tickets, the total sale running into the thousands of dollars. Contrary to the belief of the ticket buyers their contributions did not go 100 per cent to charity. Instead the charitable institution received but 26 cents on the dollar, the promoters getting 52 cents on the dollar as their net profit, or twice the amount received by charity, while the remainder of 22 cents on each dollar represented the amount charged against gross sales by the promoters as expenses.

In other words, every person who bought a 50 cent ticket for the sake of charity, contributed but 13 cents to charity and 37 cents to those promoting the scheme. Whether you give to charity or make an investment it will pay you to get the facts!

Unfortunately there is a general impression abroad that wildcat promotions are confined to oil, mining and new inventions. The truth is, many stock selling promotions are operated under the name of other industries.

False Claims

A certain group of promoters investigated offered for sale stock in a proposed woolen mill. In order to sell the stock they resorted to the use of misrepresentation and false claims. After renting space on the ground floor of an office building fronting on a busy street they began their campaign. Orally and by printed advertisements extravagant claims were made for the proposed corporation which were grossly false.

It was claimed that the promotion had the support of the Chamber of Commerce, but it did not have any such an endorsement. It was claimed that the corporation had a signed contract for the sale of millions of dollars' worth of its products—orders enough to keep the mills running day and night for many years and accordingly insure its success, but all that it had was a valueless fake agreement.

It was claimed by two of the principal promoters that they had had many years of experience in the manufacture of woolens,—in fact had organized and financed a woolen mill which is the largest in the United States. The facts were these two promoters had not been connected with any mills for over twenty years and they had attempted at different times to promote mills, all of which had failed. One of the promoters represented that formerly he was president and general manager of one of the largest woolen mills in Canada. The fact was the mill referred to had gone into bankruptcy and he had been caretaker of the plant.

HELP THE NEEDY

The "Charity" Drive

This story of misrepresentation can be duplicated in practically the whole industrial field, and because our industries are being exploited with intent to defraud, it behooves every investor to investigate carefully. He should consult his banker before drawing his savings out and losing them on some wildcat investment.

Ak-sar-ben

AK-SAR-BEN is decidedly a western invention which has developed into a nationally-known institution, with Omaha as its headquarters

It had its origin in 1895 and was organized as a knock-out entertainment feature for the Nebraska State fair, intended to "promote a better spirit of co-operation among the business men of Omaha, the state and the West."

Like most kindred organizations, it has its king and its queen, with their long line of attendants to their royal highnesses, and holds forth during the fourth week in September each year.

The red-letter day in its history came in 1910 when Colonel Theodore Roosevelt was initiated. "Here's where you get a touch of Hades" he was told as seven red devils took him in hand and "took him in." "Bully," roared the colonel, at the finish. "I have had the best time I have had in many days."

The name Ak-sar-ben—which is simply Nebraska spelled backward—smacks of oriental flavor—"the Syrian Ak meaning head of the family; Sar Arabic, the household, and Ben Hebraic, meaning brothers of the household, combined to give the meaning of the organization, the king, the body of the knights and the household—in short, all."

Its colors, red, yellow and green were chosen because they are symbolic of the principal state products and form an appropriate fall-festival color combination—red for beet green for alfalfa and yellow for corn

The organization boasts 160 acres of land adjoining the city and a grand-stand seating 10,000 people.

Governor Christianson has re-appointed chiefs of a number of the departments whose terms expired. They are Charles M. Babcock as state highway commissioner for a two year term; Ole O. Sageng of Dalton as chairman of the rural credit board for six-year term; N. J. Holmberg, commissioner of agriculture for four-year term; Paul Dinsinberg, state librarian for two years; E. K. Staples of Duluth, three years on state board of grain appeals; D. P. O'Neill of Thief River Falls, three years on same board; Maidee Hoag, St. Paul, three-year term on state board of hair dressing and beauty culture; J. H. Schoonmaker, St. Paul, state superintendent of building.

Ernest S. Wahman of St. Paul will succeed Edwin C. Murphy of St. Paul on the board of chiropody examiners.

Burhans Being Boosted For State Senatarship

Ira H. Burhans, local attorney, is acquiring considerable renoun throughout the district as a public speaker, and has been called upon for addresses at various functions thru the district in recent weeks. On June 23rd he spoke at the annual Woodman picnic at Karlstad, and is credited with delivering a fine andress at that time.

Ira's friends throughout the district are urging him to enter the race for the state senatorship at the next election, as his personality and talants are becoming known over a wider area. Ira's experience in the law, his ability as a public speaker and other characteristics would make admirable senatorial timber, and his fiery, direct manner of meeting an issue would make his presence felt in the legislative halls of the state.

Marshall County Fair

Warren, July 8, 9 & 10

The stage is now all set for Marshall county's greatest summer exposition, the Marshall County Fair, which will get under way at Warren next Monday and will continne day and night until late Wednesday evening.

Many from this community will attend one or more days of the fair. They will witness the greatest program ever arranged for a Marshall County Fair, while hundreds from all parts of the county will compete for premium honors with choice displays of agricultural products and household articles, according to advance reports made by J. A. Grindeland, secretary of the fair association.

Rural school exhibitors of the county will be guests of the fair association for one day of the fair, the fair management having sent out complimentary tickets to all exhibitors in this division last week.

With an enrollment of more than 250 members, the Boys and Girls club department will make its biggest showing at this year's fair, A. D. Collette, county club leader declared. The club members are preparing their exhibits in the best of show shapand will give a good account of themselves when the fair opens Monday. The Showmanship contests for the dairy and beef calf club members arranged by the Warren Sheaf will take place before the Grand Stand Tuesday afternoon. Two beautiful silver loving cups will be awarded to the winners by the Warren newspaper.

More than 30 professional horses have been entered to take part in the harness race program. Horses from Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Iowa, Wisconsin and Manitoba will make their appearance on the smoothe Warren oval in the fastest race card ever attempted in Northwestern Minnesota. Other races will include peny and running races for amateurs only, mule races, Ford Novelty races and one or more bicycle races for boys.

Another added feature to the 1929 fair program will be special exhibits by various state departments. Practically all available space has been taken in the exhibit buildings for these exhibits which will be worth coming many miles to see, said Mr. Grindeland.

Persons attending the fair next week will see two or more airplanes from the Minnesota Aircraft Co. of Minneapolis, who made arrangements with the fair management to make an appearance at the fair grounds. The planes will do much stunt work while at the fair. Lectures on aviation will also be given.

Band music by the Warren High school and Red Lake Falls bands will feature the daily programs. Seven distinct grandstand acts in addition to the fireworks spectcle "The Festival of Fire" are attractions that people must see to appreciate. Be sure to go for at least one day, and remember that there is something to do every minute of the time you are at the fair. Let's help make the 1929 fair a record breaker in attendance.

State Forest Service At Fair

The Minnesota State Forest Service will be one of the many exhibitors at the Marshall County Fair which will be held at Warren on July 8 to 10.

The exhibit will consist of pictures, a fire scene-in-action, wood samples, miniature models, wood curiosities, and many features which tell of forestry in the state. Live evergreen trees will be used to decorate the booth, and it will be an interesting place to visit.

Mr. C. M. Roberts of the State Forest Service will be in charge of the exhibit. He will be able to answer questions relative to forestry problems and will have a limited amount of literature to pass out to those interested.

Forestry and conservation is one of the most interesting questions which the people of the state have to consider. There is more general interest in the subject than ever before and it is because of the desire of the public to see and hear more about forestry that the State Forest Service is bringing the exhibit to the Marshall County Fair.

The Fair managers and the Forest Service invite you to visit the exhibit when you attend the fair.

LESSON 68

PRODUCTION: All signs point to increased demand for dairy stock. Butter has been a good price and promises to continue so. Consumption of all dairy products had increased. New uses are being found for dairy by-products such as dried skimmilk and buttermilk powder. Farmers in grain growing belts are increasing their number of cows.

MANUFACTURING: The change from sour to sweet cream for butter-making is simply another improvement in manufacturing dairy products. Twenty years ago the change was from churning raw cream to pasteurized cream. Today no successfull creamery chunrs raw cream. Every creamery worthy of the name is equipped for pasteurizing.

MARKETING: One of the largest buyers of butter in the United States, perhaps the largest in the world—a chain store company, has only two men in charge of the purchase of all their butter, one for the East and in the midwest. They buy from perhaps 1,000 creameries. These two buyers combine the buying power of 10,000 stores. The creameries they buy from sell their butter independently of one another. But they are changing this now.

Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Co.

The second annual Farmers Co-operative creamery picnic held at the "Old Mill" picnic grounds west of Newfoldon on Sunday was a grand affair. Over sixteen hundred cars were registered at the gate.

The program was fine. Good speakers, band music, kitten ball games, and horse shoe pitching contest were in order all afternoon.

Those whom had charge of the arrangements for the picnic are to be congratulated upon the fine way in which they had it all fixed up, as every ony who attended sure had a good time.

NEW YORK PLANS IMMENSE GROWTH

Envisages Great City of Twenty Millions.

New York.—A great city of the future, providing for a population of 20,000,000 with its industries, schools, homes and facilities for comfortable living, is envisaged in the regional planning committee's report for a new and greater New York city.

The report contains proposals designed to meet a situation of continuous growth in the metropolitan area. It considers a city of 5,528 square miles in and about New York, and recommends a vast system of airports, parks, playgrounds, railway, highway, rapid transit and parkway communications, and the building of new bridges and tunnels wherever necessary.

The report was sponsored by the Russel Sage foundation at a cost of $1,000,000 and represented the work of seven years. It was presented by George McAneny, a member of the regional planning committee, before a crowded meeting at the Engineering Societies' building recently.

The regional plan looks ahead to 1965 and takes as its city 22 counties in and about New York. The area considered is a tenth that of England, as large as the state of Connecticut and nearly five times the size of Rhode Island.

This world city, so vast that the mind of man had never before attempted to cope with such a problem, would be modeled not only for the efficiency of industry but for happiness of its millions of inhabitants.

There would be parks, playgrounds, golf courses and boulevards, and enough transportation facilities so that the people could move about comfortably and live without undue crowding.

Since the future of aviation is "an unpredictable thing," the plan provides for 16 new airports, making a total of 38.

From these airports passengers would be coming and going in a steady stream. The motif of speed would be maintained in a metropolitan belt line, connecting with all railroads entering the region, so that all points of the city could be reached easily by rail, both by passengers and in the handling of food stuffs and freight.

The city would contain 421 separate communities, in the states of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut—all the territory within a radius of 50 miles from the New York city hall.

Elizabeth Popular as Name for Babies

Berkeley, Calif.—A baby girl born now has an exceptionally strong chance of being named Elizabeth. This name has replaced Mary as the favorite for girls. Grace is increasing in popularity. Mabel, Ann, and Emily are on a decline.

These facts are pointed out by Prof. George R. Stewart, Jr., of the English department of the University of California, who has found that the popularity of given names may be ploted in cycles. His data were collected chiefly from records of officers and students at the university.

Predicting what names will be fashionable is difficult, he states, but it is likely that Frances, and various forms of Ann and Emily are destined to grow in popularity until they become too numerous, when they will lose favor again.

Professor Stewart's researches show that 12 conservative names have been used in every generation in the past fifty years. These, in order of popularity in 1925, are: Elizabeth, Mary, Helen, Dorothy, Margaret, Marie, Katherine, Louise, Ruth, Eleanor, Lucille and Evelyn.

Egg Under Tombstone 12 Years Still Fresh

Fayette City, Pa.—Why an egg buried twelve years ago should have remained fresh until it was dug up is the question interesting chemists here.

The egg was unearthed in Mt. Auburn cemetery by Frank Lowers and N. E. Murphy while they were replacing the headstone over the grave of Pierce Kendall. Knowing it must have lain under the headstone since Kendall was buried, twelve years ago, they brought it to this city for examination. Both the yolk and the albumen were fresh.

Bans Sunday Auto Washing

Fall River, Mass.—As a result of the revival of an old blue law, Fall River motorists no longer will be permitted to have their automobiles washed at garages on Sunday. Police Chief Martin Feeney has dusted off the ancient statute and has indicated that it will be enforced even if it becomes necessary to make arrests.

Gold in Soil Under Busy Halifax Street

Montreal, Que.—A gold lead, containing particles of pure gold and traces of galena and sulphides of iron, was discovered in downtown Halifax by workmen excavating under a filling station on Barrington street for the installation of a gas tank. The ore will be assayed and the lead investigated to determine whether metal is present in a workable quantity.

FIERCEST FIGHTERS AT LAST CONQUERED

Yaquis of Mexico Finally Accept Fate.

Mexico City.—Mexico's fiercest warriors, the Yaquis, have at last agreed to be commanded by non-Yaqui leaders. For 400 years—300 under Spanish rule, 100 under Mexican—the Yaquis maintained their independence, refusing to be conquered. Beaten at the end by the government, with their country in ruins, they now go one step further in becoming Mexicanized by their acceptance of a "foreign" commander.

Four hundred Yaqui soldiers are at Port Perote, a mountain near Orizaba, in the state of Vera Cruz. This is the group which for the first time in history has submitted to having a non-Indian leader. The war office's announcement of a change in the organization of this Yaqui force was regarded as signifying the disappearance of Yaquis as separate units. Hereafter they will be part of the army. Colonel Enrique Morfin Figueroa has been assigned to the group under the new arrangement.

Manzo Conqueror of Yaquis.

The actual conqueror of the Yaquis was Gen. Francisco Manzo, one of the leaders of the present rebellion who recently crossed the United States border at Nogales to escape falling into federal hands. The Manzo campaign against the Yaquis, undertaken three years ago, was organized with 13,000 troops and equipment which included nine airplanes.

At that time the Yaquis controlled a region extending 100 miles north of Guaymas, in Sonora, and which included some of the best lands in the republic. The stretch under Yaqui ownership extended along the Yaqui river valley in a district larger than the Imperial valley of California and with water resources three times as great as those of the Imperial valley.

Today the only Yaqui country left in Yaqui power is in the Bacatete mountains. But the power is small. All the warriors are gone or killed. Women and children and old men predominate in the last citadel.

As in the present revolution, the rebel Indians in Yaquiland lost their fight partly through the government's use of the most modern arm of war—the airplane. The nine planes that Manzo had on his front flew constantly over Yaqui territory bombing and spreading terror. The federal planes drove the inhabitants of Bacatete, the capital, into the mountains and finally destroyed it.

Planes Aided in Conquest.

Ammunition ran low after the war had raged incessantly for many months, the plane raids continued unceasingly, and finally, cut off from the world and beleaguered from the air, the Yaquis surrendered. Their surrender, however, was conditional. They agreed to take service in the Mexican army provided their own chief, General Ignacio Mori, should be permitted to continue as their head.

Their liberty curtailed by the rigid discipline of the army, the Yaquis were not always good soldiers, although their valor in fighting was unquestioned. The group at Perote was for this reason perhaps little better off than prisoners.

The Yaquis still preserve their ancient language and customs. Although they are Christians, in common with other Indian tribes of Mexico, they have mixed the symbols of Catholicism with the signs of the old gods.

While the Mexican government had to all but exterminate them in order to pacify them, it seems likely that the Yaqui fighting tradition which has existed for 400 years will continue in Mexican memory at least for a long time to come.

France Grants Asylum to War Foe's Widow

Paris.—By a special act of the ministry of the interior, Zita, last of the Hapsburg empresses, has been granted the same asylum in France which is granted to any other foreigner who lives up to the laws of the republic and does not engage in political intrigue.

The French government considers the ex-empress of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy not in the light of a widow of a ruler once at war with the allies, but as a sorrowful mother who is trying to educate her children. Investigation disclosed that Zita was not engaged in politics and, therefore, was entitled to residence in France if she chose to live here.

Frisco Chinese Become Stock Market Players

San Francisco, Calif.—No more is it "no tickee no washee" in San Francisco's Chinatown—it's just "tickee."

For the city's oriental population has become interested in the stock market and recently a Chinese newspaper carried for the first time in history the mysterious brokers' quotation symbols in Chinese.

One brokerage firm has organized a special Chinese department with a Chinese in charge. The Chinese are said to speculate mostly in groups, dealing in 5,000 share lots.

All-Woman Affair

New York.—The painting of a huge sign in front of the Hotel Belmont is an all-woman affair. Ann Derickson, contractor, has girl assistants, college graduates, who wear knickers, sweater skirts and red bandannas.

WILL START SOON ON BIG AQUEDUCT

New York Plans to Increase Water Pressure.

New York.—Work on boring a gigantic aqueduct 20 miles long and 500 feet beneath the surface of New York is to begin in a few months.

The tube, which involves one of the major engineering feats of modern times, is to be installed for the purpose of increasing the water pressure for the residents of Brooklyn and Queens.

Sixteen shafts are to be sunk along the route to the 500-foot level, where hundreds of men are expected to spend four years in boring through the muck and rock. The shafts themselves will be so deep that the Lefcourt-National building, the city's newest 40-story Fifth avenue skyscraper, would find its tower well below street level if it could be dropped into one of them.

It was announced that 16 electric mine hoists and 62 mine locomotives have been ordered for use in creating the buried aqueduct. It is to begin at the northern end of Van Courtlandt park in the Bronx, extend south and east under the borough, cross twice under the Bronx river, proceed toward Stony Point, cut under the East river to Long Island, cross under Queens and Long Island city, proceed almost the whole length of Brooklyn and terminate at Hamilton avenue, opposite Governor's island in Brooklyn.

The hole to be bored will be 19 feet in diameter—size enough for three motors to be driven through abreast. The workers after descending the shafts and becoming accustomed to the air pressure necessary, are to ream out the tunnel with modern boring machinery and line its walls with a foot-thick coating of concrete as they proceed.

Boys Stand on Head to Honor Gift to Village

Leighton Buzzard, Eng.—This town has a queer name but even queerer is its manner of expressing gratitude. Figuratively speaking the town of Leighton Buzzard stands on its head to say "Thank You."

In the days of Charles I, a wealthy London merchant, Edward Wilkes, left several parcels of land to Leighton Buzzard, the income from which was to be devoted to charity. He stipulated in his will that the ceremony of "beating the bounds," in which the parish officials go over the chief boundaries tapping them with a long willow stick, on Ascension day, should be concluded with a public entertainment.

For years Leighton observed this stipulation and then suddenly decided it would be nice to honor the memory of Sir George by having a boy stand on his head on each parcel of land during the beating of the bounds.

This has gone on for generations, and each year, months before the ceremony, there is a strong competition among the boys of the village to be elected the official "headstander."

While the parish official reads the clause of the will dealing with each parcel of land on which they are standing, the boy remains in a feet-up position on the parcel. This custom has shown no signs of dying out.

Magnet Draws Needle From Brain of Baby

Pottsville, Pa.—A nine-month-old baby seemed recovering in a hospital after a sewing needle, lodged upright in the center of its brain, had been removed by means of a strong magnet.

Mrs. Jennie Harvey several days ago saw the threaded end of the needle protruding from her infant daughter Rosanna's skull about three inches above the left eye. Then the needle disappeared. At Pottsville hospital an X-ray showed the location of the needle in the baby's brain. Dr. J. B. Rogers selected the spot on the baby's skull to which he thought the topmost end of the needle was nearest. He applied a powerful magnet and the needle came through the baby's scalp, blackened but intact.

There is no explanation of the needle's presence.

Dean Says Scholarship Highest in Many Years

New Haven, Conn.—Dean Clarence M. Mendel of Yale believes scholarship is now on a higher scale than it has been in many years. Taking issue with recent statements of Chief Justice William Howard Taft, who bemoaned a decline in scholarship, Dean Mendel declared interest in college studies reached its lowest ebb between 1895 and 1905, but has shown a steady upward trend ever since.

Whittles Lamp From Pole in 1,700 Hours

Vermillion, Ohio.—After ten years of whittling with a pocket knife, George Stump has an elaborately carved lamp. Starting with a section of a telephone pole, Stump spent more than 1,700 hours spare time producing a two-foot electric lamp, circular in shape and containing hundreds of integral ornaments. The lamp revolves by means of an electric motor and is valued by the carver at $2,000.

IN THE GRAND STAND

EMMA WILCOX had paid her quarter and climbed into the grand stand because she was too tired to stand up another minute. She had come to the fair solely for the sake of bringing the children, not because she had any longing for it herself. Fairs, like many other things, had lost their pleasurable significance when her husband died, leaving her with four boisterous boys and girls to bring up alone. The last time she had been here Jake had brought her, and she thought of that happy day now as she sat on the hard seat gazing down upon the crowd below and trying to follow the doings of the twins and Merle and Arthur.

Emma was a small woman with a patiently smiling expression, lovely fair hair which was always a little untidy and blue eyes that seemed exactly to match the faded gingham of her home-made frock. In her lap were her purse, half a bag of popcorn and a squawker which the twins had commanded her to keep for them until wanted.

A flash as of a mirror turning in the sun caught her eye and she glanced toward the entrance to the grounds where through the gates down the little hill came a great glittering car. Honking for room it moved down the track to the parking space which was at one side of the grandstand.

"The Lull's new car!" Emma thought. "And Lucia is in it driving it all alone!"

The sight of the large, superb figure on the uncut mohair cushions had given her a fresh sense of the inequality of life. For she and Lucia Lull had started even twelve years back. Indeed, it might be said that the prospects were slightly in Emma's favor, for at that time Jake Wilcox had seemed a young man of mightier promise than George Lull. But somehow the fortunes of the Lulls had risen while those of the Wilcoxes had declined. George Lull had invested in something that had made him rich overnight, while Jake Wilcox died, leaving his family with about half as much as was needed to support them. As a consequence Lucia Lull drove a $4,000 car with the inexpert grace of a timid woman, while Emma Wilcox walked in shabby shoes which she had to earn for herself, and in the hardest way, too, for with four children to do for, taking boarders was no joke. Lucia, doubtless, had driven over to the fair grounds because she had nothing else to do, but Emma was there because her children found in the fair a great playground, and she was determined to deny them no pleasure that was innocent and reasonable.

When Emma, after a glance at Lucia Lull's car, looked back to the place where her children had been she found the twins missing from the little familiar group of four. Anxiously her gaze scanned the scene before her in every direction, then with intense relief she saw them approaching the grand stand, trotting along, clinging hand to hand in spite of their eight years, Bob and Bab! Dressed as near alike as boy and girl may be. She smiled at the dear, quaint, little figures. They were coming to the grand stand to find her, wanting another nickel apiece, may be. She began to fumble in her purse and had succeeded in locating the coins by the time they joined her.

"Well?" she said, straightening Bob's hat and Bab's hair ribbon.

"It's going to rain," Bob said.

"It's going to rain hard!" Bab strengthened her brother's assertion.

Emma, assured by the blue sky before her, merely said:

"Then you better stay here with me, dears. Are Merle and Arthur coming, too?"

"They're watching the man with the Beach Flirts. You pay a nickel and throw a ball—"

A low rumble of thunder interrupted the child.

"Dear me!" Emma said. "That does sound naughty, doesn't it? But the sky is all blue."

"You can't see it here," Bob said. He had taken his station one side of her while Bab did the same on the other side.

"No. It's all behind the grand stand, coming down Third Brook," Bab amended.

"Well, we shall be all right here. It may pass away, and if it does come it won't last long" Emma said comfortably.

The instant darkening of the air, another crash and snap of lightning that lit a downward rush of raindrops had sent people flying to shelter. Emma saw Arthur and Merle fly toward the long building where the poultry was housed. They would be safe and dry there. A procession of people were entering the grand stand, whipped into agility by the breathless downpour. Emma heard a voice:

"Let me in here, please?"

She looked up into Lucia Lull's face.

"How pale she is!" Emma thought, and then remembered that when they had been girls in the same set Lucia's fear of thunderstorms had marked her for many a good laugh. Why hadn't Lucia stayed in her car? But of course it was like her to leave it and run to the grand stand for shelter.

"Come sit on mamma's lap and make room for the lady," Emma said and took Bab upon her lap, while in the press and confusion Lucia dropped into Bab's place. She was thinking: "Lucia hasn't really spoken to me for years, not since she got lifted to her present station. I wonder if she will now. I don't care. I shan't wait for her to do so. Poor thing! She is horribly frightened—and it is terrible."

It was appalling. Bab hid her face in her mother's shoulder as the storm broke with a rage of elements. If the wind had turned every soul in the grand stand would have been drenched although that was not the worst of it. Some one began to sing and others to beat time. A sharp crack interrupted and some one cried: "Sit still!" Emma felt a creepiness of apprehension. Suppose the old building, unused to such a heavy weight, should collapse? The best thing to do in any case was to "sit still."

"It's leaking right down upon me!" Bab said.

It was. The rain had forced its way through the roof in a thousand places. Emma raised her umbrella and hoisted it over her brood. Then she saw a trickle descending upon Lucia's silk-clad shoulder. She saw also that Lucia had closed her eyes to shut out the glare of lightning, and that her hands were shaking with nervous fear.

Instantly Emma shifted the umbrella over the woman beside her, then, as a blast of thunder seemed tearing the earth to pieces, she put her arm about Lucia.

"It will soon be over now," she said. "Bob, how many did you count between the flash and the report?"

"Only three that time—Oh! Now I counted six!" The gallant little fellow cried.

Lucia, moaning, leaned close to Emma's comforting embrace.

"Oh! If I only stayed at home," she said. "I don't see what made me want to come. But I was lonely and—"

"I counted ten that time!" exclaimed Bobby.

Lucia made an effort "Why, you are giving me all the umbrella!" she said. "And you are getting wet, all of you. Here! I can't take it, Emma."

Emma smiled.

"We haven't anything on that will spoil. Your dress will be ruined, Lucia."

Bab, trying to be hospitable, held out the bag of popcorn, and to Emma's amazement Lucia reached in a white hand and took a few grains.

"Mamma," Bob said, "the hot-dog man ran away and left his stand and the hot dogs are all burning up."

"He will come back now. Look! There comes the light!" Emma said.

The storm had gone on up the valley. The rain dwindled into drops like a hose that is shut off. People began to appear, the band struck up and Arthur and Merle came splashing through the puddles toward the grand stand to join their mother.

"Are you going home now, Emma?" Lucia asked. "If you are I will take you in my car."

"Thank you, Lucia, but there are so many of us, and the children—"

It was Lucia who now put her arm about Emma while her eyes rested wistfully on Bab's charming little face.

"I envy you these children—and your courage—and calm self-reliance in a time like this and—everything, Emma," she sighed. So it was that the big tires of Lucia's car splashed through the puddles instead of Emma's worn shoes. She sat beside Lucia, quietly happy. She had found her old friend again and she was sure from Lucia's manner that she should never again lose her.

Explanation of Birds' Keen Sense of Flight?

For many years scientists have puzzled over the mysterious sense that enables birds to guide their flight accurately over long distance in all kinds of weather. Migrating birds sometimes fly tremendous distances. The Arctic tern, for instance, flies from the Arctic to the Antarctic every year—completely around the world—and the golden plover flies from Nova Scotia to Venezuela, some 2,400 miles, although it is out of sight of land during the whole trip. Fogs, storms, cross winds, do not prevent them from reaching their destination, and they frequently return to the very tree they left the year before. Homing pigeons have been known to find their home from a point as distant as 1,500 miles.

The newest theory on the subject comes from John T. Nichols of the American Museum of Natural History, who suggests that a tiny radio compass may be a part of the bird's brain. Aviators have devices which enable them to steer their plane along a magnetic beam emanating from a radio station by means of signals which inform him when his plane is off the course. It is possible that birds have some natural sensitiveness to magnetism which would keep them flying in a straight line through any kind of weather.—New York World Magazine.

Perpetual Motion a Myth

No perpetual motion machine has as yet been invented. The law of the conservation of energy is an absolute barrier to all schemes for obtaining by mechanical means what is called "perpetual motion," or a machine which will do an amount of work greater than the equivalent of the energy, whether of heat, of chemical combination, of electricity, or mechanical energy, that is put into it. Such a result would be the creation of an additional store of energy in the universe which is not possible by any human agency.

Concentration

Concentration simply means being oblivious to outside influences of all sorts when you are in competition.—American Magazine.

What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains. Miss Selenos, a former tenant, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Pelham becomes a member of the household. A phone call from a man who declares he is an old acquaintance of Hanby's, urges him to preserve a part of the grounds as a bird sanctuary. The Hanbys take possession of the Gray house. A stranger introducing himself as Frederick Appleton, calls at the Gray house and is welcomed because of his interest in bird life. Hanby engages Appleton as his agent. The Selenos mystery is explained.

CHAPTER VII

Consider for a moment the case of the unfortunate Adolf Smucker, bereft of a job and soured by the difficulty of finding another. Until he was discharged he had not known that his status among his neighbors was wholly due to their mistaken estimate of the importance of his position in the office of Hilton Hanby, of Leonard street, woolen merchant. The only jobs open to him were of a sort that would have lowered him in the eyes of his friends, his family, and the young men paying court to his daughters.

Nor was this all. Like many another careful man, he had deeded his property to his wife, to find, too late, that such a beneficiary regards the gift as entirely her own. He was to learn that Mrs. Smucker had long known of his inefficiencies as a provider. After that fateful sentence, "Dolf, you've fired yourself," she knew that the task of looking after things was hers. She had long wondered at Mr. Hanby's unusual forbearance.

Smucker was conscious that he had fallen from the domestic pedestal. He saw that he was no longer of prime importance. His meals were now no better than those given these many years to his old father; and the old man dared to jeer at him, to question his interpretation of political events, and to denounce him as a Bolshevist!

The wild look in Smucker's eye became wilder. He was no longer compelled to shave every day. Mrs. Smucker and the girls pressed his pants no more. He frequented more intensely those little clubs of malcontents whose members spoke behind locked doors of the time coming when the land would be as red as ever Russia was red. They did not especially welcome Smucker, since they were mainly of foreign birth and speech; but the chief organizers, who knew men, marked him down as one who could be worked upon if needed.

There must always be some first man to hurl a bomb or throw phosphorus cakes among ripening crops. The best were those like Smucker, who had nursed grievances against richer and more capable men until hatred flamed up at a word of encouragement, and who had no exact knowledge of the details of the movement, or of the names of the active conspirators. Smucker came to depend upon these haters of rule, these enemies to society, for the cheap cigarettes he smoked. He posed as an honest man whom capital had thrown, broken, into life's gutter. They affected to believe him. He was a tool to be used at need.

One day the Smuckers, in family council, decided that Adolph should ask Mr. Hanby for some such letter of recommendation as might enable him to get a clerical position in one of the Weehawken factories. His trousers were pressed, and his shoes shined, and he turned cityward. He did not like the prospect at all, but the Smuckers in council had a massed psychology which overrode all objections.

His family was against him. Those who had listened to him respectfully now turned and jeered. People passing him wondered why he talked to himself so constantly. They could not guess that he was again experiencing vengeful visions of what he would do when he got into power. In these dreams he now included even his old father, who made ten dollars a week, his taunting children, and the two young men who despised him as a future father-in-law.

By this time Hilton Hanby occupied a more prominent position than ever in these schemes of punishment. Hanby was the prime cause of it all. Hanby was capital incarnate. Well the Commune was coming soon!

Smucker demanded to see Mr. Hanby.

The office boy, who had suffered much in the past at Smucker's hands, licked his lip when he saw his enemy.

"He's out of town," said the boy, "and he wouldn't see you if he was here."

"I'll wait," said Smucker loftily.

"We have no sleeping accommodations," said the boy. "He won't be back for weeks, and you'd be in the way."

"You were always a liar," said Smucker.

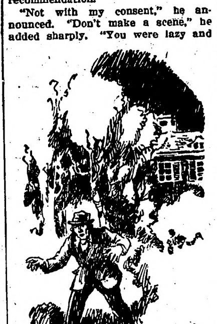
"And you were always a thief," shouted the other. "I've got your number! I've seen you pinching stamps, and I got the blame for it!"

"You are the serf of a capitalist," said Smucker. "You are lickspittle of the forces that hold us down. We shall have uses for your kind when the day comes!"

"You are a d—d anarchist!" cried the boy.

Here he was interrupted by the office manager, who looked over his glasses at Smucker and frowned. He listened to Smucker's request for a recommendation.

"Not with my consent," he announced. "Don't make a scene," he added sharply. "You were lazy and insubordinate, and you padded our expenses. I'll put that in the letter, if it helps you. You are taking up office time. Get out!"



With a Screech Hardly Human, Smucker Dived Into the Nearest Shadows and Began a Race for Life.

"Never!" said Smucker, snarling. "I'll wait till Hanby comes."

The office boy opened the door in the railings and took Smucker by the shoulder. He was a strong boy, and he ached to use his muscles on the man he detested.

In the corridor, outside, Smucker fell. His head struck a gleaming cuspidor placed conveniently by the elevator to tempt the promiscuous expectorator. Here he lay, screaming imprecations. Here, he declared, he would wait until a policeman came to see how he had been assaulted.

The office boy, feeling a little scared, withdrew. Olsen, the elevator man, implored in vain. A nervous tenant telephoned for the police.

All might have been well for Smucker, and he might have won his proposed suit for damages had not he made the mistake of denouncing the officer as foully as his political associates denounced those in charge of the nation's destiny.

"I'm a bloated timeserver wearing the livery of official degradation, am I?" snapped the policeman. His strong hand fastened itself about Smucker's neck and hauled him to his feet. "There's a day coming soon when my fat throat will be cut, is there? Come and tell that to the sergeant at the desk!"

The policeman knew Smucker's sort. He had no intention of taking him anywhere but out into the street. There were many such half-crazed men in Manhattan. He would throw a scare into the fellow—and he did.

Smucker now saw that escape was his main object in life. He observed, too, that the policeman's grip was not very strong. He ducked, broke the hold, and disappeared into the crowd.

It all happened as the officer had expected, and he went about his duty; but the episode made an enormous difference in Adolf Smucker. He was now a hunted man. The police wanted him. He was escaping from the tyranny of capital. His home would already be marked. He was an outcast.

He dived into the subway station at City hall. An hour later he was sitting on a bench near Grant's tomb. A woman with a baby carriage moved hurriedly away when he suddenly burst into merriment. Smucker had forgotten all about his father's little hoard of savings—thirty dollars—which he had taken as the old man lay asleep after his night's work at the docks.

A train noisily puffing along on the river bank gave him a new idea. He would find Hanby, and would punish him as the author of all his misfortunes. Cordons of police were probably waiting for him at the ferries, but they would not be watching the railroad stations yet. He remembered that Pine Plains was the station, and that it was served by the Newburgh, Dutchess and Columbia railroad.

It was dark when Smucker skulked along the road from Pine Plains to the Gray house. It was a long, weary walk, and Smucker usually tired easily, but tonight he walked on air. He talked aloud. He denounced his enemies and exulted in their doom.

Reason and madness were fighting for the possession of his mind. Perhaps Smucker had never been wholly sane. It needed some such precipitating cause as this to give the battle to the darker forces. When big motor cars passed him, he spat at them.

It was almost ten when he reached Hanby's estate. Sheltering behind a great elm, he saw two people cantering toward him. The bright moonlight revealed Hilton Hanby and his wife. Mrs. Hanby wore a light linen habit.

The menace of gallopers! One of Smucker's orator friends had described how he had been ridden down by the czar's Cossacks. Hanby and his wife had nearly ridden Smucker down.

Then the intruder came upon the swimming pool by the house. He recognized the Hanby children and Pelham. The big noisy man was Brophy, the banker. There were half a dozen others, laughing, diving. Other civilizations had wantoned thus on the eve of disaster, Smucker gloated.

The sound of music led him nearer the brightly lighted mansion. He peered through a rear window, and saw that here even the servants reveled. He scowled as he recognized the impudent girl who had let him into the duplex apartment. She was dancing with a manservant. So the Hanbys had flunkies to wait on them now!

Smucker had not determined on his manner of revenge. He realized that he must employ cunning, not force. He was a lone man among many. He cursed himself for not buying a revolver. He had not even a knife. He withdrew from the house, and sank into the shadows. He would lie down somewhere and plan what to do.

A sound as of the clicking of a rifle trigger made him turn his frightened head. He realized in that moment that he had forgotten the possibility of police pursuit. Now he was conscious of its imminence.

On a little mound fifty feet distant, his body silhouetted against the bright moonlight, stood a man, with a rifle resting in the crook of his left elbow. So on a hundred rolls of film had Smucker seen warders and jailers stand, waiting to kill escaping prisoners. As he looked, the unknown raised his rifle. It seemed to the terrified man that it was pointed directly at him.

With a screech hardly human, Smucker dived into the nearest shadows and began a race for life. He heeded not where he went, so long as he could seek darkness and escape from the white and mocking moonlight. That he was approaching the house he did not notice until the lighted windows brought him to a stop.

Vigilant Law Officer Had Seen 'Em Doing It

Speeding across the country from Los Angeles to New York by motor, two motion-picture celebrities were held up by the constable in a small town and, as usual, the officer had all the advantage on his side. He refused to give them a ticket and finally compromised by taking them directly before the judge.

The constable was very hot under the collar and declared he would make it hot for them, but the couple were hardly prepared for the outraged officer's charge in court.

"Your honor," he announced pompously, "this is a couple of motion-picture people an' the charge I'm preferrin' against them is arson."

"Arson!" roared one of the accused. "What do you mean! We were never out of our car till you flagged us!"

"You was burnin' up the road, an' I'm preferrin' the charge of arson against you," insisted the constable, and even the court had to laugh as he let them off with a five dollar fine.

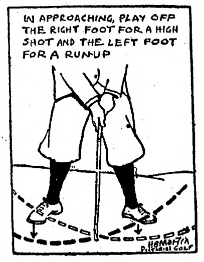
PICTORIAL GOLF INSTRUCTION

By H. B. MARTIN



IN APPROACHING, PLAY OFF THE RIGHT FOOT FOR A HIGH SHOT AND THE LEFT FOOT FOR A RUN-UP
H.B.Martin
Pictorial Golf

Two Distinct Ways to Approach

IN APPROACHING the hole there are two shots, the high pitch often with back spin, and the low run-up shot where the terrain will permit. In playing the high ascending shot or pitch, one must play this off of the right leg which gives one more of a chance to get the ball up in the air quickly. The shot must be played off the right foot.

The run-up calls for a low ball, so it is necessary to play this well forward without a great deal of follow through. Play this shot off of the left foot permitting the club to go through to prevent a topped ball. If one will practice these shots by playing first one and then the other according to instructions, he will get the idea very quickly.

PERMIT THE THE CLUB HEAD TO COME THRU BY USING THE HANDS AS A HINGE AT THIS POINT THEY ACT AS THE HUB OF A WHEEL
H.B.Martin
Pictorial Golf

Hands Act as Hub of Wheel in Iron Shots

IN ALL iron shots we strive to get distance with accuracy, but we must not press for a gain in yardage. If the ball is hit firmly and the shot well timed, it will travel a long ways, or just about as far as we plan that it should go. It is, therefore, necessary that we keep the body still and let the hands take charge of the swing.

The hands take the club back and bring it down acting like a hinge to a certain point. It is then that the hands take the position of the hub of a wheel letting the clubhead go through with all possible speed. There will be no snap of the wrists, as it is called, if the hands move along with the clubhead.

DON'T ATTEMPT TO CUT THE BALL IN CLOVER - KEEP THE CLUB HEAD IN A STRAIGHT LINE
H.B.Martin
Pictorial Golf

Avoid Fancy Shots in Playing Out of the Rough

WHEN a golfer is in clover he is not always in luck. It is hard to play out of thick clover in the rough as the club, if not directed in just the right path, will cause the ball to slip. The mashing of the weeds and wet clover does not make a dry impact. Never attempt to cut the ball or try any fancy shot out of any kind of rough unless you are sure it will offer no resistance to the club head coming through properly and will provide a clean, dry hit.

Come on to the ball from directly behind and keep the club in this position all the way.

Awake to Necessity of Checking Soil Erosion

An enormous waste is shortening man's stay on the earth. It is soil erosion. In Texas where soil washing has gone on for years with cotton cropping, farmers are now terracing their rolling lands, with the encouragement of far-sighted bankers and landlords. The terraces are barriers thrown up 8 or 10 inches above the field level, which follow the contour line of the hillsides. Beyond these barriers rain water accumulates and gradually sinks into the soil instead of washing great gullies into the hillsides. Terracing not only checks soil washing, it increases the water-holding power of the soil and produces larger crops. Within two years 2,808,250 acres of Texas land out of 30,000,000 in cultivation, have been terraced. There is no more important conservation. — Capper's Weekly.

Hawaiian Bird Species Saved From Extinction

Two Hawaiian birds that were thought to be virtually extinct are believed now to be on the increase—a possible result of the change of government of Hawaii from monarchical to territorial. This unique combination of result and cause is due to the fact that the iwi and the apapane birds—of bright-colored plumage—were hunted for their feathers, with which old-time Hawaiian artisans made the brilliant feather cloaks of royalty and chieftains. The iwi bird was distinguished for bright red feathers and the apapane had gay-colored plumage used as bordering for some of the cloaks. Since monarchism has vanished and a territorial form of government has been set up, the feather cloaks are now museum rarities or kept only as the heirlooms of families. The birds are said to be on the increase in the Hawaii national park, on the island of Hawaii.

Oil Fuel Proves Value

Crude oil is in exclusive use as locomotive fuel on 1,500 miles of railway in British Columbia, says the Canadian Forest and Outdoors Magazine. This has so nearly eliminated danger of fires being set by railway agencies that even in heavily forested territory where crude oil is used, special patrol is not required.

WHAT FARM ACCOUNTING MEANT IN THE MANAGEMENT OF A FARM

Successful Farmer Tells How Pencil Helped Guide His Operations and Swell His Income—An Aid to Better Credit—Shows Profits and Prevents Losses.

THE owner and operator of one of the most successful dairy farms in Wisconsin prepared recently for the Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association a first hand statement of the part farm accounting has played in the management of his enterprise. This operator, W. J. Dougan, tells the following story:

"When I started farming I began keeping a simple cash account, but soon found that it was not sufficient accounting for farm purposes. Such a record did not take into consideration the vital factors of improvements, growth of livestock or depreciation.

"Since 1910 I have kept a complete account on the accrual basis. The accounts, however, are no more than any farmer can easily keep. The outstanding benefits from keeping such accounts might be listed as follows:

The Way It Works

"1. Income tax reports made easier.—Accurate and dependable income tax reports can be made from the yearly accounts. By keeping them on file I am always ready to satisfy the tax inspectors.

"2. Accounting makes possible a budget system.—With the accumulated data of the past years, I can make out the budget for the coming year. The income being fairly stable, the budget problem is to adjust the expenditures. If one branch of the business will need extraordinary expenditure such as new machinery, there must be a cut in some other branch, such as building or livestock purchased, or fencing.

"3. Accounting gives a true basis for credit.—Especially has accounting meant for me larger credit and happy relations with my banker. With a complete financial statement before him the banker can intelligently determine what credit I should have. With a full knowledge of the farm profits in the past, I know what credit I should accept. No farmer or business man should accept credit from his bank unless he is able to put the money into productive investment, and his margin of profit assures the ability to repay the loan within a reasonable time.

"For the farm this reasonable time cannot be three or six months. The farm turnover is too slow for that. A helpful and just period of farm credit for working capital must be from one to four years.

"There is another benefit from accounting—the benefit of knowing whether one is going up or down. By extra sales one might be flush of money and buy heavily, thinking he is coming out ahead, but in reality he is sacrificing the future. On the other hand, one might feel pinched, and have little money to spend, but in reality he is laying up capital."

The bankers Agricultural Commission has suggested the following form of farm credit statement, indicating the records necessary to be kept:

"The Unknown Soldier"

TO APPROPRIATELY honor our gallant, unknown, World-war soldiers through the appropriate honoring of a single unknown, dead soldier, congress, in 1920, passed a resolution to bring back from "over there", the body of an unknown hero for burial, with befitting ceremony, in Arlington National cemetery.

Accordingly, from among the endless rows in four foreign cemeteries one unmarked grave in each was selected and the boxes removed. No record showed who these heroes were or whence they came. At Chalons-sur-Marne, while French troops guarded, a sergeant laid a bouquet on the flag-draped box of the hero which he had selected as the "Unknown."

This box was placed under guard, enclosed in a metal casket, placed in state, borne to Havre, carried aboard the Olympia (Admiral Dewey's flagship at Manila); brought to Washington, loaded on a gun carriage, placed in state in the Capitol where the President's wife placed across the flag the badge of ownership of the mothers of our land.

Two days later the casket was taken to Arlington on the Virginia hills across the Potomac river from Washington, followed by the President, General Pershing, members of the senate and house of representatives and other distinguished dignitaries.

A salute was fired, the Marine band played, prayer was offered; the President expressed the sentiment of the American people, pinned upon the casket the Medal of Honor and the Distinguished Service Cross; decorations of foreign countries were added by their representatives; a scriptural lesson read, "Nearer My God To Thee" sung, the casket carried to the sarcophagus at the amphitheater and taps sounded.

Today, this grave is one of the most visited of all of our public shrines.

American Citizenship Paper To Cost $20.00

America is no longer a free country where citizenship and protection are granted, almost for the asking, to foreign born people entering this country.

Like almost everything else, the price of citizenship is going up. After July 1st, 1929, the cost of obtaining citizenship papers will be $20, whereas previously the total cost has been $5.00.

The new price list, under the revision as authorized by the passage of a recent bill in congress, is as follows: Declaration of intension, $5.00; certificate of arrival, $5.00; petition for citizenship and issuance of certificates of citizenship, $10.00.

The same bill authorized any alien, eligible to citizenship, in whose case there is no record of admission, to record his entry after July 1, providing he entered prior to June 3, 1921, if he has resided in the United States continuously since his entry, if he is a person of good moral character and if he is not subject to deportation. The cost of this record of entry will be $20.00.

Farmers Elevator Fixed Investment $65,000,000

"A survey of fixed investment in farmers' elevators made by the U. S. Department of Agriculture," the Farmers Elevator Guide reports, "shows that the average investment in plant and equipment is $17,973.00 per co.

"From this average and other information it is shown that the total fixed investment for all companies is at least $65,000,000.00. This is nearly $5,000,000.00 more than their total paid-up capital stock, the difference being made up from surplus.

"In computing the total," the report goes on to say, "consideration has been given to possible inflation as well as to the fact there are without doubt farmers elevators operating of which the Department has no record. The showing is conservative.

"These are significant figures and show that grain producers already marketing their own grain cooperatively through farmers' elevators have a large paid-up permanent investment in their own facilities that will always be indispensable in cooperative grain marketing under any system."

Lutherans To Hold Big Meet At Thief River Falls

The 400th anniversary of the publication of Martin Luther's catechism will be celebrated by Lutherans of the Augustana Synod of Northwestern Minnesota at Thief River Falls on Sunday, August 4, according to plans now being farmulated by church officials of the Northwest. Franklyn Greeber of Chicago will be the principal speakers of the event which will attract several thousand people from all parts of the Red River valley.

Eat Candy After Meals

Candy is a real food, yielding a surprising amount of energy in proportion to its bulk, according to Miss Hope Hunt, nutrition instructor of the home economics division, University Farm, St. Paul. However, the indiscriminate use of candy usually results increased appetite for other foods, she says, and so she advices eating it after meals rather than before.

The richness or concentrated nature of candy is illustrated by the following comparison. An ounce of nut chocolate, such as is commenly sold in bars, will give two and one-fifth times as much energy as an equal weight of white bread, 13 times as much as an ounce of cooked carrots, or as much as 4.4 heads of lettuce.

Rightfully, used, we may assume that candy has its place in the diet, Miss Hunt says, but we should consider whether it would not be better to obtain our energy from foods which at the same time would sypply more liberal amounts of the necessary minerals and vitamins.

The Farmers Co-operative Creamery will hold its community picnic at the R. A. Werner farm about 4 miles southwest of Holt on Sunday, July 21.

Vigilance Is Required

Several reports are being circulated about poulry thieving having already been started in this community, and it probably isn't to early to start the annual campaign against the two legged that cost the farmers of this territory several thousand dollars each year.

With good prospects for a record turkey crop, it is quite certain that the temptation for the light fingered folk will be stronger than ever. This increased temptation should be at least offset by increased vigilance on the part of poultry owners in protecting their flocks.

The Farmer, a farm magazine that has wide circulation through this territory, offers a service along this line that should be more generally used. This service not only includes detective service to communities in which any considerable number of thefts have accured, but also offers a protective feature in a registered marking system that should be effective as a deterrent. The cost of this service is well within the means of every farmer.

Nature Lovers

They were a typical group of nature lovers. When Sunday morning arrived, they packed a fine lunch and went for a day in the out-of-doors.

Before the day was well advanced they found a beautiful little grove overlooking an attractive lake. Here they established their picnic headquaters.

They hacked and cut the trees for no understandable reason. One of the boys shot several attractive song birds with his new little rifle. They built a fire close to a majestic old tree.

After they had gone their beautiful little camp ground looked like a small city dump. Rubbish was scattered everywhere. Dead birds and a dead squirrel were lying near the picnic grounds.

So long as people take this attitude when they get into the country, just that long may they expect to see land posted with "No Trespass" signs.

PRODUCTION: All signs point to increased demand for dairy stock. Butter has been a good price and promises to continue so. Consumption of all dairy products had increased. New uses are being found for dairy by-products such as dried skimmilk and buttermilk powder. Farmers in grain growing belts are increasing their number of cows.

MANUFACTURING: The change from sour to sweet cream for butter-making is simply another improvement in manufacturing dairy products. Twenty years ago the change was from churning raw cream to pasteurized cream. Today no successfull creamery churns raw cream. Every creamery worthy of the name is equipped for pasteurizing.

MARKETING: One of the largest buyers of butter in the United States, perhaps the largest in the world—a chain store company, has only two men in charge of the purchase of all their butter, one for the East and in the midwest. They buy from perhaps 1,000 creameries. These two buyers combine the buying power of 10,000 stores. The creameries they buy from sell their butter independently of one another. But they are changing this now.

War Secretary Inspects New Mobile Weapon

Navy Now Ready for "Sub" Disasters

Divers and Equipment Prepared to Meet Future Major Accidents.

Washington.—The navy is prepared to meet the next major submarine accident, should one occur, with far more promptness and efficiency than was possible when the S-51 and S-4 sank with a large loss of life. A score of expert divers stand ready to provide the human element necessary to using the "hookeyes," marking buoys and "lung" which offer mechanical means of rescue.

In a large water-filled cylinder at the Washington navy yard from 20 to 25 divers are constantly in training under artificial pressures simulating those to be found at from 150 to 300 feet below the surface. These men, trained by Lieut. Henry Hartley, assistant in charge of salvage operations on the S-4 and S-51, are graduated after three months and are distributed around the coast at all places where submarines operate.

Two Get U. S. Medals.

After stringent tests to determine their physical and mental fitness for deep sea diving, they are trained to work with tools far below the surface. Attaching pontoons, connecting air-lines and other hazardous tasks are taught them thoroughly.

The idea of such a diving "school" originated with Lieut. C. B. Momsen, Chief Gunner C. L. Tibbals and Lieut. Henry Hartley. The former two recently received the distinguished service medal from President Hoover for developing the "lung" device which enables men to breathe while rising from a sunken "sub."

The need for better trained divers—and more of them—had been impressed on the navy by the S-51 tragedy. When, in December, 1927, the S-4 met with a similar fate, plans for this training were accelerated.

With limited funds a diving tank was built at the Washington navy yard, the men training part in December and the rest September 24, 1928, and were "graduated" February, 1929. Their final tests revealed five of them were capable of working at a depth of 150 feet, two at 175, one at 200, one at 250, and 13 at 300 feet.

This means, according to naval officers, that there are always available trained divers capable of working in any depth of water in which a submarine crew can be rescued.

Three Months' Course.

The Navy department keeps a list of all these men, what their diving record is, and where they may be reached. Should a submarine sink, a long-distance telephone call or telegram would bring to the aid of the "sub" a diver capable of utilizing the mechanical devices the navy has developed in any depth down to 300 feet.

No attempt, it was said, was made to train divers to descend to lower depth, for, with the present structure of submarines, they would be crushed should they go below 300 feet and attempts to rescue would be useless.

Present plans of the navy call for classes of 25 men at the diving school constantly. The course requires about three months. As soon as one group is graduated another takes its place.

Enrollment in the course, it was said, is voluntary. The divers, so far, have been recruited mosty from the petty officer class. No commissioned officers are included among the school's present alumni.

Within one year, it was said, work on the problem of submarine safety—carried out largely by Momsen, Tibbals, and Frank M. Hobson—has produced what the navy regards as almost sure salvation for submarine crews—the "lung." Light and compact, they can be stored easily in the limited spaces aboard undersea craft. The navy has ordered enough of them to provide one for each man on submarine duty.

The "lung" is merely a breathing apparatus, with a rubber tube which may be attached to the nose. It does not slip over the head as do diving helmets. And, by ascending slowly while using the device, one may avoid the much dreaded "cramps," it is said.

In addition to this invention the navy now has well designed "hookeyes" to which pontoons may be attached to raise sunken craft. Marker buoys have been developed also. These, simple to release, mark for surface boats the spot where the submarine lies.

Charleston, S. C.—Still intact after serving 189 years as a tombstone in St. Michael's cemetery here, a four-poster headboard of an old wooden bed has been uncovered by a cleanup crew working in the cemetery. The unusual marker was part of the bed used by Mrs. Mary Ann Luyten during her lifetime.

SUNKEN GALLEYS SOON TO YIELD ANCIENT SECRETS

Archeologists and Historians Speculate on What Will Be Disclosed.

Rome.—Now that the time is approaching when the Roman galleys in Lake Nemi will yield up their 2,000 year old secrets, archeologists and historians here a speculating as to what is likely to be discovered.

A couple of feet of wooden poop of the larger galley already shows above the water of the lake, and it is now only a matter of a few months before the galleys will be high and dry, or at any rate entirely accessible and explorable.

The galleys are generally supposed to have been luxurious houseboats of the Emperor Caligula, but historians, as a matter of fact, are not in agreement on this point. Some think that they belonged to Tiberius.

Fragments of the galleys brought to the surface during the last fifty years have revealed the names of both emperors. A piece of lead piping taken from the larger galley, and now in the Rome national museum, has Caligula's name on it, while some titles used for an ornamental pavement in the same vessel which were brought to the surface are marked with the name of Tiberius. It is recognized that possibly both emperors used the famous pleasure boats.

It is the firm conviction of many archeologists that the vessels at the bottom of Lake Nemi, or the larger one at any rate, possessed handsome libraries, composed of papyri, pergamens and wax writing tablets, bound in silver and ivory, such as the wealthy Romans used.

These papyri were often enclosed in metallic cases, called "capsae," and there is a fair presumption that this from of protection may have saved the floating library for the curiosity of the modern world.

Another object known to be in the larger ship is the emperor's strong box called the "arca ferrea." Cardinal Colonna attempted as far back as 1446 to salvage this, but the rudimentary means available at the time were quite inadequate to the task. This strong box may well contain a hoard of gold available for the imperial entourage while the emperor was passing the time of the summer heat of Rome on the lake.

Stenographer Collects for Writer's Cramp

Springfield, Mass.—"Writer's cramp" formed the basis of a damage suit in which Miss Maude Waterhouse, stenographer and typist, was awarded $238.14 by the state industrial accident board. She claimed her employer had forced her to take 80 to 90 letters per day and that she developed "writer's cramp," which kept her out of work for more than fourteen weeks

UNEARTH RELICS 10,000 YEARS OLD

Find Sites of Old Towns Near Lake Constance.

Friedrichshafen.—Relics of the days of 10,000 years ago have been unearthed from the banks of calm Lake Constance, and reveal that the famous lake which borders on Germany on one side and Switzerland on the other must have been greatly in favor with the lake dwellers.

The excavations have been going on for some time, and important finds have been made. The remains of 48 villages have been discovered in the water as well as in the adjoining fields. Ten thousand years ago the water is estimated to have been approximately a dozen feet higher than today.

One of the villages has been reconstructed, and opened for visits by tourists. It is situated near Uhlensdorf on the German bank. Another, near Sipplingen, is being dug out and reconstructed now. It dates back to the time when man was unacquainted with agriculture. The finds in this second village are proving exceptionally rich.

Owing to the projected regulation of the lake, which renders research work much more difficult, it is expected that the next three years will see the paleologists very busy at work all around the lake.

Interest in the Lake Constance excavations has been heightened by the attention attracted to the quiet Alpine lake by the fact that the Graf Zeppelin has taken off for all its flights from Friedrichshafen, which is situated on the borders of Lake Constance.

Apparently Innocent, Convicted of Murder

Berlin.—Another case of an apparently innocent man being sentenced to death for murder has been uncovered in Germany. Three years ago Emma Hoge of Groenloh, a village near Osnabruek, was found dead under rather mysterious circumstances. A preliminary autospy convinced the authorities that she had been murdered. Evidence pointed to Hermann von Dielingen as the murderer. He was arrested immediately, tried, convicted, and sentenced to be executed.

Before the sentence was carried out, it was commuted to life imprisonment, a higher court pointing out that there still remained some doubt as to the exact manner in which the girl met death. Since then her body has been exhumed and all its various organs microscopically examined. As a result physicians on both sides of the case now feel certain that her death was entirely due to natural causes. As they have reconstructed the incident, she was taken either with a heart attack or a fainting spell as she walked along the lake in which her body was later found, and fell into the water. At the trial it was asserted that Von Dielingen had first killed her and then had thrown the body into the lake.

Von Dielingen is still in prison, where he has been for the last three years. As yet no movement has been started to release him.

Use Electric Needle to Hunt Buried Pesos

Kansas City, Mo.—The latest in treasure hunting apparatus has been taken to Dodge City, Kan. It is an electric needle by which E. T. Mecklin of Moline, Ill., hopes to find 42 bags, each containing 1,000 Mexican silver pesos, said to have been buried four miles west of Dodge City in 1853.

The story is that a Mexican train of 120 wagons and 82 men on the way to Independence, Mo., over the Santa Fe trail with a load of silver, was attacked by Indians. The savages were repulsed and then began a five-day siege which culminated with the massacre of all except one of the Mexicans. The Indians burned the wagons and left the money. The survivor buried the treasure in the mounds which still may be seen west of Dodge City and went back to Mexico.

Newburg, Ore.—Prof. Perry D. Macy, head of the history department at Pacific college, is Pacific's "campus idol."

Screams were heard in the women's dormitory. Macy answered the call for help. When he arrived he was confronted by five young skunks.

He removed the "playful" little animals and restored peace to the dormitory, coming through the ordeal uncontaminated, unscathed, unharmed, or whatever is the proper word.

HELP PEARL CLAMS IN EARLY GROWTH

Expert Hopes to Develop Valuable Species.

Columbia, Mo.—By raising clams in test tubes and protecting them during their most dangerous period of life, Prof. Max Ellis, Missouri physiologist and United States bureau of fisheries investigator, hopes to provide the pearl button industry with new and valuable pearl clam shells, as well as an ample supply of the ordinary varieties.

The first two or three weeks of a clam's life, by far the hardest in its career, will be made secure by his process which provides an ample supply of food.

Lead Uncertain Lives.

The young fresh water clam or mussel leads an uncertain life. Only comparatively few of the millions left by each mother clam to shift for themselves in the depths find the right kind of fish on which to live for the necessary parasitic early existence.

The minute potential clams ride along with their fish, seeking growing beds. And many times a mussel that thrives on a sandy river bed lets go of its fish in a mud-bottom stream. During this three-month period, almost every chance is against the clams. Without the proper environment they die in a few days, or are swallowed up by the tiny water animals.

Using the nutritive fluid he has devised, Doctor Ellis, with mature eggs taken from the female can develop in ten days or two weeks, millions of clams ready for planting in the environment that suits their type.

Experiments Successful.

Successful experimental plantings have been made at the bureau of fisheries station at Fairport, Iowa. In five to eight years they develop shells worth, for the best quality, $125 to $150 a ton.

Professor Ellis plans to develop, by careful planting, desirable species not now successful naturally. Some of these make the big lustrous sweater buttons and novelties of special irridescence.

Streams will be replenished with laboratory mussels in the same way that they are restocked with fish.

One small test tube can contain millions of potential pearl buttons. Yellowish liquid that barely covers the bottom of a tube will feed eight or ten thousand dollars worth of shells in their earliest stages.

Seek to Break Will So Others Can Get Money

Madison, Wis.—Here is a case in which the heirs to an estate want to give $20,000 of the $50,000 left them to somebody else.

Mrs. Angelina Pierce left a will naming six heirs and ordered her $50,000 estate divided into five parts, four brothers and sisters to receive a fifth each and a nephew and a niece each to receive a tenth.

Two of the six heirs died before Mrs. Pierce and each left heirs. Mrs. Pierce's will did not provide for such a situation, although the remaining heirs know she wanted the heirs of her heirs to receive their share of the estate. So the remaining heirs named in the will are asking the County court to reduce their shares from about $16,000 each to about $10,000 each, and to give the $20,000 thus left remaining to the heirs of Mrs. Pierce's deceased heirs.

New "Parachute Silk" Is Made From Cotton

Washington.—For some time government experts have been experimenting with American-grown cotton as a promising substitute for parachute silk, now imported from abroad. The cotton must be treated in some way to impart to it the desirable qualities of high-grade silk.

As a result a cotton yarn has been developed, mercerized under modified conditions followed by the application of a "dope," which appears to comply with the requirements.

To prepare sufficient materials to manufacture full-sized parachutes, the problem has been shifted from a laboratory to a production scale. The yarn was spun in the experimental cotton mill of the bureau of standards. A bale of "Arizona Egyptian" cotton, grown in Arizona, was used.

French City Has Limit on Saxophone Playing

Nancy, France.—A law against the noctural use of the saxophone is effective.

So far as known, Nancy is the first community to establish a saxophone curfew. The limit is 10 p. m.

One may awaken the quick and the dead with jazzes and dirges from the horns of this lugubrious instrument all day long, but on the stroke of 10 p. m. the curfew goes into effect.

Faint Scares Bandits

Butte, Mont.—Two bold, bad bandits displayed nerve and guns in the faces of three girls late one evening, but dropped their roles of fearless desperadoes and fled when one of the girls tossed up her arms and dropped in a faint.

Falls 2 Floors; Unhurt

Buffalo, N. Y.—Miss Jean Podkowinski, seventeen, took an early morning walk, fell two stories to the ground and within 20 minutes was back in bed again sound asleep. The girl, a somnambulist, fell on ground recently dug and was uninjured.

SILK WAS WORN IN OLD GREECE

Expensive Fabrics Referred to in Literature.

New York.—Were the clinging sculptored draperies of the Parthenon Fates made of silk? Were the diaphanous and alluring feminine garments described in Aristophanes' comedies of the same sheer silkness that arouses diatribes from the pulpits today?

Though silk is not supposed to have been known to the Greeks until the Fifth century A. D., Gisela M. A. Richter of the Metropolitan Museum of Art is inclined to think that the suppressed females of classic Greece knew silk, and its beautifying advantages and transparencies long before.

Linen and wool were the common fabrics worn on that luminous peninsula, but classical literature contains many references to thin, highly expensive garments called Amorgian tunics, Miss Richter declared recently in a report to the Archeological Institute of America.

They are thought to have been made of especially fine linen from the island of Amorgos, a rocky bit of land in the Aegean, with, however, only a few tiny valleys fertile enough for the cultivation of flax; hardly enough, according to Miss Richter, to support an important industry of even a high priced article.

Supporting her theory by research among ancient Greek and Latin writers she has established a hypothesis that the havoc-creating Amorgian tunics were made of wild silk introduced from the East, where it was known from the earliest times.

The name Amorgian (a specific word for silk appearing in Greek only after the Roman era) she accounts for by the fact that the island was a convenient station on the trade route from the east via the Persian gulf, Babylon and Tyre.

It's the next door neighbor of the island of Cos, which by the time of Aristotle was considered the home of Greek silk manufacture, so what was more natural, Miss Richter concludes, "than to call these silk garments Amorgian, just as later the Romans called them 'Coae vestes.' To call a material after a place from which it is supplied is, of course, a well known practice."

Tells Hubby to Feed New Bungalows Himself

Chicago.—Mrs. Anna Scharlog, 3903 North Cicero avenue, may know her bungalows now, but the time was when she wouldn't let her husband, Alexander, "bring them into the house," he declared.

"She thought a bungalow was just some new kind of a dog," Scharlog told Judge Sabath after his wife, who recently sued for divorce, haled him into court for contempt on the ground he hadn't told her about the four bungalows he had built.

"When I wrote her about them, she told me she didn't want them around. And she said I'd have to feed them myself."

"Perhaps," suggested the court, "she couldn't read your writing and thought you meant buffaloes."

Both admitted they hadn't been on speaking terms for ten years and communicated with each other by writing.

Find New "Ocean Deep" 28,380 Feet Down

Tokyo.—The Carnegie Institute's magnetic survey yacht Carnegie reports the discovery of a new "ocean deep" on the floor of the Pacific between Japan and Guam, in Lat. 23.8 N. and Long. 144.1 E.

The "deep" is 28,380 feet in depth (more than five miles) and nearly nine miles wide at the greatest depth. It has been named J. A. Fleming Deep, in honor of the assistant director of the department of terrestrial magnetism at Carnegie institute. As far as known it is the sixth deepest hole in the sea.

The yacht encountered a typhoon outside Tokyo bay.

Rats Halt Traffic

Cleator Moor, England.—A horde of rats followed by a swarm of their lesser kin, the mice, stopped traffic on a main road near here recently. The rats kept closely grouped and made the road appear black as they crossed. Several thousand rats crossed the road in the ten minutes.

Gold Hidden in Log

Eldorado Springs, Mo.—For years John Bettis had seen an old log lying in his farm yard. Recently he needed fire wood and decided to cut the log into stove lengths. He sawed it open and revealed $250 in gold dust hidden in a can thrust into an auger hole.

French Want Money, Not Checks for Pay

Paris.—The French minister of labor has ruled that wages of laborers must be paid in money and not in checks. Many factories sought to adopt the American method of payment by check, but the laborers refused because of the time required to go to the bank, prove their identity and obtain payment. Hereafter they can refuse checks and oblige payment in money.

SAME PRESCRIPTION HE WROTE IN 1892

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as today. People lived normal lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe bowel stimulant.

This prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative. It has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds, fevers. At your druggist, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

RECOMMENDS IT TO OTHERS

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helps Her So Much

Cleveland, Ohio.—"I sure recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to any woman in the condition I was in. I was so weak and run-down that I could hardly stand up. I could not eat and was full of misery. A friend living on Arcade Avenue told me about this medicine and after taking ten bottles my weakness and nervousness are all gone. I feel like living again. I am still taking it until I feel strong like before. You may use this letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. Elizabeth Toso, 14913 Halo Ave., Cleveland, Ohi

What the Gray House Hid

The Mystery of a Haunted Mansion

—By— Wyndham Martyn

THE STORY

Hilton Hanby has purchased a country place—the Gray house, near Pine Plains. Miss Selenos, a former tenant, warns him that the house is under a curse. Further alarming details are impressed upon Adolf Smucker, Hanby's secretary, by a man who claims to have been chauffeur for Sir Stanford Seymour, former occupant of the place. The Hanbys laugh off the warnings. But they are shocked when they hear that the caretaker of the Gray house, a man named Kerr, has been mysteriously murdered. Hanby consults his friend Pelham. The family starts for the new home. Appleton, a clerk of Douglas and Smith, the agents from whom Hanby bought the Gray house, urges Pelham to dissuade Hanby from occupying the Gray house. Pelham becomes a member of the household. A phone call from a man who declares he is an old acquaintance of Hanby's, urges him to preserve a part of the grounds as a bird sanctuary. The Hanbys take possession of the Gray house. A stranger introducing himself as Frederick Appleton, calls at the Gray house and is welcomed because of his interest in bird life. Hanby engages Appleton as his agent. The Selenos mystery is explained. Smucker, out of a job after the loss of his position with Hanby, becomes embittered against him as the author of his misfortunes, and plans revenge.

He turned away and made for the bird sanctuary. The wire netting about it he climbed nimbly, and then, unheeding thorns and brambles, he crept like the hunted thing he was to its black center. Suddenly he stepped into nothingness. He felt himself falling. Then came a blow, and he was no more aware of time and space.

* * * * * * *

When Tim Hanby, intent on adding a white owl to his collection, had carefully aimed his twenty-two at the creature as it sat on an elm branch, he had not been prepared for the extraordinary intervention that saved its life. As his finger caressed the trigger, there came a bloodcurdling scream, and some large animal had sprung from the base of the tree. Tim felt that it was no disgrace to flee immediately.

* * * * * * *

Hanby had not been near his office for two months. An hour's dictation cleared up his correspondence, and he went to the Hardware club for luncheon.

"Hello, Douglas!" he said, stopping at the table where an elderly, gray-haired man was sitting. "I called you up this morning, but you were busy."

"Glad to see you," Douglas replied heartily; "I've missed you. What's it like to be a landed proprietor?"

"The best life in the world," Hanby declared; "but a darned sight more to do than I thought. Why did you recommend me to buy those farms?"

"A sound investment. They'll be wanted for a country club some day. How are your improvements coming along?"

"They are finished, thanks to your admirable Appleton. Douglas, how could you let a jewel of a man like that go?"

There was a curious smile on the heavily lined face of the real estate man.

"So Appleton has been up there again, has he?" inquired Douglas.

"Again? What do you mean?"

"The Gray house holds some singular fascination for him—that's what I mean. You ask why I let him go. You call him a jewel. I did that for more than thirty years."

"And yet you refused to raise his pay, and stuck some jackanapes over him. I thought you were a better business man than that."

"Tell me just what he said," Douglas returned.

He listened to Hanby in silence.

"Now, hear me," he resumed. "I fired Appleton. I didn't refuse to raise his pay, and I put nobody over him."

"You fired Appleton? Douglas, you must have been crazy! What for?"

"Ostensibly because he was drunk and impertinent."

"Appleton? Why, he never drinks!"

"Another reason was because he had deliberately misled me as to his family life. Yet a third was because he had manipulated accounts. I don't mean that he took money from me. I mean that he had robbed Peter to pay Paul. I mean specifically that for years he had been charging other clients for the money he used to effect repairs on the Gray house."

"On my house?"

Douglas nodded.

"For years he has been interested in your house—for the last ten years, anyway. Another thing—Southard called me up a month or so ago, to ask why I allowed a man like you, with a lovely family, to buy a house where people died from bad drains. For the last few years Appleton has kept clients from buying that house. You ask why. I can't explain. Ask Appleton. I did, and was told to go to h—l."

"The Appleton I mean is a man of sixty, plump, smiling, and married to an invalid to whom he is devoted. He calls himself Darby and his wife Joan."

"That's my Appleton, too. I took it upon myself to see her. There was another illusion gone. She is invalid, but as to being devoted, tells openly he wishes she were dead, so that he could marry the younger woman he runs around with."

Hanby put his hands to his head.

"This is too much!" he murmured. "Remember, I had him in my house for a month."

"I had him for more than thirty years. Up to the time he met this musical comedy person—she must be forty now—he was a good husband. Now he takes the woman out to dance halls. He has money saved, but he's spending it. I have never been so utterly deceived in any one. His wife, who is religious, thinks he's possessed of a devil, and maybe she's right. She says he has any amount of money. I had his books examined, and he hasn't embezzled one cent. All he has done is to divert money from other houses to the upkeep and repair of the one you're in. You've no kick coming. He saved you money. What was he doing for you?"

Hanby explained. He told Douglas what his improvements had been, their cost, and the time in which they were executed. The real-estate man made calculations on the back of a menu card. Fortunately Hanby had exact particulars as to dimensions.

"Here's another puzzle!" said Douglas. "To complete the work in that time he must have worked many more men than you paid for. I know prices and labor scales in New York state. It amounts to this—he went up to you to get the very job you pressed on him. Why? Search me, Hanby—search me! Another thing—he must have paid for extra workmen out of his own pocket, so that he could get the work done by a certain time. Again you may search me!"

Hanby frowned.

"He may have wanted the workmen off the premises for some purpose of his own."

"What purpose?" Douglas asked.

"How should I know? By the way, did you ever deny permission to a former tenant, a Miss Selenos, to go back and dig something up from the garden?"

"I denied her right to do some excavation. Appleton told me she was a maniac who wanted to bomb the place. I turned it over to him. Anything in what he said?"

Hanby told him of the affair of Miss Selenos and her pets.

"I don't mind admitting that Appleton has destroyed a lot of my faith in mankind," Douglas said presently. "He was the one man I would have wagered my soul on as being square and white."

"Ever see the woman?"

"That was how it all came out. I ran out of gas near Mineola, and had to go to a very third-rate roadhouse. There was Appleton, in a neat tuxedo, doing fancy steps with a good looking ex-actress. I looked at him very hard. I couldn't believe it was he." Douglas laughed a little. "He had the d—d insolence to say that if I annoyed his lady friend by making baby eyes at her, he'd knock my block off. Next morning he didn't try to make excuses. He had a hang-over, and he told me much of what he had concealed since 1890 or thereabouts. It appeared that he had always hated me and envied me my good luck." Douglas grew almost irritable. "No more about Appleton, or I'll change my table!"

* * * * * * *

Hanby did not get back to the Gray house until late. He said a few words to the younger people and then asked Dina and Bill to come to the library.

"I've had a great day," he announced. "Incidentally I have discovered that my judgment of character is no better, let's say, than Bill's."

"And me a house detective!" Bill cried. "Your reason totters!"

"We've all been deceived but Les."

"Les?" cried Dina. "Oh, Bill, you're joking! That boy?"

"Dina, light of my life," said Hanby, "if there is a more thoroughgoing old hellion than Mr. Frederick Darby Pickwick Appleton, let me learn his dishonored name. I've seen his Joan this afternoon, and I know what I'm talking about. Listen! I'll begin with what Douglas told me and then come to my interview with that poor crippled old woman."

"It seems impossible!" commented Dina, at the end of her husband's narrative.

"I begin to suspect myself," Bill murmured. "Appleton!"

"It took me that way when I first heard it, but it cannot be doubted. He came here to get the opportunity to be in and near this house, and to see what was going on. He has always been coming and going. I've heard something that may bear on it a little. I got it from Mrs. Appleton. Her brother was a very rich man, but he speculated and died in poverty. There were a few years when it looked as if she was going to be his heiress; and Appleton was going to use the legacy to buy the Gray house and make it a fashionable roadhouse. He said there was a fortune in it. Fishing, golf, swimming—everything that was needed for a residential hotel. Perhaps 'roadhouse' isn't just what he meant, but that was Mrs. Appleton's term."

"But if her brother died in poverty, where would he get the money to buy this place?" Bill asked.

"I don't know. I admit that it doesn't solve the question why he should still be interested in it. There is no solution, as far as I see, and yet we know that something is going on here, or something is planned to go on, and that we stand in the way and they want to remove us. I wonder if we ought to consult the police!"

"And get all kinds of notoriety! Oh, Bill, don't think of it! Nothing has happened—not even a tramp."

"D—n it," said Hanby, "I'm a simple type. If I like people, I trust them absolutely. I go the limit for them, and they can have everything I've got. This gives me pause—whatever that means." He put his hand on his wife's arm. "Come and dance with me, Delilah, ere I challenge Bill to mortal combat!"

"Not a care in the world!" said Celia, a little later, watching her parents and talking intermittently to Les.

"Why should they have?" he answered. "Come to that, why should you have any cares?"

"Life bores me," the girl yawned. "I talked like that in the beginning of my sophomore year. It used to make quite a hit. You've forgotten to ask what is life. I always did that."

"Les," she snapped, "I hate you! Your apperceptions are nebulous."

"That's a new one, I admit," he said. "I'll use it."

"To others girls?"

"Why not? If you won't have me, I must try my luck somewhere else."

"You have an attenuated soul substance, Les."

"Feed it with affection. It will expand."

"The main trouble with you is that you couldn't surprise me in any way. I know all your mental reactions. You never jump off the road. I could surprise you, Les, and I've a good mind to." Celia paused. "Perhaps I ought to tell you the whole romantic affair."

Leslie Barron looked at her, frowning. The word "romantic" spelled danger.

"Let the clutch in," he commanded.

"You are not the only man here," she said. "Last night, when you were playing pool with Bill, I went out to the swimming pool. It was midnight. I went out to pick some asphodel."

"What's that?"

"A romantic blossom to be found in most gardens of verse. Les, I met a most adorable, godlike man. He looked at me like a wild faun and then disappeared in a cloud of star dust."

There was something harder and more resolute about Leslie than Celia had ever seen before. She had an uneasy impression that there were depths in his nature as yet unplumbed by her; but she would not tell him so.

"Don't be rough," she said, and took her hand away from his. "Don't scowl at me so."

"Godlike strangers who disappear in star dust interest me," he said slowly. "I'd like to break his d—d neck!"

"But you couldn't," she answered. "He is much more splendid than you are."

"You admit talking to him?"

The young man's tone annoyed Celia.

"I admit nothing."

"I accuse you of talking to him," persisted Les, whose voice was husky.

"Of course, if you listened," she said airily, "why should I deny it?"

Great Queen of Song Attempted Too Much

The failure of many artistes who remain unknown comes from the fact that they do not know in what direction their power lies. The failures of great artistes nearly always come from their lack of knowledge of their own limitations. Few can, indeed, go on for long years with a record like that of Madame Adelina Patti, of whom it is said that she had but one real failure in her artistic life. She was over fifty years old and had been a leading opera singer for over thirty years when, attracted by the opportunities which the role of Carmen gives, she undertook to sing it at Covent Garden, London. With her voice still beautiful, her stage technique at its strongest and her immense popularity, even she could not adapt herself to a role that was conceived for a different type of voice and a different type of person. She, the greatest singer of the century, failed to do what scores of lesser artistes were doing well, and what had proved the inspiration of some of those who were nearest to her in greatness.

Treating Kodak Prints

The bureau of standards says that glossy kodak prints are obtained by placing the wet prints face down, on a ferrotype plate, and peeling them off when dry. A piece of plate glass will sometimes answer for the ferrotype plate.

About Three Lovers

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)

"AND one was fair
With golden hair,
One was dark and sallow,
One was red with ruddy head
And a face like mutton tallow!"

sang Amy Colton's youngest brother as he swung on the white front gate that opened upon the village street.

"Bobby, be still," cautioned Amy from her seat on the front porch. "You know that if father should hear you—"

"Yeah, I know what he'd do," tittered the irrepressible Bobby. "He'd pretend he didn't hear me, and he'd go down to the pasture gate and laff his head off."

"Well, suppose you come along with me, and we'll laugh our heads off in company, Robert," said Farmer Colton, as he lifted his youngest by the slack of a loose collar and steered him around the corner of the house. Bobby heard Amy's low-voiced cry, "Oh, father, don't hurt him—he merely thinks he is funny!"

What Mr. Colton and his youngest said to each other is not a matter of history, but it brought forth no tears from either one, and perhaps a better understanding. Once the farmer said urgently:

"Say it again, Robert."

And Bobby repeated the raucous verse that he had himself composed about the three suitors for his pretty sister Amy's hand.

"And who is the one with ruddy head—Dirk Blithen—eh?"

"Sure!" crowed Bobby. "And the dark sallow one is Hughie Brown."

"And the golden-haired one is, I suppose, Mark Lansing?"

"Sure."

"And which one does Amy like?"

"Aw, I don't know. She likes to ride in Hughie's car, I guess. But Dirk—she's always scrapping with him—he's too red-headed, I guess."

"If you're going down to the post office with me, son, we better be going along," remarked Mr. Colton, as they moved back to the house. As they went out of the side gate they looked back and saw the shadowy forms of two young men on the front porch and heard the sound of Amy's soft laughter.

After about a half hour of light badinage, Hughie Brown made his farewell and departed. Shortly afterward Dirk Blithen, having flared up over trifling nothings, took his departure. Then it was that Amy, sitting there alone in the deep shadow of the honeysuckle, heard a sweet tenor voice singing softly:

"One was fair
With golden hair,
One was dark and sallow,
One was red with ruddy head
And in years quite young and callow!"

"Who is there?" inquired Amy gently.

One was fair
With golden hair—

came the answer.

"Mark!" she exclaimed. "Where did you hear that absurd verse?"

"Bobby's own composition. He asked my opinion," rather smugly.

"It is such utter nonsense," murmured Amy. "Now, do tell me if you didn't bring over a new book? Ah, I was sure that you tucked it behind you. What is it, Mark?"

"'Three Lovers,' by Blatchett—I know that you've never read it because it is warm from the presses today."

"And I am to read it?"

"If you please. Let me know how you like it, Amy. Your opinion means a whole lot to me."

"I didn't know, Mark," she whispered.

"Doesn't your heart tell you anything?" he asked, leaning close to her. And just at that important instant in Amy Colton's life the small runabout that belonged to Hugh Brown paused beside the gate and uttered a derisive hoot.

"Wait a little while, please, Hugh," called Amy.

Whereupon Hugh began to sing "Waiting at the Church" in a nasal tenor.

Mark Lansing got up hurriedly. "Oh, you are going out, Amy? I hope you will like the book. Good night." And he walked leisurely across the lawn toward his own place next door.

Amy did not enjoy the moonlight ride. Neither did Hugh, who was badly snubbed when he waxed sentimental. They returned home at ten o'clock and Amy went to bed and took the book Mark had brought her, and read it absorbedly. The clock was striking two when she closed the covers and snapped out her bedside lamp.

The next morning at six o'clock Bobby Colton, in clean overalls and with a bright and shining face, took from Amy's hand a book wrapped in brown paper and a sealed letter.

Mark was standing on the front porch when Bobby appeared. He was feeling rather grumpy until he met Bobby's boyish grin, and his features relaxed when he read the brief note.

"The book is charming—I read it before I went to sleep—but I should have liked it much better if there had been, instead of three lovers, only one!" And the "one" was underscored!

"I will go back to breakfast with you," said Mark, spying a little blue frock in the orchard, "and you run ahead and tell your mother I am coming!"

Twenty Earthquakes a Day

Taking into consideration the entire surface of the earth, the statement is made that about 20 earthquakes take place in the course of a day. This does not mean 20 disastrous cataclysms, with destruction of buildings and loss of life, but terrestrial disturbances of a minor nature which are observed only with the use of extremely sensitive instruments designed for the purpose.

Score One for the Mosquito

Great Britain has a Mosquito Control institute which maintains a laboratory on Hayling island for the study of mosquito problems and the director claims to have discovered, in the course of his investigations, that the bite of the mosquito is a cure for paralysis. The insect was used as a means of conveying the malaria germ to the paralysis patient and according to the reports the fever was invariably lessened and in several cases complete cure was effected.

A Sour Stomach

In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

Coconut Sugar

In the East Indies a sugar known as jaggery is made from the sap of the coconut palm. The sap is obtained by cutting the flower spathe and the juice yields about 15 per cent of sugar. It is consumed locally and is very impure. Chemically, much of it is identical with cane and beet sugar.

Several people from here took in the Marshall County Fair held at Warren the forepart of the week.

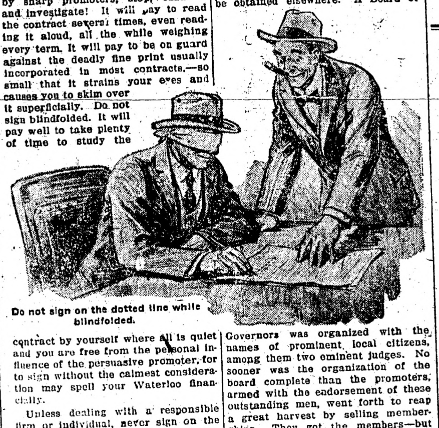
BEWARE OF THE DEADLY DOTTED LINE

By W. R. MOREHOUSE
Public Relations Commission, American Bankers Association

W. R. MOREHOUSE

WITHDRAWING the family's savings account at the bank where it is safe, and losing it through speculation is a serious matter. It may bring great hardship, especially to the mistress of the home. It may force great economies in household management or amount to actual privation. It may mean that the children will have to go to work before they complete their education. The loss of the family's accumulations may even result in physical breakdown on the part of the wife through worry over the loss of savings which she helped to accumulate at the sacrifice of home comforts, but was not consulted when it came to investing them. The making of investments by men who are heads of families and inexperienced in finance should not be undertaken without consulting her. But even if both agree the venture should be talked over with the local banker or information about it obtained from the National Better Business Bureau in New York, which serves without cost and purely in the public interest. If this is done a lot of trouble and quite likely many regrets and heartaches will be avoided.

There is one point in the activities of the inexperienced investor where he should have above all a red-light stop signal to cause him to pause and investigate and that is just before he reaches the decision to "sign on the dotted line." Before you part with your savings in the bank by signing a contract placed before you by sharp promoters, stop, examine and investigate! It will pay to read the contract several times, even reading it aloud, all the while weighing every term. It will pay to be on guard against the deadly fine print usually incorporated in most contracts,—so small that it strains your eyes and causes you to skim over it superficially. Do not sign blindfolded. It will pay well to take plenty of time to study the contract by yourself where all is quiet and you are free from the personal influence of the persuasive promoter, for to sign without the calmest consideration may spell your Waterloo financially.



Do not sign on the dotted line while blindfolded.

Unless dealing with a responsible firm or individual, never sign on the dotted line. If in the least doubt, don't sign. Never sign on verbal assurances that you are fully protected. Terms stated orally but not incorporated in a contract are not binding. Glowing promises, wild exaggerations and gross misstatements of facts are seldom reduced to writing or made in the presence of your witnesses. Your failure to read and to understand a contract before signing is not a legal excuse. When you sign a contract you proclaim that you agree with its terms and will abide by and endeavor to carry them out.

Don't sign just because some high-pressure salesman tells you that you are a wonder, or that you show good judgment, or that you have a lot of sense. Sign only when you are fully convinced that your interests are fully protected.

Prominent Men Used as Scenery

A number of slick promoters recently organized in a certain city an "automobile club" with the assurance that it would soon erect a number of downtown garages where busy business men could park their cars. As an inducement for business men to take out memberships, charges to them for storage were to be nominal, much less than a like service could be obtained elsewhere. A Board of Governors was organized with the names of prominent local citizens, among them two eminent judges. No sooner was the organization of the board complete than the promoters, armed with the endorsement of these outstanding men, went forth to reap a great harvest by selling memberships. They got the members—but the building of the garages remained an idle dream.

When the members of the Board of Governors were later interviewed as to how they came to consent to the use of their names they stated that they thought the additional storage facilities were needed in the downtown district and they signed up without looking into the proposition carefully. Imagine their chagrin when told that a reading of the by-laws of the organization showed that the Board of Governors had no powers but had been used merely as scenery in order to sell memberships in a fake proposition!

Because these prominent citizens were careless with their names and failed to read and to investigate the enterprise, hundreds of business men bought memberships only to lose their money. Signing without reading is about the most dangerous act of financial carelessness that can be committed.

Local 4-H Club Members Won Many Prizes At The Fair

Five of the local 4-H club members took their dairy calves to the county fair at Warren last week and returned home with quite a number of prizes.

Frances Faiman, president of the club, leads with four first prizes to her credit. Her grade Holstein was placed first in her class in club animals and first in the open class. Miss Faiman won the silver cup offered by the Warren Sheaf to the winner of the showmanship contest. She also took first prize with her turkey exhibit.

Bennie Thompson's pure bred Gurnsey brought him two blue ribbons, being placed first both in open and in her class in the club. Bennie received third prize in showmanship.

Hubert McMurray took one first and one second prize with his pure bred Holstein, being first in open and second in club. He took fourth prize in the showmanship contest.

Buelah McMurray received first in club in her class and second in open. She also showed a pure bred Holstein.

Ruby Thompson's grade Gurnsey was placed second in open class.

This goes to show that the local club is no back number when it comes to taking prizes and we hope that we will have more wide-a-wake members in our club next year. So come out and boost for your local club.

N. S. A. News

"Pure seed growers, seedsmen, extension workers and all interested in crops improvement and soil problems are invited to attend the Annual Crops and Soils Day meeting at the Northwest Experiment Station, Crookston, Monday, July 22. Test plots of new varieties of wheat, oats, barley and flax; trials with new forage crops, and the results of sodium chlorate sprays on sow thistles will be shown and explained to the visitors. Dr. R. B. Harvey, one of the foremost plant physiologists in America, will be present to discuss weed control problems. Professor A. G. Ruggles, University Farm, will explain the attacks of insects upon farm crops and means of combating these pests, while Mr. A. D. Haedecke, in charge of seed certification work in Minnesota, will discuss pure seed production.

Extensive experiments on the use of sodium chlorate and other chemicals for weed control were begun at the Northwest Station last year. The effects of various rates and dates of application on sow thistle: the effects upon the soil, and comparisons with mowing and cultiuation methods will be of interest to all. How these chemicals affect various plants and problems in connection with their use will be explained by Dr. R. B. Harvey, who has cooperated in these trials since they were established at various Minnesota stations.

The program will be held in cooperation with the Red River Valley Crops and Soils Association, of which Ole A. Flaat, Bygland, is president. Bring the entire family and enjoy a picnic dinner on the campus. Coffee, cream and sugar will be furnished free. The speaking program will begin at 1.00 p. m. R. S. Dunham, station agronomist, and E. R. Clark, pure seed specialist, will conduct the trip to the experimental plots.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Burtness and son and Mr. and Mrs. I. A. Hovrud returned home Sunday evening from a two weeks motor trip thru North Dakota where they visited with relatives and looked over the country.

Mr. and Mrs. Einar Loven returned home Saturday evening from a vacation spent in and around Winnipeg. They spent most of their time at Winnipeg Beach which they reported as a real summer play ground and where you could have fun.

Pennington County Fair

Ample seating capacity will be available for the crowds attending the Pennington County Fair at Thief River Falls this year: the new grand stand, providing a thousand additional seats, having recently been completed. The stand is built along the latest lines of grand stand construction and emdodies both safety and comfort for the spectators. The old grand stand, which seats only fifteen hundred people, has been inadequate to handle the crowds in recent years.

The Pennington County Fair will be a four day show this year, extending from Wednesday, July 31, through Saturday, August 3. A high class program of horse racing and plateform acts will be presented each afternoon of Thursday, Friday and Saturday, while fireworks will take the place of the horse racing for the evening shows. The Royal American Shows, the largest carnival company that has ever visited this section of the state, has been engaged. This carnival carries with it ten riding devices and an unusually interesting assortment of Coney Island attractions and side shows.

Creamery Picnic

If you are looking for a good place to spend Sunday, come out to the farm home of Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Werner and family where the Holt Farmers Co-operative Creamery patrons will hold their first annual creamery picnic. They have a nice big grove on their place which will afford a good shade on a hot day and a good place for the children to play around.

Make your plans now to attend the picnic and hear the many prominent speakers whom will be on hand to give talks on dairying in this community, as well as other subjects of interest to the farmers.

There will be band music and kitten ball games throughout the afternoon and we can promise you that there will be no dull moments on the program.

Bring your lunch. Coffee and cream will be served free.

The crews building the new trunk highway north out of here, have now completed almost three miles of the new road. It was thot at first that it would spoil the looks of the country but, instead it proved to be a real improvement as they had to cut so much brush away in order to see where they were putting the road.

R. A. Werner started in on Monday with two outfits to put the hay crop on the Bennes Farm east of town.

Weed Cutting Notice

Notice is hereby given that all land owners and renters of land in Holt and Excel Townships are requested to cut all weeds on the farms and along the road sides, before August 1st, 1929.

Farmers should attend to this at once and not wait for the weed inspector to come and order it done, which he will do, if, you do not do it yourself.

By order of Elling Waagedahl, Chairman
Township of Holt.
Fred Steinhauer, Chairman
Township of Excel.

PRODUCTION:—Good pasture is the cheapest feed. Sweet clover that produces the most feed will pasture as high as 3 cows per acre. Native grass, or tame pasture that is largely run out, requires 3 acres per cow. Pasture can be greatly improved by a top dressing of manure same as other crops. Put the manure there in the summer.

MANUFACTURING: The manufacture of butter in cooperative creameries is one of the largest industries in the state. Thru cooperative creameries farmers become manufacturers and thereby secure the manufacturer's profit. It is for this reason that every patron of a co-operative creamery should be a stockholder of the creamery.

MARKETING: Practically all successfull manufacturers control the sale of their goods and have a name and trademark for their goods that become known to the consumers. It is for this reason that Land O' Lakes Creameries has a name for butter—"Land O' Lakes" butter, and are working to have this name known thruout the United States and the world.

"Why do you tease me?" he groaned.

"Because men like you are made to be teased."

"Celia, you didn't really see any one, did you?"

"I swear I did. What I said, if I said anything—which I don't admit—I shall keep to myself."

A moment later Celia left on Bill's arm.

"Quarreling?" he asked.

"I see too much of him," she said. "I think I shall fall in love with you again. Shall I?"

"My duties don't permit," he laughed. "You look tired. Why not go to bed early?"

"How quickly you tire of me!" she mocked. "I looked for something subtler from you. Les couldn't have done worse."

Bill Pelham smiled. Evidently she was fonder of Les than she had admitted. She looked at him dancing with her mother, but Les would not even smile.

"She's hurt him," said Bill to himself.

"I'll take your advice," Celia said, yawning. "Night-o, Bill!"

She had hurt Leslie more than she guessed, and much more than she would have done if she had known how miserable he was.

"It has been lovely to be here all this time," Les said presently.

"Les, that doesn't mean that you are leaving us?"

"I'm afraid I'll have to."

"Is it something Celia has said?"

Leslie lied as calmly as he could. "Not a thing! I've promised to run down to the Water Gap for a few days."

"You'll be back soon?"

Dina was distressed. She liked the boy, and hoped that Celia would marry him. Junior liked him. They all liked him, and yet Celia teased him almost to madness at times.

In his room Leslie composed a letter to Celia filled with that note of minor melancholy which drips from the pens of lovers with such exquisite ease. He told her he would be gone before she was up. He ended by saying, very darkly, that he had taken her advice and "jumped off the road."

Leslie smiled bitterly as he reread it. It sounded like a veiled threat of suicide.

All the others had gone to bed when he finished. He put the letter in his pocket, and went out to see if any wild faun was prowling about the Gray house grounds. Celia's encounter might have been fact or fancy. One could never be sure of Celia.

He gained the hall quietly, unbolted the door, and walked silently toward the abandoned swimming pool by the tennis courts.

"I'll be d—d!" said Leslie.

By the pool stood a very tall man—physically more splendid than young Barron, as Leslie himself would not have denied. The intruder heard no footfall on the grass. He was aware of another's presence only when Leslie tapped him on the arm.

He seemed far more embarrassed than Leslie.

"What's the idea?" he snarled, trying to shake off the other's grip.

Leslie was instantly relieved. Assuredly Celia had not heard the godlike stranger speak, for his speech was of the East side unrefined.

"I don't want you to disappear in your cloud of star dust until I've had a little talk with you. What are you doing here?"

Leslie snapped the question out in a threatening tone.

"I lost my way," replied the wild faun.

"Don't lie!" said Leslie.

The wild faun frowned a little. The white moonlight showed his heavy face to be capable of readily expressed emotion. Leslie saw, too, that for some reason he wished to make his story good.

"I was trying to find a short cut," said the intruder.

"You must make a habit of it. People don't lose their way two nights in succession when the moon is full. You were here last night. Why?"

"H—l!" said the wild faun. "Is this Buckingham palace or the White House? I didn't see no sentries at the gate. If you don't like it, I'd better be on my way."

He turned away, as if to walk toward the drive.

"Not yet!" cried the younger man. "There's a little explaining to be done first."

Perceiving himself to be at a loss verbally, the stranger revised his tactic. This exasperating young man in evening dress must be taught a lesson.

"Bo," said the wild faun coldly, "I don't like your face!"

With that he brought his powerful right arm across with the idea—a wholly diverting one—of altering the sneer on his opponent's features to an expression of fear and agony. He was not quick enough. A left jab caught him on the nose.

"All right!" he said. "If you want it, you can have it!"

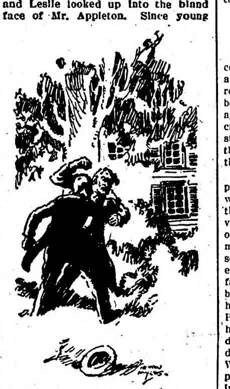
He made a vicious spring at Leslie Barron. Anger beclouded him. Leslie's footwork irritated him. He asked his foe to stand still and have it out man to man. He addressed him as a dancing master, and by other more opprobrious terms.

Finally he measured his distance for a blow that would end it all. The lad in evening dress could box, and was annoyingly active. He had played for the godlike body of the wild faun, and was inflicting hurt.

Just as the strong arm of the intruder was drawing back, there came the sudden sharp cry of an owl, repeated three times. He paused for a second, and turned away his head. It was a tactical error, of which he was conscious too late. Leslie saw his opportunity and made the most of it. He landed a clean blow on the point of the jaw. The wild faun dropped, and, in falling, his head struck the base of an Italian garden marble.

Leslie knelt at the side of his fallen foe. He was undecided whether to alarm the house by calling for help or to try to carry this big bulk in himself.

A shadow came out of nothingness, and Leslie looked up into the bland face of Mr. Appleton. Since young Barron had not shared the Hanbys' confidences, he assumed that their former guest was still in good odor, a friend of the family, and now most certainly a friend in need.



The Lad in Evening Dress Could Box, and Was Annoyingly Active.

Quickly Leslie explained what had happened. He did not want the little plump man to be frightened. At the moment, he regarded himself in rather an heroic light and Mr. Appleton warmly commended his courage.

"Ah, youth, youth!" apostrophized the little man, whose years had long bereft him of it. "Magnificent!" He stooped down almost timidly. "We must not alarm our good hostess," he said. "Let us carry him to the garage and awaken a chauffeur. I will take the ruffian's feet. You, as the stronger, take his head. I will satisfy myself that he has no weapon concealed."

From the stranger's pocket Mr. Appleton drew a short, heavy billet of wood. He balanced it in his hand, frowning.

"I think this is what is termed a life preserver. It stamps its owner as a criminal by profession. You will probably be entitled to a reward, Mr. Barron. Now, if you will kindly take your end, we will remove him."

Obediently young Barron put his arms under the shoulders of the wild faun. When Appleton remained standing, Leslie looked up. Staring down at him, the little man might have been his Uncle Russell.

Too late, Leslie saw his danger. The life preserver caught him squarely on the head, and he pitched forward over the other unconscious man.

Mr. Appleton smiled happily.

"Very neat!" he murmured. "For a first attempt, very neat indeed—oh, dear me, yes!"

Mr. Appleton gave a skillful imitation of the cry of an owl. From afar came the call of another night-flying bird. The owl that was Mr. Appleton hooted again. Gradually the other cry came nearer. Presently there was a rustling in the thicket, and a bullet head was thrust through.

"Luigi?" called Mr. Appleton softly. "Come at once!"

The man who wriggled out of the bushes was short, but of tremendous breadth. His exclamations and gestures when he saw what seemed to be a pair of dead men were stayed at a word from the other.

"Carry Jim below, and come back for this."

Luigi shouldered the two hundred and twenty pounds that was Jim with ease. He had been gone no more than five minutes when he returned and picked up the lighter man.

The bird sanctuary received Leslie Barron, heir to a great fortune, Luigi Bartoli, in whom the police were interested, and, last of all, Mr. Appleton, who breathed more easily as a heavy shower began. It would smooth out the trampled earth and make tracking impossible.

CHAPTER VIII

When Leslie Barron came again to consciousness, he thought he was in a prison cell. It was a small stone room, electrically lighted. He had been placed on an iron cot. A bandage was about his head, and his crumpled shirt front was bloodstained. Except for bruises and a throbbing head, however, he found that he was unharmed.

He reconstructed what had happened since he went in search of the wild faun, and was forced to admit that the event which stood out most vividly was the inexplicable knavery of Frederick Appleton. The little man had always been so courteous, so respectful, so flattering. He had expressed his regard for the Barron family repeatedly. He had once embarrassed Leslie by comparing his head with that of the Hermes of Praxiteles; and then, incontinently, he had brought a loaded bludgeon down upon it with such force that death had not been very far away. What was the wild faun to Mr. Appleton, that he had sprung thus amazingly to avenge the unknown intruder?

Leslie rose from his cot and walked to the door. It was of heavy wood, metal covered. He could not escape.

No one answered his shouts. Leslie sat down again on the bed.

In his career as a somewhat reckless driver, he had more than once had to wait in a jail cell until he paid his fine. In every instance there had been a penetrating and unpleasing odor about these places. This cell had no such effluvium; nor, as he examined it more closely, had it the appurtenances of the regular jail. Yet it was plain that it had been constructed for no other purpose than to imprison.

Leslie called to mind his talks with Junior as to the threatened dangers surrounding the Gray house. In the beginning they had thrilled him; but then, as pleasant day succeeded pleasant day, Junior and he began to feel annoyed that they had ever anticipated peril.

Leslie was not yet nervous about the outcome of the adventure. The eldest son of Grantley Barron could not disappear without a nation-wide investigation. It would be proved that he had gone from the Gray house into the grounds. Celia would understand why he had gone. He had disappeared in evening clothes, leaving his other effects untouched. The whole neighborhood would be combed by detectives. In the end, his father might have to pay a huge ransom.

This last thought rather amused Leslie. Appleton was probably a professional blackmailer or kidnaper. None would suspect the suave, modest, hard-working little man. Had not Leslie seen the descending blackjack in his hand, he would not now have believed him guilty.

Ear of City Dweller Has No Rest Period

Between beats the heart rests, and between breaths the lungs and diaphragm have an instant's respite. All the nerves and muscles of the body have some time when they are relieved of duty except those of the ear in the noisy city. This is pointed out by ear specialists, who say something must be done about it to lower the amount of deafness.

City noises going on day and night keep the ear drum and the tiny bones about it in a constant state of vibration. People accustomed to them sleep comfortably through normal night sounds because the nerves are adapted to something like a temporary disconnection with the brain centers.

Nocturnal periods of rest for the ears seem as remote for the average city dweller as the pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow. His days and nights are a bedlam of motor exhausts and horns, the footsteps and voices of passersby and the thousand and one other noises of the city street.—Lebanon Reporter.

Planes Colored as Birds

Airplanees painted with the brilliant colors and markings of the birds have begun to make their appearance. The striking color combinations of wings and bodies lend themselves to easy reproduction on the corresponding portions of planes, while the tail feathers can be reproduced in the elevator and rudder and horizontal stabilizers. The bird-plane idea, originated by Berry brothers of Detroit, was first applied to a Stinson "Detroiter," painted to resemble the redstart.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

DR. CALDWELL'S THREE RULES

Dr. Caldwell watched the results of constipation for 47 years, and believed that no matter how careful people are of their health, diet and exercise, constipation will occur from time to time. Of next importance, then, is how to treat it when it comes. Dr. Caldwell always was in favor of getting as close to nature as possible, hence his remedy for constipation is a mild vegetable compound. It can not harm the most delicate system and is not habit forming.

The Doctor never did approve of drastic physics and purges. He did not believe they were good for human beings to put into their system. Use Syrup Pepsin for yourself and members of the family in constipation, biliousness, sour and crampy stomach, bad breath, no appetite, headaches, and to break up fevers and colds. Get a bottle today, at any drugstore and observe these three rules of health: Keep the head cool, the feet warm, the bowels open. For a free trial bottle, just write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois.

Fur Farming for Profit

North Dakota's New Industry

If we are to keep up the source of supply of fur bearing animals, it is just as necessary to raise them in captivity as it is registered livestock. According to government statistics and all other specialists of the fur industry fur bearing animals are fast disappearing and are almost extinct in their wild state, causing all manufacturers to look to the fur farmers for their supply of pelts.

GAS SMUGGLING IS NEW PROBLEM

Nebraska May Have to Guard Her Borders.

Lincoln, Neb.—For the first time in history, Nebraska will be faced shortly with a "custom" problem, a problem which may make necessary the guarding or patrolling of two of her boundary lines, that dividing the state from Kansas on the south and the Missouri river separating Nebraska from Iowa on the east.

The reason is that the lucrative practice of smuggling gasoline across from Kansas and Iowa has begun with the four cent gasoline tax law, according to Dr. T. W. Bass, collector of the gas tax here.

While the Nebraska gasoline tax was two cents a gallon, Doctor Bass said, there was no smuggling trouble, because the rate was either the same, or higher in the bordering states. But when the Nebraska tax went up to four cents and the tax in Iowa and Kansas was boosted to only three, it made possible a smuggler's profit of a clear cent a gallon for hauling the petrol across the state lines. In South Dakota, Wyoming and Colorado, Doctor Bass said, the tax is four cents, so that there is no trouble on the borders.

"But we have already received several reports of smuggling on the Kansas line, and also across the river from Iowa," Doctor Bass said. "It seems likely that the problem will have to be met by putting a man or men in the field to patrol the borders and to intercept the smugglers.

"There is a good profit in it for them. We hear that they are hauling gasoline in from Kansas, failing to report the purchase in that state, and selling it here at four cents a gallon above the normal retail price. They pay no tax in Kansas and get the benefit of the tax here, they cheat both states and make a handsome profit."

Finds Home-Made Fluid for Treating Anemia

Boston.—A liver extract that will be effective in treating pernicious anemia can be made at home with very little effort, Dr. William B. Castle and Morris A. Bowie of Harvard University Medical school have reported to the American Medical association.

This will prove a great boon to sufferers from this disease who are unable to afford the high price of the commercial liver extracts or of the more palatable calves' liver. Eating half a pound of beef liver a day soon becomes a tiresome ordeal, yet this has been the only chance for life and health for many of the poor who suffer from pernicious anemia.

The domestic extract is as effective as the commercial ones and may be made in the ordinary kitchen by any reasonably intelligent person, the Harvard scientists declared. Only the usual domestic utensils are needed. The cost of the beef liver is practically the only cost. The extract is palatable and may be drunk hot or cold, with or without salt. It is said to taste something like beef broth.

The process of making it consists in general of grinding the liver, soaking it in cold water, straining, heating and restraining. The ordinary meat grinder, strainer, enamel pots, glass jars and jelly bags found in most kitchens are the only utensils required. The success of the procedure depends on the care and exactness with which the directions for the various steps in the process are followed. Doctor Castle and Mr. Bowie gave these in detail in their report.

Regular Air Service to Stockholm Planned

Portland, Maine.—With authority to develop and maintain a regular air service between the United States, Canadian, and European airports, linking this city with Stockholm, Sweden, the Great Atlantic airways has been organized here. The route would be via Belle Isle strait, Julianshaab, Greenland; Agmamsalik, Greenland; Reykjavik, Iceland; Thorshaven in the Faroe islands, and Oslo, Norway. Incorporation papers have been filed with the state department in Augusta.

Barber Bars Women; Hamper Men's Trade

Columbus, Ohio.—J. S. Van Heyde, a barber here for the last half century, refuses to allow women to enter his shop. He says women are prone to procrastinate making up their minds what they want and how they want it done, and that men haven't time to wait. But Van Heyde continued: "Then, too, men want to tell a story or two, smoke a cigar or cigarette, and engage in conversation they wouldn't be able to if women were in the shop."

WILL HUNT AFRICAN GAME IN MOTOR CAR

Night Pictures of Wild Life Are Sought.

New York.—Mr. and Mrs. Prentiss Gray of Larchmont and Wilfred W. Brown, ornithologist of the Academy of Natural Science of Philadelphia, have left for Africa on an automotive equipped hunting and photographic expedition sponsored by the academy to obtain night photographs of jungle wild life and specimens of rare African animals for the habitat collection of the museum. They will go directly to Mombasa, East Africa, where the seven months' campaign in the jungle will begin.

Throughout the several thousand miles of the journey Mrs. Gray will drive a three-quarter ton truck, equipped with a special all steel body, as a blind for taking night pictures. The truck is fully protected on all sides, and its driving compartment is fitted with nonshatterable glass.

The car is so arranged that Mr. Gray can stand in it and operate two still cameras and two moving picture cameras mounted on the roof and reached through a trap door. It is equipped with an extra axle for rough roads and with four rear wheels, all of them carrying power from the engine. Balloon tires of much greater thickness than usual will be used, with tubes covered by the tough skin of the eland, an African antelope.

Dog to Accompany Them.

Upon arrival at Mombasa the party will be met by Philip Percival, who has organized a group of fifty porters, gun carriers, and native huntsmen. Percival, one of the most famous white guides of Nairobi, who led the George Eastman and other large expeditions through the African wilds, has purchased all the food and living equipment for the Gray expedition, and with Rags, a favorite Airedale of the Grays, will accompany them throughout the trip.

Among the specimens in which the museum is particularly interested are a variety of rare deer from eastern Angola and Rhodesia. They include Selous' Sitatunga, the Lechwi water buck, Lichtenstein's hartebeest, and the Nakong or Speke's bushbuck. The little known giant sable, an antelope noted for its huge antlers, is the prize most desired by the explorers.

The overland trip, in which Mrs. Gray will drive most of the way, will take them from Mombasa up through Nairobi, then to southern Tanganyika, across Lake Tanganyika to Elizabethville and Kivu, in the Belgian Congo, thence to Angola in Portuguese West Africa.

Will Retrace Steps.

Returning, the party plans to retrace its steps across the Belgian Congo to the head waters of the Nile and make its way down that river to Khartoum and Cairo, or will embark on a steamer at Lobetta bay on the coast of Portuguese West Africa for London and New York.

During and after the World war Mr. Gray was assistant director of the commission for relief of Belgium and assistant director of marine transportation of the food administration under Herbert Hoover. Mrs. Gray was also active in war relief. She received the medal of Queen Elizabeth from King Albert of Belgium for her activities in relieving the suffering of Belgian women and children.

In 1917 Mr. Gray was the last American to leave Brussels. He remained for a month after Brand Whitlock, American minister, had left the city, to turn over affairs of Belgian relief to the Dutch and Spanish ministers. Mrs. Gray and her daughter, Barbara, remained with him.

Aerial Paymaster Aids Morale of U. S. Marines

Washington.—The aerial paymaster is the rule in Nicaragua where United States marines are scattered through virtually inaccessible territory.

The expeditionary forces recently have completed the payment of more than $1,500,000 to marines stationed in outlying districts. In many instances the pay roll for the local contingent is dropped from the plane.

This is the only way to make certain the marines will be paid promptly. While they do not need much money in outlying districts, the fact that it comes regularly helps materially in maintaining morale and military efficiency.

Eastern Flyers to Have Largest Aerial Beacon

Lynn, Mass. — Airmen cruising through eastern Massachusetts skies at night will be guided henceforth by the biggest aerial beacon in the country. The new 7,000,000 candle-power revolving aeronautical light is located at the plant of the General Electric company, 89 feet above the ground. Its ten flashes per minute are visible for miles.

Many Unique Stamps on Exhibition at Paris Show

Havre, France.—Sixty-five million francs worth of postage stamps, many of them unique in the world, are being shown in the world's stamp fair, now in progress here and fostered by the French government through the undersecretary of state for posts. Among the American exhibitors is Alfred Lichtenstein, of New York, who is showing a collection of stamps worth $150,000.

PLAN TIME TEMPLE FOR WASHINGTON

National Educational Center of Horology.

Washington.—The Horological Institute of America announced at its annual meeting in the National Academy of Sciences building that plans are under consideration to erect in Washington a $1,000,000 "Time Temple." The building would become the national educational center for the science of horology, and would contain a great horological library and masterpieces of the watchmaker's craft.

A nucleus for the exhibit in the proposed time building is now being shown, comprising the collection of 30 watches, valued at $30,000, from the estate of the late James Ward Packard, automotive engineer and inventor. These watches represent masterpieces of the watchmaker's art. Several of the watches are 53-jeweled, and all represent the finest achievements in the manufacture of accurate and complicated timepieces. An astronomical watch of extraordinary intricacy, valued at $7,000, keeps track of the seconds, tells the day, the week, month and year, the mean solar time and the apparent solar time, and the time of sunrise and sunset each day.

The watch adjusts itself automatically at the end of each month, making the correct change of 28, 30 or 31 days, as may be required, and automatically adding a day for leap year. In the back of the watch is a miniature sky dotted with gold stars. The mechanism of the works is so fine that these stars change with each season.

The institute has started a survey to determine the feasibility of securing funds for a building and for an endowment to support a larger and more active institute which now functions as a member of the national research council. A campaign to arouse public interest and to secure new members along with an endowment is one of the objectives of the institute.

Gold Key's Use Puzzles New Vice-Chamberlain

London.—As Vice-Chamberlain of the royal household, a post which he is expected to assume shortly, J. H. Hayes, labor member for Edgehill, Liverpool, and a former London police sergeant, will have to carry the famous gold key when he bears messages from the king to the House of Commons.

This key is noted because nobody seems to know what it is used for. Neither Mr. Hayes nor any of his predecessors have learned its use, though it is believed to be the key of a royal palace, either Buckingham, Windsor or St. James.

When the king opens parliament in person the Vice-Chamberlain has to await his majesty's return to the palace. The key is said to have originally been connected with the re-entry of the Monarch to his palace.

Another duty which the Vice-Chamberlain undertakes is preparation of the daily report on parliament for the king's personal use. He also acts as general assistant to the Lord Chamberlain, and in this capacity will have an indirect association with the licensing of stage plays, of which the Chamberlain's department and the producers have often held widely divergent opinions.

Seeks Jail as Bondsman Fails to Put Up Funds

Pueblo, Colo.—William "Wild Bill" Hill, of Boone, may or may not be guilty of violating the national prohibition law, but Pueblo city and county officials concur in admitting "Wild Bill" is an honest man.

Hill was arraigned on a charge of operating a still and possession of liquor. His bond was fixed at $2,500.

Hill was released, but later one of his bondsmen failed to put in an appearance at the commissioner's office, and Bill was at liberty with no bond against him.

Hearing of the situation, Hill did what officers claim establishes a precedent of local law cases. He boarded a tram car and went to the county jail where he proposed to wait until his bond could be raised.

Finds New Fungi

Tokyo.—The discovery of a new species and a new variety of mycetozoa, a class of simple fungi, is credited to the emperor of Japan by Yoshitoshi Enomot, head of the Tokugawa Institute of Biology. The emperor collected the fungi during a visit to Zushi last summer.

Jolts Firemen

Quincy, Mass.—Local firemen recently received an unusual kind of still alarm. "Get out in your own backyard and put out that fire," said a telephone voice. A grass fire behind fire headquarters was promptly extinguished.

Pierce Home to Be Made Historic Shrine

Hillsborough, N. H.—Plans are being made for the establishment of the Pierce mansion here as a historical shrine. The birthplace of Franklin Pierce, only resident of New Hampshire ever elected President of the United States, was built in 1804. One room, known as the council chamber, remains today just as it was more than 100 years ago.

A Museum of Trees

WHEN James Arnold, a New Bedford (Mass.) merchant, died in 1868, he left $100,000 for the advancement of agriculture or horticulture.

Translated into 1927 results, the outcome is the Arnold arboretum, a wonder garden, the greatest museum of trees and shrubs, perhaps, in the United States, 250 acres in extent, preserved forever in its present location in a Boston suburb, and containing, it is claimed, a representative of every known tree and shrub that can withstand the Massachusetts climate.

If those who are charged with the development of this show place had appreciated the difficulty of the undertaking they might have thrown up their hands and hid in the cyclone cellar, because only a few of the plants now growing in this garden were known, much less discovered. But, they took their work seriously, dug into the skeleton closets of the tree and shrub families and nothing from a to etc. escaped them.

Many trees native in other countries but unknown here have been introduced, countless new forms have been brought into existence through scientific interbreeding and sent to be tried out in practically every civilized country on the globe. In connection with this work a library of upwards of 31,000 volumes and 8,000 pamphlets, all the principal books in all languages, relating to trees, in any way, have been developed.

"If we pass in imagination down the centuries," says Director Sargent, "it will not be difficult, judging the future by the accomplishments of a few years, to picture an establishment able to increase human knowledge and human happiness in all parts of the world."

Children Under 12 Admitted Free at Pennington Fair

Children under twelve years of age will be admitted free again this year at the Pennington County Fair which will be held at Thief River Falls for four days commencing July 31. This plan was introduced by the Pennington county fair association last year and proved to be very satisfactory, not only from the standpoint of the fair itself but especially so from the standpoint of the thousands of visitors who attended the exposition.

One of the big features of the Thief River Falls fair is the program of horse racing, and with more than fifty horses actually entered by Saturday of last week, there is good reason to believe that the races this year will be unusually good. Races will be held each afternoon of Thursday, Friday and Saturday. For the evening shows fireworks will take the place of the racing.

In addition to the racing and fireworks the program will include eight high class vaudeville acts. These acts will offer a wide range of entertainment from ostrich running and harness races to aerial gymnastics and platform stunts. The Royal American Shows, a forty carload carnival company, has been secured, and with its ten riding devices, fifteen side shows and interesting assortment of Coney Island specialties, there will be entertainment of all kinds available.

To Set Aside New Money

Chicago—At the suggestion of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, church members throughout the country have been asked to dedicate out of the new currency recently issued by the United States government, the first new bill received by setting it aside for the mission work of the churches.

In many churches there will be a service for the dedication of the new money on Sunday, September 8. The Federal council is also recommending that a timely message be given by the preachers of the country on the Christain use of material possessions.

The suggestion was originally made by Dr. Ralph A. Ward, executive secretary of the World Service of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

KFJM Radio Station Sold

KFJM, the Grand Forks radio station which was originated about five years ago by the University of North Dakota and which that institution has operated since that time as an amateur station, was taken over by Implement Dealers Mutual Fire Insurance company, it has been announced by officials of the company. The insurance company plans to take over the government license under which the station now operates and to secure a commercial license so that plant may be operated in the future as a commercial station, it was stated by J. W. Wilkerson, secretary of the University of North Dakota.

Minnesota Climate Is Good

Facts concerning Minnesota's climate, soil and other natural advantages conductive to raising good crops are being broadcast by the Ten Thousand Lakes-Greater Minnesota Association.

So many inquiries have been received in recent weeks that it has been necessary to order a second edition of the new farm book which was compiled and published less than three months ago.

The new edition will comprise 10,000 copies and the body of the book will be enlarged to 20 instead of 16 pages. In addition all the available cover space will be used which will mean an actual gain of seven pages over the old book. New cuts, a map showing county lines and new statistical material has been added.

Among the facts stressed by the Associatian is that concerning the average temperature. The new book will say, for instance. that the average annual temperature for the entire state is 41 degrees, ranging from 46 degrees in the southeast to 35 degrees in the extreme north. In comparison the book states that the average temperature at Washinnton, D. C., which is generally recognized as being well to the south is 54 degrees. It also says that the average growing season varies in different sections of this state from 113 to 145 days. The growing season is extended to a considerable degree by the numerous days of sunshine, which average 61 percent of the summer months. Longer summer days give 100 hours more of sunshine during the growing season than in corn belt states. That is why Minnesota crops mature early.

The average precipitation according to the book is 25.16 inches annually of which there is 18.96 inches of rainfall from April 1 to September 30.

The book then goes into detail concerning the various crops that are succesfully raised here, the magnitude of the dairy industry, livestock, poultry, fruits and answers various other questions that might come into the mind of the prospective new citizen. It tells of Minnesota's educational and social advantages, of the wonderful recreational opportunities and also gives information concerning the state's industrial growth.

Mrs. A. Haukey and son from Hamlet, N. D. spent the week visiting with relatives here.

Production Is Main Factor

That high butterfat production per cow is an outstanding factor in dairy profits is strikingly shown in some results taken from 40 Minnesota Dairy Herd Improvement associations involving about 10,000 cows. Cows were grouped according to production, and feed costs and returns computed for each group, the returns being figured at 50 cents a pound for butterfat and the feed costs being estimated by testers and farmers.

Cows producing 100 pounds of butterfat each made gross returns of $50 and cost $34 for feed, leaving a return over feed cost per cow of $16. Those in the 200-pound group produced $100 worth of butterfat, having feed costs of $44, leaving $56 per cow as a return over feed cost. In the 300-pound group the return per cow was $95, while in the 400 and 500-pound groups, respectively, it was $131 and $174.

H. R. Searles, extension dairy specialist, University Farm, St. Paul, calls attention to the fact the feed cost advanced about $10.50 for each 100-pound increase in butterfat per cow. Due to the needs of body maintenance, the first 100 pounds of butterfat costs $34 in feed, but for each 100 pounds additional the increased cost is only $10 or $11. It is this fact that is chiefly responsible for the larger net returns obtained from high producing cows. The labor is about the same for a low producing cow as for a high producing one, as are also certain fixed charges such as shelter, interest, and insurance.

According to Mr. Searlas, two factors limit the production of dairy cows. The first of these is the ability of the cow as determined by her breeding, and second, the care and feed which she receives. He advises keeping only good cows and feeding them well, stating that the fewer cows through which a given amount of feed is put the greater will be the net return.

Several hundred people attended the local creamery picnic held at the R. A. Werner farm Sunday afternoon.

Dr. Grays from Thief River Falls gave a very fine talk on cooperation in all lines. Stuart McLeod was unable to be there, as he had to go to Karlstad, but B. O. Norby, manager af the Poultry Association spoke for him.

The Juvenile Band from Thief River Falls gave the crowd some very fine music.

Geo. Fricker, local banker was chairman of the entertainment committee.

Haying has been the big business in this vicinity this week. The fine dry weather made it possible to do almost double the work it would have been done had it rained.

W. E. Bush from Montana was here this week with a carload of horses which he sold.

LESSON 69

PRODUCTION: Good pasture is the cheapest feed. Sweet clover that produces the most feed will pasture as high as 3 cows per acre. Native grass, or tame pasture that is largely run out, requires 3 acres per cow. Pasture can be greatly improved by a top dressing of manure same as other crops. Put the manure there in the summer.

MANUFACTURING: The manufacture of butter in cooperative creameries is one of the largest industries in the state. Thru cooperative creameries farmers become manufacturers and thereby secure the manufacturer's profit. It is for this reason that every patron of a co-operative creamery should be a stockholder of the creamery.

MARKETING: Practically all successfull manufacturers control the sale of their goods and have a name and trademark for their goods that become known to the consumers. It is for this reason that Land O' Lakes Creameries has a name for butter—"Land O' Lakes" butter, and are working to have this name known thruout the United States and the world.

Goodbye to Good Coffee

Max Steuer, the well known New York lawyer, said on the Berengaria:

"Goodbye to good coffee till we get back to God's own country again.

"Every time I drink English or French or German coffee I think of the Oxford headwaiter who muttered to his assistant:

"'That finicky American customer at the window table has ordered special, fresh made coffee. Keep him waiting 20 minutes.'"

Has Changed Meaning

The name "Patagonia" was first used to designate all the southern part of South America, but is now used to designate the region bounded on the north by the Rio Limay and the Rio Negro, the Atlantic on the east, the Strait of Magellan on the south and the Andes on the west.

Are You Ready

When your Children Cry for It

Baby has little upsets at times. Al your care cannot prevent them. But you can be prepared. Then you can do what any experienced nurse would do—what most physicians would tell you to do—give a few drops of plain Castoria. No sooner done than Baby is soothed; relief is just a matter of moments. Yet you have eased your child without use of a single doubtful drug; Castoria is vegetable. So it's safe to use as often as an infant has any little pain you cannot pat away. And it's always ready for the crueler pangs of colic, or constipation or diarrhea; effective, too for older children. Twenty-five million bottles were bought last year.

UNIFORM MARRIAGE LAWS ARE ADVISED

Would Check Rising Tide of Divorces, Survey Says.

New York.—Eleven states of the Union still permit girls of twelve to marry. In several states marriage licenses are issued by mail, without the appearance of either prospective bride or groom before the license clerk.

In many places the license clerk is dependent upon the fees he receives for his entire pay, and consequently he issues licenses promiscuously and without questions.

There are at least 57 "marriage market" towns in the United States where law is so lax that justices of the peace and "marrying parsons" advertise that ceremonies will be performed at any time of day or night, and no questions asked.

These conditions, brought to light in the recent survey conducted by the Russell Sage Foundation, explain a big percentage of the constantly increasing number of American divorces, according to F. Emerson Andrews, who analyzes the foundation's report in the current issue of the North American Review.

Approximately 700,000 persons in the United States, it was found, have participated in marriages involving girls under sixteen. Hundreds of thousands of others have taken advantage of these lax conditions to marry bigamously, or while intoxicated, or while mentally or physically incompetent.

Practically 100 per cent of such marriages, Mr. Andrews points out, are doomed to end in the divorce courts.

The states where marriages of girls of twelve are permitted are Maine, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Florida, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, Tennessee, Virginia, Colorado and Idaho. Twenty-four states, including such highly developed commonwealths as New York, New Jersey, Ohio and Pennsylvania, still recognize the common law marriage, in which a man and woman may live together under a mere secret agreement between themselves.

Adoption and enforcement of uniform marriage laws throughout the country could quickly check the rising tide of divorce at its source, it is shown. Recommendations for such laws, made by the Russell Sage Foundation investigators and published in the North American Review article are:

1. Raise the minimum age for marriage to 16 years everywhere. 2. Require a notice of intention to marry to be filed five days before the license may be issued. 3. Issue licenses at regular hours only, on the basis of proved age and in the town or county where the bride or groom resides. 4. Abolish the fee system for payment of license clerks. 5. Abolish the fee system for the civil solemnization of marriage by justices. 6. Let religious bodies establish in theological seminaries thorough instruction regarding marriage laws, and deal rigidly with the commercial practices of "marrying parsons." 7. Establish a bureau of marriage law supervision in each state.

50 Cents Would Cover Cost of Thunderstorm

Washington.—A half dollar probably would pay for all the electricity expended in the average thunderstorm, the bureau of standards estimated today.

At the prevailing rate of 5 cents a kilowatt hour, a single flash of lightning is worth about four-tenths of a cent. While a flash in a severe storm generates power of 1,000,000 kilowatts, capable of doing appalling damage, its duration being 3-100,000 of a second, it represents but 8-1,000 of a kilowatt hour, the basis upon which commercial current is sold.

"It is surprising that there are not more deaths by lightning," the bureau said. "Reports show that about 500 persons are killed every year by flashes. The property damage, especially in rural districts, however, is tremendous."

Explaining the phenomenon, the bureau said that large raindrops containing electrical charges, on striking the upper current of air are broken into smaller drops and the energy released.

Many Locusts

Chicago.—An expedition of the Field museum found locusts so thick in one place in the Sobat section of Africa that one could not see the ground.

Church Roof Acts as Radio Receiving Set

Winnipeg.—Midnight strollers in Victoria, B. C., passing new Christ Church cathedral this spring heard phantom music and the rippling swell of a Bach fugue rolling from the half-finished church. Out from the chancel rang the sound, though no organ is installed. Moonlight and mystery joined hands to send shivers down Victorian backs, and the shivers quickened as the sound of a priest intoning his Benedicite was heard when the sound of the organ ceased. Scientists who investigated stated that the great expanse of copper roof had caught the waves of some broadcast recital from the United States and acted as a receiving radio set.

GIANT STRIDES MADE IN AIR TRANSPORT

Progress in 1929 to Excel Three Years' Total.

Washington.—The development of the aeronautics and air transport industry during the three years' life of the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce has been "among this country's outstanding achievements," Secretary of Commerce Lamont declared recently in surveying the present state of development of the industry.

"With the increasing interest being shown in this subject by the general public, there is every reason to believe that the immediate future will bring forth even greater accomplishments," he added.

Secretary Lamont predicted "the foundations have been laid for a great transportation system over which swift aerial carriers will bear their cargoes of mail, express and passengers to every corner of the globe."

Outlook for Big 1929 Record.

A statistical estimate of the condition of the industry appended to Secretary Lamont's statement indicated that if the present rapid growth in air transport operations continues during the remainder of the year, the operations for 1929 will exceed the total for the last three years.

The report estimated that the mileage flown by air transport operators for the first half of 1929 would total 8,000,000 miles as against 10,500,000 for all of 1928, 5,870,489 for 1927 and 4,318,087 for 1926.

The average of miles flown daily by air transport operators for the first half of the year, estimated to be 70,000 miles, is almost three times as great as the average for all of 1928, which was 26,606, more than four times the average of 16,083 miles for 1927 and almost seven times the average of 10,830 miles for 1926.

Thirty Thousand Miles of Airways.

The total length of the airways network, estimated now to be 30,000 miles, has jumped from a total of 16,667 miles at the close of 1928; 9,121 miles at the close of 1927, and 8,404 miles at the close of 1926. Ten thousand miles of airways, or one-third of the total, are lighted, as compared with 6,988 at the close of 1928; 4,468 at the close of 1927, and 2,041 at the end of 1926.

The greatest increases were shown for the income-producing activities of air transport companies. It was estimated that 40,000 passengers were carried during the first six months of 1929, as against 35,000 in all of 1928, 8,679 in 1927, and 5,872 in 1926. Total mail carried was computed at 3,400,000 pounds, as against 4,061,210 pounds in 1928, 1,654,165 in 1927, and 810,855 in 1926. Express volume was fixed at 1,200,000, as against 2,000,000 for 1928.

There are now 45 companies operating air transport lines, compared to 37 at the close of 1928, 19 at the close of 1927, and 14 at the close of 1926. They have 400 airplanes in service, an increase from 300 at the close of 1928, 128 at the close of 1927, and 69 at the close of 1926.

Visitors Wreck Monkey's Nerves in St. Louis Zoo

St. Louis, Mo.—The seasonal epidemic of nervous breakdowns among the monkeys of the St. Louis zoo is approaching.

Watching the antics of human beings through the bars of their cages all day is very distressing to the nerves of the monkeys, according to the magazine of the Zoological society. Every year, as summer crowds throng the primate house of the zoo, several of the more impressionable monkeys collapse and give way to all sorts of complexes and mental ills.

The victims are sent to a "rest house," where the only human beings they have to look at are the keepers who feed them. Once a year all the monkeys in the zoo take their vacations in the rest house.

Gem-Eating Ostriches Lure Diamond Hunters

Washington.—The finding of 70 diamonds in the craws of two ostriches killed by hunters in the southern part of the Kalahari desert in South Africa has started a new industry, "hunting ostriches for diamonds," Samuel H. Day, trade commissioner at Johannesburg, has informed the Department of Commerce. One bird produced 53 diamonds and the other 17, all of exceptional quality, it is reported. These ostriches formerly roamed the Namaqualand district, where rich alluvial diamond deposits are said to exist, and, having an eye for shining stones, included diamonds in their diet.

Gold Fish Production Almost Million Dollars

Washington.—Nearly a million dollars worth of gold fish were produced in the United States last year, the Commerce department announces. The output of hatcheries numbered 21,500,000 fish.

The gold fish industry had its inception in this country in 1878, when Rear Admiral Daniel Amen presented to the bureau of fisheries a number of fish he had brought from Japan. From that small beginning the propagation of gold fish has developed into one of the foremost fish-farming industries.

UNKISSED HUBBIES IN DIVORCE COURT

Experiment in New Style Matrimony a Failure.

Los Angeles, Calif.—Flaming youth's latest innovation, the "kissless," platonic marriage, has been tried in Los Angeles.

And did it work? Well, perhaps the two young men selected for the experiment were not esthetic enough. They appeared in local courts and asked to be released from their college girl wives and their new style of matrimony. Both were granted annulments on the grounds that they had been defrauded.

The two girls, who had attempted to revolutionize marriage and substitute an ideal platonic relationship sans all caresses, did not appear in court to witness the failure of their experiment.

"It was a great little plan, but that was all," said A. A. Anderson, one of the young husbands.

When he appeared in Judge Leonard Wilson's court he told how he had lived with his wife for two years and had never received a kiss or a caress.

"She told me that she loved me, but she just would not kiss me," he explained. "Kisses," she said, "were repulsive to her."

Almost simultaneously Richard V. Watson, a young banker, was relating a similar story in the court of Judge Elliott Craig.

"I met her at a University of Southern California sorority dance," Watson said. "She was the prettiest girl there. She seemed to care for me. We were married in two days.

"Then I discovered her strange ideas about marriage. She refused to kiss me. Kissing was degrading to women; it typifies the subjection of the female to the male, she said. I lived with her for half a year and could not change her viewpoint."

Coon Cat Adopts Baby Foxes on Master's Farm

Holbrook, Mass.—The credit for one of the strangest "adoptions" on record belongs to "Betty," an intelligent coon cat, and her master, Lester Wilson of this town, owner of a silver fox ranch, who has persuaded "Betty" to nurse three little silver black foxes besides one of her own children.

This strange exhibition of mother love pleases Wilson, who may be indebted to "Betty" in $500 or more, the value of the trio of "reynards" if they survive.

The cat loves the little black fellows as though they were her own, and by sharing the family milk supply with them, has tided them over to the point where there is good reason to hope they will survive.

"One morning a month ago I visited the pen and discovered the trio of new-born pups," Wilson related. "The next morning it appeared that the mother of the pups could not nurse them. I was at my wit's end to know how to solve the problem. Then I recalled that my pet cat had had a litter of kittens the previous day.

"Although I believed there was only one chance in a hundred that the cat could be persuaded to nurse the foxes, I resolved to try out the experiment. I took all except one of the kittens away from the cat. I took one of the little fellows and cuddled him beside the cat. The first move was made by 'Betty.' She sniffed the strange baby, then she kissed him, and the battle was won."

Dune Leaves Town It Buried 400 Years Ago

Koeslin, Germany.—After having been buried 400 years under a giant wandering dune, the fishing village Lonzke on the Baltic shore is being given up by the sand mountains. Interesting finds, including coins from before the Sixteenth century, are being made in the first buildings which have reappeared. Summer guests at seaside resorts are flocking to Lonzke to view the spectacle.

The giant dune, the wandering of which centuries of effort have been unable to retard, engulfed the village around the year 1540. Since then it has slowly traveled on and is now on the opposite site of the little settlement.

Sunday School Teacher Has 15-Year Record

Watsonville, Calif.—H. A. Hyde, prominent local florist and teacher of a Sunday school class at the First Methodist church here, prides himself on the record he has established for teaching a class every Sunday for the last 15 years. Even when Hyde broke his leg and was confined to his home he notified the class of his injuries and Sunday morning at the regular hour the class members presented themselves at his home.

Cloud of Sparrows Stops Band Concert

Regina, Sask.—Invading the stadium rink at Estevan, where the Regina Symphony orchestra was billed to stage a concert, thousands of sparrows made it impossible for artists to continue. Chirping loudly and flying over the heads of the audience, the birds refused to be driven out until the hall was cleared and a number of the feathered invaders shot.

"THE house is finished at last," said Leonard proudly, as he unlocked the front door and ushered the brown-eyed girl into the home that was to be theirs. He bent to kiss her before they passed into the living room.

"It is perfect," she breathed softly, as they went from room to room, hand in hand. Still there was a shadow in the brown eyes that did not depart when they locked the door upon the home that was to be theirs.

"What is it, Mildred?" he asked, suddenly. "I thought you would be so happy about it—now, we can go ahead and buy the furniture—the money is ready, unless—" he hesitated and saw that her cheeks were pink and her eyes distressed, "unless you would rather wait a few months for the furniture and I will buy the ring you wanted."

She put out her hand—her left hand, where the third finger wore a curious ring of twisted gold and silver. "I feel so conspicuous with this, Leonard—all the girls wear solitaires—and they seemed so amused when I explained that I preferred to wear this because it meant just as much to us as a more costly one—but I don't explain any more." Her lips drooped.

"You would rather have the diamond?" he asked with assumed carelessness. "It is only a matter of a few months more—I am sorry you are marrying such a poor fellow—but a home to go into is something to start on."

"I know it, Leonard—I am very foolish," she faltered.

"Never mind, dear—I know how you feel," he said; "suppose we go around to Burtis' now and choose the ring."

The next day the little gold and silver lovers' knot was gone from Mildred's finger and in its place was a glittering diamond that called forth all the admiration she had craved from her friends at the office and elsewhere.

"You are a lucky girl," sighed Jennie Jones, one of the bookkeepers. "You are going to marry a man who has built a house, furnished it completely, and given you a beautiful ring, too. Think of poor me—when I married Will he gave me a gorgeous ring and we bought a thousand dollars' worth of furniture on the installment plan and leased an apartment. That was two years ago—we lost all the furniture, the ring was pawned to pay the doctor's bill when I was so sick last winter, and we are doing light housekeeping in two tiny rooms. I am back at my job and we are both saving every cent we can for a home so we can start right the next time."

"You are a lucky girl," the words rang in Mildred's ears for many a day after that, as she wore the beautiful ring. All the time she could see that he was practicing small economies.

"Perhaps he is saving for the furniture," she thought with a blush, and she would turn the diamond around so that she could not see its mocking glitter. One day she overheard two of her office associates talking together.

"Married?" sniffed one man. "Can't afford it, my boy. Girls expect too much nowadays—first one has to bust loose with a diamond that's worth twice as much as the other fellows are buying—lease an expensive apartment—"

Mildred hastened away with burning cheeks. It was all true. She had been most unhappy ever since she had worn the diamond ring. She wanted that money to furnish their home—and she realized that the home meant more to her than all the diamond rings in the world.

She thought of the little brown-shingled house, empty and waiting because there was nothing to furnish it with. One evening she walked over there alone and found a light burning behind drawn window shades. Footsteps were echoing in the bare rooms. Perhaps it was Leonard—she pulled out her key and softly entered the house.

The light from the dining room chandelier shone into the living room and showed the walls had been papered in soft tan—even the ceiling had been done in ivory. In the dining room was a slap-slap as Leonard applied the paste to lengths of paper spread on a roughly constructed table.

Leonard was papering the rooms himself. Leonard, who worked so hard all day long that he was weary at night—who had gone without a vacation so that he might work in the house he was making ready for her—for the most selfish girl in the world, she told herself angrily.

"Leonard," she said softly, "I came to ask you for something," she whispered, her face against his old coat where a dab of wet paste clung; "I want the little lovers' knot ring back again."

"But the diamond—have you lost it?" he asked.

"No—but I want you to sell it and let us buy the furniture and be happy, and I feel more engaged with the little ring you gave me at first." He laughed and kissed her, holding her tight to his heart. Then he allowed her to pull the little ring out of his pocket and slip it on her third finger, while the diamond found its way into his pocket to be converted into furniture.

"Now I am happy," sighed Mildred, and the paste brush wobbled drippingly over their blissful heads.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

Civilization Hits Menagerie

In a few generations the elephant, the tiger, the lion and the rhinoceros will be extinct and found only in museum exhibits. Such is the prediction made by Alexander Barns, a British explorer, who recently visited America. CHAPTER VIII—Continued

—15—

"I wonder where the devil I am!" Leslie murmured.

Then his thoughts turned upon the big fighter whom he had knocked out. That knock-out, Leslie admitted, was more or less accidental. If the unknown stranger had not turned his head obligingly as an owl hooted, he would probably have won; but who was he, that he should stand guard outside the Hanby home at night?

Leslie presently dropped into a troubled sleep. When he awoke, there was the smell of strong tobacco in his cell. He looked into the twinkling eyes of Luigi Bartoli, strong man, coiner, and, alas for his impetuous temper, a double murderer.

"Where am I?" Leslie demanded.

Luigi was easily moved to mirth. This seemed an excellent jest.

"If I tell you," he answered, "thees happen to me!" He made the expressive gesture of cutting his throat. "You come with me. If you make-a much noise, I break-a your neck, so!" Again the graphic action of a man bending back the neck of a victim until the cervical vertebrae snapped. "Now!"

Leslie knew that this stocky jailer had the power to inflict such a punishment. His forearms were enormous, and his chest measurement could not be less than fifty inches.

Along a narrow stone corridor, lighted by an overhead electric lamp went Leslie and his jailer. Luigi paused outside a metal-sheathed door and knocked. Apparently he was bidden to enter, for he gripped Leslie by the wrist and pulled him in.

Mr. Appleton and two companions faced him. It was a room fifteen feet square, well furnished, and artificially lighted.

"Ah!" said Mr. Appleton benevolently. "Here we have Mr. Barron, Jr!" He turned to a good-looking, well-dressed woman, who was smoking a Russian cigarette. "I have the highest respect for this young gentleman's family."

"He Is Quite a Nice-Looking Boy, Isn't He?" the Woman Said.

"I don't like your way of showing it," Leslie snapped.

He had seen by this time that the third person was the wild faun, wholly at ease in a big chair, pulling at a cigar.

"He is quite a nice-looking boy isn't he?" the woman said, in a low-pitched, charming voice.

"The Barrons are all good-looking," said Mr. Appleton. "I have commented before on the Grecian cast of Mr. Leslie's head."

"Have the kindness to leave my head alone," Leslie growled.

"Certainly, certainly!" Mr. Appleton assented. "My attentions to it last night were dictated by motives of caution, not of hatred. Others were dependent upon me, and I must consider them. Mr. James Delaney here, formerly a power in the ward politics of our common city, seemed at the moment to be a corpse. You are younger, stronger, and fleeter of foot than I. I did not think you were in a frame of mind which would permit me to wish you good evening and disappear. Had you reported my presence to Mr. Hanby, a search would have been instituted which might have had unpleasant consequences."

"A search will be made," Leslie snapped, "and, believe me, it will have unpleasant consequences for you all!"

Appleton was urbane, unruffled.

"What makes you suppose that?"

"Because I shall be missed."

"But will you? That's the point."

"Why shouldn't I be missed?" Leslie said heatedly. "The Gray house isn't a hotel where one checks out and is promptly forgotten."

"Fortunately for us," said Mr. Appleton, "you did check out."

"That silly lying doesn't impress me."

Leslie was annoyed that the wild faun and the woman found in his assurance something almost humorous.

"But you have checked out—oh, dear me, yes!" Mr. Appleton took from his pocket the letter that Leslie wrote to Celia. "Miss Hanby will find this tomorrow. The references hidden from us will be clear to her. You have had a quarrel, it seems, and, with the folly I expect from youth, you have decided to go away. Very well, Mr. Barron, you have carried out your threat. Do you think Miss Celia will sink her pride to send out an alarm for you? No! 'This stupid, unappreciative lad,' she will say, 'will come back later to be forgiven. He shall find that there are others to console me.' Her parents, being still amazingly wrapped up in themselves, will not worry. Until I read this, I was a little perturbed at the situation; but you have clarified it."

Leslie opened his mouth to speak, but thought better of it. He was about to remind Appleton that the household would be alarmed because he had gone away in evening clothes, leaving his other belongings in disarray, and had neglected to take his automobile.

"We have attended to all that," Appleton said kindly, guessing his thoughts. "Oh, dear me, yes! A lifetime of a business in which detail plays so important a part is a great aid. I shall presently pack your grip. I have keys to every room in the house. I shall bring them to you here. Your car will be removed by James. It will be in Philadelphia by noon. Tomorrow night you would not recognize it. James has an interest in the business. You will be our guest here for a time."

"Where are we?" Leslie demanded.

His spirits had fallen. The Barrons were accustomed to his absences and long silences. The unfortunate letter would exasperate Celia. For some weeks, at all events, he would be an unsought prisoner.

"In Westchester county," replied Mr. Appleton. "We are the guests of one who is dear to me." He bowed with distinguished courtesy to the lady. "You will have no opportunity to escape."

"Am I held for ransom?"

"You are held because it would be inconvenient to let you go."

"You said it!" James commented. "So mighty inconvenient that it wouldn't make me sleep no worse if I had orders from the chief to croak you!"

Luigi here made his expressive gesture of slitting a windpipe.

A sudden panic swept over Leslie. He was not used to consorting with criminals. The sense of real danger came to him. He had no chance to escape, and at least two of three men were openly hostile. It must be that he was imperiling the success of some secret affair. The two might sway Appleton to their views. He glanced at them wildly.

"You can't get away with murder!" he cried.

"We should not try," Appleton told him considerately. "It would be an accident. Your body would be picked up in the sound. We might even arrange that it should be clad in a swimming costume. I rather think the Thimble Islands would be suitable—somewhere near Stony creek."

"Why frighten the nice-looking boy?" suggested the woman, in her caressing voice. "It is only if we think he is trying to escape that we should have to do that. Really and truly, Mr. Barron, we are not murderers or kidnapers.

"You will be held until a certain deal that we are putting through is successfully accomplished. Your treatment depends on yourself. Luigi will be your jailer. Look at him, Mr. Barron, and judge for yourself whether it would be wise to try to escape. He has carried a grand piano on that broad back of his. Luigi has a system which has proved very effective with another uninvited guest here."

"He eat-a out o' my hand now," Luigi said proudly. "Thees one, too!"

Assuredly Leslie could expect no mercy from Luigi, the strong man. So there was another prisoner! Leslie felt lonely and fearful. Why had he allowed himself to take offense at Celia? Celia! It was hard work to keep tears from his eyes as he thought of her. Perhaps she would never know how much he loved her. If cruel death took him here among these hardened men, she would think of him as one who allowed the irritation of a moment to overcome the affection he had protested.

Even in that moment Leslie wondered by what magic of authority the little plump man controlled such ruffians as these. There was no question of his dominance; and this was the same quiet, modest, affable person whom Leslie had grown used to seeing at the Hanby table, the man who rarely ventured an opinion, and listened deferentially to those of others! Of the three, Appleton seemed the most sinister and alarming.

CHAPTER IX

The day on which, as the Hanby family supposed, young Barron had taken his early morning departure, saw the arrival of half a dozen visitors. His absence was in a measure overshadowed. Mrs. Hanby spoke of Leslie, and hoped that there had been no quarrel. Celia assured her mother that he was no more than a friend, and that she was well satisfied to be rid of him for a little while.

Dina Hanby put her arm about the girl's shoulder.

"Do you expect me to believe you?" she asked. "I wonder what was in that letter he wrote to you!"

"Here it is," Celia said. "If you can interpret what he means by threatening to 'jump off the road for good,' I should like to know."

"I don't understand references to a 'wild faun,'" said Mrs. Hanby.

"That was nothing," Celia replied. "Here's dad with his house detective. Not a word to them! I'm going to play tennis with my new cousin. He looks most attractive. I've often wanted to contrast Ann Arbor and New Haven."

Dina looked at the two as they sauntered to the courts. Leslie had been very unwise to go just now, she thought.

"You two look as if you were conspiring," she said to her husband.

"I'm reminding Bill of what he said a few weeks back. He remarked that it was beneath the dignity of a lord of the manor to do his own sleuthing. Bill was boosting himself for the job."

"Have I fallen down?" Bill demanded.

Hanby's bantering tone ceased. Dina could see that something worried him.

"Bill," he said, "you have; but I shame myself, too. I assumed, rather illogically, that when Miss Selenos proved merely an emerald in disguise, we had been making mountains from molehills. Seymour's letter puzzled me; but when nothing happened, I put that aside. There was one other threat."

"The woman who said that Red Kerr was killed because he was like you in build? Oh, Hil, you don't think that was anything serious?"

"It prevents us from being dull," replied her husband, laughing. "I find I rather thrive on suspense, and certainly this house has given us enough surprises one way and another. I'm now due to show it to Tom Burton. He's a man who always has a hobby—some sort of bug or other. I've got to listen. Lords of the manor have their duties."

"Do you think he's nervous?" Bill Pelham asked, as he disappeared.

"Not a bit," replied Mrs. Hanby. "He's getting annoyed, and that means that he wants to fight. His mental reactions are quite simple. Look to your laurels, Bill, or he will get ahead of you in this affair. I wonder if there is anything in it!"

Some Original Ideas of American Builders

While siding and shingle exterior coverings for homes did not strictly originate in this country, being largely modifications of existing methods brought over by the early settler-artisans, the availability of the materials and suitability to native architectures give houses sheathed in siding or shingles a distinctly American flavor.

Houses covered with rough hewn siding boards, or clapboards, and crudely split shakes, or shingles, directly succeeded the first log cabins of the early colonists in this country. These materials have been refined by improved methods of manufacture into types which are individually appropriate to the variations of modern colonial architecture and to the architectures of other countries in American adaptations.

Cedar and pine and other durable native woods are used in modern manufacture of shingles and siding, which are frequently stained to enhance their appearance and resistance to weather. Wood siding and shingles have integral insulating value in themselves, increasing comfort and fuel economy in the winter and keeping the house cool in summer.

First to Cross Australia

The first journey across Australia was made in 1844-45, by Frederich Wilhelm Ludwig Leichhardt, who went from Germany to Australia in 1841. Setting out from Darling Downs, in the south of Queensland, he made his way to Port Essengton (Northern territory), the most northerly tip of Australia.

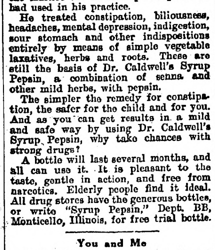
Australia Pictured as "Land of Opportunity"

An American salesman, who has spent several years in Australia, says that it is no uncommon thing for a man by farming to accumulate sufficient money to warrant his retirement in that country in ten years. The land is the asset of Australia. Farmers can start with little or no capital and in ten years can amass sufficient competence to retire, he said. He can take up 2,000 acres at 50 cents to $5 per acre, and can get advances from the National Agricultural bank with which to make the improvements.

The farmer has 30 years to pay off his farm, and the interest is only 5 per cent. The first five years he is not required to pay any interest at all. No man can take out more than 2,000 acres in his own name, but he is allowed to take out that much for each of his sons. The great problem of the country, however, is labor. The native labor is of a very indifferent character, but this is largely overcome by the use of agricultural machinery, and the machinery from the United States is the most favored by the farmers of Australia.



OLD FOLKS SAY DR. CALDWELL WAS RIGHT

The basis of treating sickness has not changed since Dr. Caldwell left Medical College in 1875, nor since he placed on the market the laxative prescription he had used in his practice.

He treated constipation, biliousness, headaches, mental depression, indigestion, sour stomach and other indispositions entirely by means of simple vegetable laxatives, herbs and roots. These are still the basis of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, a combination of senna and other mild herbs, with pepsin.

The simpler the remedy for constipation, the safer for the child and for you. And as you can get results in a mild and safe way by using Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, why take chances with strong drugs?

A bottle will last several months, and all can use it. It is pleasant to the taste, gentle in action, and free from narcotics. Elderly people find it ideal. All drug stores have the generous bottles, or write "Syrup Pepsin," Dept. BB, Monticello, Illinois, for free trial bottle.

You and Me

Little Charles was learning the alphabet.

"Now, this is big U," said his mother, pointing to the capital letter, "and this one beside it is little u. Can you remember that?"

"Oh, yes," the child replied confidently.

The next day his mother pointed to the same letters again.

"Can you tell me this morning what these letters are?" she asked him.

Charles's face beamed with pride as his chubby little finger pointed to the bold letters in his book.

"This," he said, "is big me and this is little me."

Making Angling Easier

A recently invented fishing reel automatically retrieves the line after a cast by means of a spring wound as the plug on the line travels through the air. The tension produced is sufficient to wind the reel after casts of 30 feet.

Pa in 'Em

Lewis O. Chasey, secretary to Governor Leslie, tells this story:

A visitor at a home heard an unusual commotion in an upstairs room.

"Say, sonny," he said to the youth with him, "what is that terrible noise upstairs? It sounds like the house was falling down."

"Oh, that is just ma dragging pa's pants around," replied the lad.

"Why, dragging a pair of pants around wouldn't make that much noise would it?"

"Yeah, 'cause pa's in 'em," the lad replied.

In the range country of the west thirty millions of sheep must be shorn annually. This important phase of the sheep industry has developed, in the professional shearer, a breed of men, who, for endurance and indifference to hardships have never been surpassed.

Upper—A shearing station near Boise, Idaho.

Lower—Professional shearers at work—150 sheep and more per man is the daily quota.

$500.00 Cash Goes to Nation's Fastest Shearer

The public is going to get a chance to become acquainted with the Professional Shearer, by witnessing his great skill in removing the fleece from the silver horde of the range.

Fifteen of the fastest sheep shearers in the United States will fight it out on one hundred woolies apiece at Great Falls, Montana, July 10 and 11, 1929. The first of these fifteen men who spreads his legs to permit his hundredth shorn sheep to lunge into the finished pen, will carry a new title, that of U. S. Champ Sheep Shearer. He will also be richer by at least Five Hundred Dollars, the largest cash sum ever paid any man for shearing one hundred sheep. The chances are, he'll also win one or more of the many other prizes, cash and trophies, that have been posted for the First U. S. Championship Sheep Shearing Contest.

Every man in this contest will be paid regular shearing rates for every sheep sheared by him during the contest. Each man finishing one hundred sheep during the contest will also be presented with an E-B Shearing Handpiece.

Cash prizes will go to the five men turning in the fastest time on one hundred sheep, first prize $500—2nd prize $250—3rd prize $150—4th prize $75 and 5th prize $50. The National Wool Growers Association will give a cash prize of $100 for the best appearing finished pen of sheep. In addition, twenty additional prizes, ranging in value from $5.00 to $50.00 have been posted for special shearing events during the course of the contest.

The arrangements are such that every man who competes in this big event will participate in the winnings, as well as have the satisfaction of working on the last run of the season. The purpose of the contest is threefold. It will decide who is the Champ U. S. sheep shearer. It will establish an official U. S. Record on shearing one hundred sheep, and it will demonstrate in a practical way the thorough efficiency of modern shearing methods.

In the United States, the shearer and his work have been unsung. Only a limited few know anything of the romance of this profession, the splendid type of men who follow it, or the tremendous feats of endurance that they must perform to qualify for the annual shearing runs. The thousands who will witness the event in the Livestock Pavilion at Great Falls, Montana, July 10th and 11th are sure to experience new thrills sounding the keynote of modern existence—SPEED.

Professional Shearers are requested to write to Contest Committee, Montana Wool Growers Association, Placer Hotel Building, Helena, Montana for full details at once. They should write at once, so entry can be arranged well in advance of the big contest.

We have received some very interesting letters from Ernest Raaum telling all about their trip out to Vashon, Washington, where they will make their future home.

They arrived there all well and happy, and had good luck with their cars, with the exception of a few scratches on the fenders of the new Chevrolet which was caused when they were on a narrow road in the mountains.

We are this week publishing a weed cutting notice for the village authorities and it is our hope that every citizen of Holt will do their part in cleaning up the town for weeds.

Cut all weeds as it not only improves the looks of our town but, it also improves your property.

Walmer Risberg and family from Thief River Falls visited with relatives here Tuesday evening.

The annual Danish-American Festival was held on the State Fair grounds, Sunday, July 14. Several thousand persons participated in the day's program.

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Hanson spent Saturday afternoon at Grand Forks.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Peterson and two daughters returned home last week from Detroit, Mich., where they have spent some time visiting with relatives.

Send us the news of your community.

Mrs. J. Hagberg left last week for Glydon to be with Mrs. R. A. Holmgren who has been very sick.

Weed Cutting Notice

Notice is hereby given that all land owners and renters of land in Holt and Excel Townships are requested to cut all weeds on the farms and along the road sides, before August 1st, 1929.

Farmers should attend to this at once and not wait for the weed inspector to come and order it done, which he will do, if, you do not do it yourself.

Farm Homes Prefer the SELF-POWERED MAYTAG

FARM homes with electricity, farm homes without, can have the world's finest washer. The Maytag gasoline Multi-Motor is as finely engineered as an automobile engine. It is as compact as the electric motor and is held by the same four bolts.

Bronze bearings, flood-proof carburetor, Bosch high-tension magneto and speed governor give the Multi-Motor a smooth, dependable flow of power. A step on the pedal starts it.

FREE for a Week's Washing

Good Lamps Are Needed

See that your lamps are O. K., is the advice of Earle Brown, chief of the motor patrol of the Minnesota Highway department. "If you drive on the highways at night with one head light, with the rear light out, or with glaring lights, the patrolmen may get you", says Mr. Brown.

"But worse things than that may happen. The patrolmen will treat you courtesously and give you a chance to have your lights corrected, and by doing so may save you from a bad accident. But if you do not get your lights fixed, it is only a question of time until you will have some trouble.

"Driving with one light is always dangerous. It is confusing to the drivers you meet. Sooner or later someone will make a wrong guess on which light is out, and there will be a collision.

"Glaring lights show lack of courtesy to other drivers. They are a source of danger to everyone you meet. But they are a greater danger to yourself. Glaring lights are seldom caused by too high candle power, but by improperly adjusted bulbs which throw the lights upward instead of illuminating the road. If you have your lights tested at one of the official light adjusting stations, it will make your night driving 100 per cent safer and more pleasant.

"Dead tail lights are another source of danger, bad enough when you are driving but worse when you stop along the road side. For safty sake, see that your lights are lit."

Hunters are enthusiastic in their reception of the lower prices on Winchester shells. The famous repeater, 12 gauge, load now under one dollar. Ranger shells 75c per box in case lots. Thief River Falls.

LESSON 70

PRODUCTION: Between corn planting and stacking is a time on some farms when there seems to be no place for manure except in the barn yard. This is just the most necessary time for it to be hauled out. Left in the barn yard it breeds millions of flies, more than there would be if removed. During the summer months manure should be applied as a top dressing for pasture or the mowed meadow.

MANUFACTURING: Sweet Cream Butter has three advantages over other butter that makas it more profitable from the dairymen's standpoint. Its taste is best, thereby winning and holding more trade. It pays the farmer to produce sweet cream and the to make sweet cream butter.

MARKETING: Farmers need to be organized to market their products to the best advantage. The fight for higher tariff, not alone on butter, but on milk and cream and on products made from skim milk and butter milk, such as casein and buttermilk powder and on vegetable oils that are used for butter substitutes, show how important it is for farmers to be organized. The tariff on butter has given farmers 6 cents more per pound at least.

"Hot Pack" Canning

Canning by the "hot pack" method is rapidly gaining favor over the cold pack, as well as over the old open-kettle plan, says Mrs. Kathryn B. Niles, foods instructor of the home economics division, University Farm, St. Paul. The pack combines the advantages of the other two methods, besides affording some additional ones, she adds.

In the cold pack method, fruits or vegetables are packed cold into containers and sterilized in a water bath, pressure canner or oven. Products needing to be peeled are "blanched" in hot water or steam and then dipped in cold water. Syrup or brine is added, usually boiling hot. The chief disadvantage of this plan is that more time is required for sterilization, since the material at the center of the can heats slowly. Shrinkage is sometimes greater, also, than with other methods.

In the hot pack method, a short precooking is substituted for the blanching. The cold dip is omitted, except for removel of peels. Precooking consists of cooking in a small quanity of liquid until it boils.

This thoroughly wilts and shrinks the material so as to facilate packing, and drives out any inclosed air. The material is filled, boiling hot, into hot containers, sealed airtight and processed immediately. Thereby the time needed for sterilization is decreased considerably for all sizes of containers.

The U. S. Department of Agriculture, in Farmers' Bulletin No. 1471, discourages the canning of non-acid fruits and vegetables, except when sterilization can be accomplished under pressure, at temperatures above boiling. Housewives who do not have pressure canners may secure information about correct methods and cooking periods by writing the Division of Home Economics, University Farm, St. Paul.

Injured By Wild Horse

J. P. Tobin, farmer living about four miles northwest of town, was badly hurt on Saturday when a horse he was using started a rumpus in the barn. Mr. Tobin was knocked down and stepped on by the horse, causing such injuries that he was unconcious for several hours.

The Roseau County Fair had a good attendance at its three day celebration lastweek.

Survey Completed

Work was last week completed, whereby the United States Government, thru the Migratory Bird Acts has completed the survey of both Thief and Mud lakes, with the idea in mind of establishing a Migratory bird refuge at one or the other places.

This work has been under the supervision of H. Hicks and was assisted by Geo. Chittick and H. C. Bennett, who departed Saturday for North Dakota where they will work on a similar project.

The work being done by these gentlemen consisted of making a survey of the entire lake bottom, also platting area on the outer edge or any portion that might be affected by flooding of the area. Each meadow, either large or small; was placed in its particular classification, there being three classes, brush land and timber land were handled and platted in a similar manner.

H. C. Jung and C. H. Porter, the former is President of the Isaac Waltonen league, and the latter an old time hunter, both of Thief River Fall were here Friday afternoon in conference with the gentlemen doing the work. Waltonen leagues in this part of the state are a little bit worried about the Federal Government taking over Thief Lake and making a permanent refuge of it. It was thot that the state would take over this property and make a partial refuge of same.

The editor has hunted in both areas, and knows the two bottoms very well and we believe that if anything is done by the United States Government it will be done in the Mud Lake bottom.
—Record, Middle River.

Is That So?

We are sorry to say that we noticed so few of the citizens of Holt paid any attention to the weed cutting notice which the Village Council had us publish last week. The time was set for Aug. 1st, for all the weeds to be cut, but as so little action was taken by the people, the time has been extended by us to August 10.

Be good to yourself and your neighbor by cutting the weeds on your property or on the premises which you rent. A place with a lot of weeds on it gives it the appearance of being vacant.

Several young boys and girls from this community were confirmed at the Nazareth Luthern church on Sunday.

Attended Outing

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Hanson took in the first annual summer outing of the Border Press Association held at Fort Fraces, Ontario, Canada, on Saturday. About one hundred of the members and visitors from both sides of the line were there. We can say that we were royally entertained by our brother publishers across the line while in their dominion city.

Good speeches were made by the mayors of Fort Frances and International Falls, Hon. Peter Heenan, Minister of Labor for Canada, Hon. Ray. P. Chase, State Auditor of our State of Minnesota and several other men whom were active in organizing the new association.

We appreciated the outing very much and hope that all the good fellows we met there will be at the next meeting next year.

Three More Acts At Fair

Eleven platform acts are being presented each afternoon and evening at the Pennington County Fair which is now under way at Thief River Falls, the fair management having hired three additional acts at a meeting Monday night. This is by far the biggest program that has ever been offered there and is a splended variety of entertainment.

More than sixty horses have been entered for the three days of racing and the track is in excellent condition.

A special twenty-five dollar prize is being offered to any horse that lowers the track record which is now 2.10 flat. If weather continues favorable this is very likely to happen.

The fair will continue through Saturday this year, a four day schedule having been arranged instead of the usual three days. The new grand stand will provide ample seating room for visitors. Children under twelve years of age admitted free.

The Better Understanding

What Will you do When your Children Cry for It

There is hardly a household that hasn't heard of Castoria! At least five million homes are never without it. If there are children in your family, there's almost daily need of its comfort. And any night may find you very thankful there's a bottle in the house. Just a few drops, and that colic or constipation is relieved; or diarrhea checked. A vegetable product; a baby remedy meant for young folks. Castoria is about the only thing you have ever heard doctors advise giving to infants. Stronger medicines are dangerous to a tiny baby, however harmless they may be to grown-ups. Good old Castoria! Remember the name, and remember to buy it. It may spare you a sleepless, anxious night. It is always ready, always safe to use; in emergencies, or for everyday ailments. Any hour of the day or night that Baby becomes fretful, or restless. Castoria was never more popular with mothers than it is today. Every druggist has it.

NEW VIRGINIA CAVE OPENED TO PUBLIC

Famed for Part Played in Civil War.

Harrisonburg, Va.—Another beautiful underground world—the Blue Grottoes, the caverns used in part by soldiers of the Civil war as a hiding place and camping site and on the walls of which are inscribed the names of thousands of Confederate and Union warriors from Ohio, Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia—was formally opened by Col. E. T. Brown and his son, Maj. Edward M. Brown, who have spent more than $100,000 in developing this cave.

The opening of the Blue Grottoes makes six caverns in operation in the limestone country of the Shenandoah valley. More than $1,000,000 have been spent in developing these caverns for sightseeing purposes and it is known that $5,000,000 has been refused for them from northern capitalists seeking to operate the group as one chain.

The Blue Grottoes was developed by the Brown interests, which have expended more than $1,000,000 in developing the Endless Caverns near New Market, the Natural Chimneys and Sapphire Pool near Mount Solon, Va.

Chief interest in Blue Grottoes centers around the thousands of names of Civil war soldiers which are inscribed upon its walls and which can easily be read today. The caverns also have the vari-colored formation peculiar to places of this kind and which are formed by drops of water through limestone formations extending over thousands of years. The caverns are located eight miles north of Harrisonburg on the Valley pike and run under a huge limestone knoll on the Moore farm.

During the Civil war both Confederate and Union soldiers made part of these caverns, running back under the knoll, a hiding place and a camping site, especially in stormy weather. The mouth of the cave was large enough for many horses to enter. In fact, the first opening was used as a stable for horses. The soldiers would go back further into the channel where, safe and unmolested from the enemy, they carved their names on the sides of the walls.

Costs Exactly $777 to Become Belgian Baron

Brussels.—It costs exactly $777, or 27,000 Belgian francs, to become a baron of the kingdom of Belgium. And there is no record as yet of any person having refused the title because it cost too much.

King Albert confers from three to five titles of nobility every year, mostly to elderly gentlemen of great merit. In most cases the title of baron is conferred and only in exceptional cases is it a hereditary title. So the number of noblemen is not much increased by the king's annual distribution of titles, as the holders and their wives usually are too aged to enjoy it for a long time, and their children do not benefit from it at all.

The expenses of becoming a baron are rather high, because the state levies a tax on registering any new title of nobility. The official recording of a title costs $150. The title of baron is taxed $110 besides, while a new viscount has to pay $150 in addition, a prince or duke $300. To this is added the expenses for a certificate. The certificate is a marvelous document, hand written by experts and hand painted in the manner of medieval documents. Without such a certificate the title is not worth a cent. With the certificate it is worth at least the $777 paid for it, and, in the eyes of the world, probably much more.

Five or six cases are known where men refused the honor of becoming a baron or count. They did so because they thought their name was good enough without the title. Among these was Mayor Adolphe Max of Brussels.

Flees Jail With Key Made From Pocket Comb

Modesto, Calif.—That "stone walls do not a prison make, nor iron bars a cage" is nothing less than the truth, if you only possess a pocket comb.

That was proven here by Jack Burnett, twenty-two, wanted on nine counts of larceny and burglary.

Burnett opened his jail door with a key fashioned out of a comb. His absence was discovered within half an hour and his description broadcast. A few minutes later he was reported entering a residence by a rear door. Police Captain Arington answered the call.

Arington and Burnett discovered each other simultaneously. The youthful bandit proved clever not only with a comb, but also with his feet. He outdistanced the law officer and was still at liberty at the last report.

Dog, Cat, Groundhogs Live Happily Together

Lithopolis, Ohio.—The "happiest" family in the animal kingdom, composed of three baby groundhogs, two kittens, a spaniel dog, and a cat, lives at the home here of Frank Rothfuss.

The burden of this unique family falls upon the dog and cat. The cat brought in the groundhogs which became so friendly with the kittens that they were adopted.

For guarding the kittens, the dog is rewarded with food gathered by the cat on her foraging trips.

JEWELRY OF CZAR JUST MELTED AWAY

Brooklyn Woman Discovers She Was Gypped.

New York.—When the Russian crown jewels melted and ran down the side of her kitchen radiator Mrs. Rebecca Barasch of 556 Crown street, Brooklyn, knew that she had been gypped.

She was further convinced when the few jewels which did not melt proved to be a poor grade of glass, and as a result she spent three days in the rogues' gallery at police headquarters.

In the end she succeeded in identifying three men from whom she had bought the treasure of the late Romanoff for $900, and all three were arrested and locked up at Brooklyn police headquarters on charges of grand larceny.

They said they were Stefano Anillo, thirty-four years old; Frank Russo, thirty-six, and Emanuel Fallacana, thirty. On being questioned regarding the jewel transaction all three denied they were in any way connected with it. Mrs. Barasch, however, is positive in her identification, and the police believe that the men have been doing a big business in the name of the late czar during the last few months.

Spoke in Russian.

According to Mrs. Barasch two of them, Anillo and Fallaccano, met her at the corner of New York avenue and Union street, May 22, and started talking in Russian. She is sixty-five years old and the sound of her native tongue was pleasant to hear.

The two told her they were refugees from the Soviet regime and that they were anxious to find the local Russian colony.

"You see," said one, "we stole the czar's crown jewels. They are worth a fabulous fortune and we must either sell them or give them to somebody to keep for us."

Mrs. Barasch had heard about the crown jewels being sold on the Rue de la Paix, but apparently forgot about it. She asked to see them, and was shown a pocketful of gleaming, crystal diamonds. They almost took her breath away but she asked:

"How can I tell that they are real?"

Drew Out 900.

"Why we will take you around to any jewelry store," offered one of the refugees, and they started out. As they were about to enter one, Russo, it is alleged, stepped from the doorway. He was identified as a jeweler and appraised the pocket of diamonds as being authentic, and worth a fortune.

In the end Mrs. Barasch took all three men to her bank. She drew out every cent that she had, $900, and apologized for not having more.

Then she took the Romanoff fortune home in her handkerchief and laid it out on the radiator while she prepared dinner. There were 20 big diamonds in all. Mrs. Barasch thought herself as wealthy as Czar Nicholas was, but when half way through peeling the potatoes she happened to cast a glance at her treasure.

Only eight remained. The others were a puddle of paste on the floor and these eight she later found to be glass.

In arresting the three men, the detectives stated that they watched their house for three days and that reports of their having sold crown jewels in Detroit have been received.

Cult Quitting Kansas; Opposed to Tractors

Dodge City, Kan.—In the past six months there has been a steady exodus of the Amish people from southwest Kansas until only about four families are left of a community which had numbered more than 200.

The farmers of the Amish cult, who are frugal and successful, refuse to give in to the machinery age. They won't use tractors or install telephones or even window shades in their homes. They also oppose insurance, radio, phonographs and all musical instruments.

Rather than surrender their horses and their methods of farming, these people are moving to New Jersey, Virginia and Maryland, where they believe they can farm according to their own methods.

Technicality Saves Man From 2½ Years in Jail

Springfield, Mass.—Because a legislative committee, in revising the statutes, failed to insert the word "blackjack" in the list of dangerous weapons, Robert Byrd, thirty-nine, escaped a possible two and a half year jail sentence here. He was charged with carrying a blackjack but his lawyer pointed out that the statutes as revised did not mention the blackjack as a dangerous weapon.

Jury Finds Capital Jail Unhealthful

Washington.—The district jail where the oil magnate, Harry F. Sinclair, and his associate, H. Mason Day, are spending the summer, has been described as antiquated and unhealthful in a report by the grand jury. Attaches declare that neither Sinclair nor Day has suffered any ill effects.

FINDS OXYGEN IS REALLY TRIPLETS

New Facts Discovered by Study of Light.

Berkeley, Calif.—Oxygen, the gas which constitutes a fifth of the air we breathe, and which is essential to our life, is really triplets. It is not twins, as was recently suggested, or single, as it was thought for many years.

This has been discovered here by two University of California experimenters, Prof. W. F. Giauque and H. L. Johnstone. They have found that oxygen in the air consists not only of the element with atomic weight of sixteen but that there are small numbers of heavier atoms.

Some weigh seventeen and others weigh eighteen. These make up forms of oxygen which are like ordinary oxygen in all respects except atomic weight, and are called isotopes of oxygen. Many other elements, notably lead, have been found to have isotopes, chemically similar, but of different atomic weight.

The investigators have discovered this fact from a study of the way light is absorbed as it passes through a thick layer of air, as with sunlight in the late afternoon. The oxygen absorbs certain wave lengths of light, and from these Professor Giauque and Mr. Johnstone have calculated the weight of the atoms that produce the effect.

Recently they found that some of the oxygen molecules were made of an atom of weight sixteen combined with one of weight eighteen. Since they announced this they have discovered the presence of the third isotope, so that there is still a third kind of oxygene molecule, consisting of an atom of weight sixteen combined with one of weight seventeen.

However, the atoms of weight sixteen must be in the vast majority, and the typical molecule must consist of a pair of atoms of weight sixteen, as the atomic weight of ordinary oxygen has been determined to be sixteen with great precision.

Any great amount of the other isotopes would make the average atomic weight of oxygen appreciably greater than this figure.

Man 75 Years Old, Has Never Seen Picture Show

Ishpeming, Mich.—Although he is seventy-five years old and has lived here 48 years, John Baer has never seen a movie show or any other show. John has never had a ride in an automobile either, and he says he doesn't believe all he hears about airplanes.

He says movies, carnivals, circuses, stage shows and all tended attractions are humbug. The owner of the local theater has often tried to get John to come to a movie show, offering him free admission, but he has always declined.

Old John is a bachelor and a woman hater. "Women are a humbug," he declared. "I never married and I never will," he said, when asked why he had not taken a wife.

John is interested in what is going on in the country and everyone he meets he asks "What's the news?" If they can't tell him anything, he has no time for them and continues to walk the streets in quest of information. He walks the streets from early in the morning until early in the evening and goes to bed at 6:30 o'clock every night.

The only woman John knows is his sister, Mrs. Barbara Drockey, over eighty years old, with whom he lives.

Baer has not ridden in a railway train for 48 years. That was when he came from Humboldt here, just a few miles away. John says he never liked automobiles.

He has a fondness for chewing tobacco and says he has used "bales" of it.

Strenuous Task Faced by Far North Judge

Edmonton, Alberta.—Two Eskimos now being held at Aklavik on criminal charges are to be tried at that Far Northern point this summer before Judge Dubuc, stipendiary magistrate for the Northwest territories. E. C. Darling will be the crown prosecutor and Joseph A. Clarke will be counsel for the accused.

A charge of murder has been lodged against Okchina, an Eskimo, who is alleged to have killed another Eskimo named Oksuk at Bathurst Inlet. Lily Sarniya will be tried on a charge of infanticide alleged to have been committed at Demarcation Point, in the Yukon territory. Both prisoners are now in the custody of the mounted police at Aklavik.

The judicial party, setting out from here, will require from six weeks to two months to reach the place where court will be held. Four thousand miles will be covered by the party making the trip.

Youth Bites Dog's Ear When It Attacks Girl

Dundee, Scotland.—John Campbell, a young clerk of Dundee, was out walking with his fiancee near her home.

The girl accidentally trod on a dog's tail and it turned and buried its teeth in her leg. She screamed with pain and tried to kick the dog away without success. Campbell, finding nothing handy with which to beat off the dog, tried to pull it away.

At his wit's end, he stooped over and bit the dog's ear. The animal set up a howl and ran off.

Birds That Qualify as Farmer's Good Friends

Although both cuckoo and quail are worth cultivating for their insect-eating propensities, the grosbeak is the most valuable of the lot where the farmer is concerned and should be given every chance to propagate throughout the country, says Howard T. Middleton in an article in the Farm Journal.

This little member of the finch family, with its oversized mouth, is particularly fond of potato bugs, it is found, and, if unmolested, will build its nest at the edge of potato fields and guard them throughout the growing season.

"It is a conservative estimate that one-tenth of the grosbeak's diet is made up of potato bugs," says Mr. Middleton, "but he also preys with relish upon cucumber beetles, cankerworms, caterpillars, army worms, cut worms and chinch bugs."

Examination of the cuckoo's stomach reveals that he specializes in caterpillars and other crawling creatures, while the quail finds the potato bug his favorite item of diet in season.

Too Bold

Elinor Glyn, the novelist and scenario writer, said at a wedding breakfast in Los Angeles:

"Young bridegrooms should be thrifty; they should look the future boldly in the face; yet they should always decline such an offer as Jones, the jeweler's.

"A young man went slowly into Jones' and blushed and said bashfully that he'd like to buy a ring. Jones beamed on him and answered:

"'Here, young fellow, right here in this tray is the very thing you want—our famous combination three-piece set comprising engagement, wedding and teething ring combined.'"

Of Course

John S. Sumner, of anti-vice renown, said at a dinner in New York:

"Of course the pictures need censoring.

"Two little girls, as they came out of Sunday school the other day, talked together.

"'So your nurse is taking you to the movies, is she?' said the first little girl. 'What are you going to see?'

"'Nursie wants to see "Fast Life in Paris,"' said the second one, 'but I'm all set for "Why Women Fall".'"

Prize for Peabody Museum

The skeleton of a morosaurus, a type of dinosaur, which had been on hand since 1880, recently was put together and mounted at Peabody museum, Yale university. The wait of more than forty years was hardly a watch tick in the history of this giant beast, for it lived at a period estimated at 120,000,000 years ago. It came from Wyoming, the first of its species to be discovered.

She turned her head to where her husband was walking with Professor Burton, whose son was trying to impress Celia with the idea that a college boy, at twenty, stands on an intellectual eminence not easily comprehensible to others. Professor Burton held a chair in philosophy, but it was with living things that his leisure was occupied. Mrs. Burton and Mrs. Hanby were cousins.

"No," said the professor, "I've long ago given up the coleoptera in favor of something more fascinating. I started by way of the reptiles, and came logically to the birds."

"Logically?" said Hanby. "I don't see that, but then I'm ignorant in these matters. If you're interested in birds, you've come to the right spot, Tom. I've got about the best bird sanctuary in the state."

On his way to it Hanby poured into Professor Burton's ears some of the wisdom that had come to him over the wire from the unknown millionaire ornithologist. Hanby's memory was good, and he forgot nothing.

"You flatter me," said the other, when he finished. "You have quoted almost verbatim from my article published in the May number of Popular Natural History."

"So that's where he got it from!" Hanby commented, a trifle ruffled. "I thought the old faker was giving me something from his own published dope."

Hanby related the incident. Professor Burton shook his head.

"You must have made a mistake in the name. Remember, Hil, this is my pet hobby, and I know every writer on our birds. I'm president of my State Ornithological association, and corresponding member of a score of others. I'm in touch with every ornithologist in this country, but I have never heard of your millionaire. He is neither a contributor to the literature of the subject nor a donor of funds for bird conservation. Some of your friends have been playing a joke on you."

Half an hour later the professor had changed his clothes to khaki and puttees. He was armed with sketch books, notebooks, and a costly camera. He declined any aid. He even resented it. Every now and then it could be seen that he despised the amateur ornithologist. His luncheon had been put up for him, and he promised to be in time to dress for dinner.

He was glad, as he fought his way along, that he was armed with leather gauntlets and stout clothes. Nature had placed about this little sanctuary a seemingly impenetrable barrier.

He had begun to despair of reaching the distant mound when he saw that this solid hedge came to an end. He stepped from it to a path worn by the foot of man—a path three feet across, bearing the impress of recent treading.

Professor Burton set out to follow the path to its end. Presently it brought him to a stream, sunk at least ten feet below the surrounding ground. It was this stream, he supposed, which had been diverted in order that the twenty-acre lake half a mile away might be fed.

He resumed his silent walk along the path. The acrid smell of a cigar smote his nose. He knew the noisome long and narrow cigars which only native Indians enjoy. Then the odor was wafted from him, and he found his path dropping toward the stream level.

The professor stopped. He had suddenly encountered a stranger.

It would be difficult to say which of the two seemed the more amazed. The professor looked upon a small but well-proportioned man dressed with conservative elegance. The stranger's face was florid, and his mild blue eyes were accentuated in size by reason of strong lenses.

Mr. Appleton, for his part, thought he had run across an inquiring scout master laden with all the impedimenta that his position demanded. Burton was tall and slight, and suggested erudition.

"How did you get here," Mr. Appleton began, "and by whose leave have you trespassed thus?"

"I am kin by marriage to Mr. Hanby," said the professor. "He gave me permission. Your status, sir, is not so clear."

"In order to make my position clear," he said frankly, "I must term myself a sanitation expert. Mr. Hanby has heard that former tenants of the Gray house have suffered from sewer-gas poisoning. He does not wish to alarm his family and visitors. I am, therefore, making a sort of secret investigation. Much water settles here, as the luxuriant foliage shows. I have been commissioned to determine upon the healthfulness of this spot, and to make what recommendations I see fit.

"Before doing so, I should like you to come with me and see more. You cannot possibly judge from here."

Professor Burton followed the other along a winding pathway, until he was in the thicket's very center. When his guide paused on the edge of an opening, the professor exclaimed upon the oddity of a lake, filled in, as he had supposed, being open instead.

"It was only partially filled in," Mr. Appleton told him. "When I took charge of the work, I had my own views—very interesting views, too," he added, chuckling. "Oh, dear me, yes! They amuse me even now. You can settle a moot point for me." He looked over the edge of the opening, gazing intently at some low bushes whose roots were in the moist earth. "What is that?" Appleton asked. "Look at it and tell me."

Professor Burton moved toward the edge and peered down.

"Is this one of the things that amuse you?" he demanded.

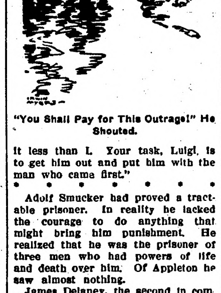
"Yes," said Mr. Appleton, smiling. With that he gave the other a push. The professor, with waving arms, sought to recover his balance, but failed. He went up to his knees in mud. His precious camera had parted company from him. The spectacle of the amiable gentleman with the florid face, who smiled down at him angered him. He shook a muddy fist.

"You shall pay for this outrage!" he shouted.

"Perhaps," said Appleton cryptically, "but not just yet."

Mr. Appleton gave another of his excellent owl imitations. In a few moments Luigi Bartoli joined him.

"In order that he might not escape," Appleton explained, "I had to push him down there. He enjoyed it less than I. Your task, Luigi, is to get him out and put him with the man who came first."



"You Shall Pay for This Outrage!" He Shouted.

* * * * * * *

Adolf Smucker had proved a tractable prisoner. In reality he lacked the courage to do anything that might bring him punishment. He realized that he was the prisoner of three men who had powers of life and death over him. Of Appleton he saw almost nothing.

James Delaney, the second in command, knew Smucker's sort, and despised him. Luigi was his jailer. He enjoyed incendiary talk. The day could not come too quickly which would permit of looting, unattended with death penalties.

By this time Smucker was so much the prey of delusions that he had almost forgotten his home and family. He brooded upon the chaotic day when, by the alchemy of strange events, he should be high among those whose mission it was to destroy. Luigi, who cringed to capital in the guise of Appleton, would be an early victim.

Adolf Smucker looked up, that afternoon, to find his cell invaded by a stranger—not such a man as the previous young capitalist in evening dress, but a worker clad in muddy khaki, stained and torn.

Professor Burton wondered at the heartiness of his welcome. After he had been an hour in Smucker's company, he spoke incisively.

"Your mania," he said, "is termed dementia praecox. Our word 'precocious' comes from the common root. It means that your intellect is unable to assimilate the ideas you crowd into it. Be kind enough to leave me in silence. I find such twaddle as yours extremely tedious."

Infuriated at this, Smucker attacked the professor. He was rescued by Luigi. The professor was bigger, stronger, and in a rather evil temper. Luigi dragged him to another small stone room and shut the door.

"What the devil?" said Leslie Barron, rudely awakened.

"I am not the devil," snapped the professor, "but I feel like him. I have been brutally beaten. A Caliban from southern Italy has promised to twist my head from by neck. I am in no mood for the ordinary social amenities."

"Another nut!" sighed Leslie. "Tell me, if you've any decency left, whereabouts I am."

"You are in what my cousin Hilton Hanby terms a bird sanctuary. You, I take it, are one of the birds. I presume that I am another."

"I was blackjacked by that infernal Appleton. I had an idea that I'd been put in an automobile and taken miles away."

Leslie recounted the misadventures he had suffered.

"Never mind!" said the other. "You will be rescued when they get me out."

"Cheery little optimist, aren't you?" Leslie retorted. "That man Appleton is the devil. He'll arrange it so that you won't be looked for."

"Impossible!" said the professor.

Leslie Barron was right. Appleton, who had a skill with the pen that might have earned him a great name among forgers, was at that very moment looking at Professor Burton's notes and forging a letter. He called to mind the professor's way of speaking. This is what Mrs. Burton read:

> Have sustained injury to corner of right eye through a thorn spike. Inadvisable to trust to local physician. Have accepted offer of passing motorist to go to a specialist. Do not worry. Will telephone you from the city.

"Tom is always nervous about his eyesight," Mrs. Burton declared. "It is just like him to rush to see a specialist. Oh, why was I out?"

"You couldn't have done anything if you had been here," her cousin said, comforting her. "We shall have a telephone call before long."

But nothing was heard from Professor Burton.

CHAPTER X

At one o'clock in the morning Bill Pelham heard a rap on his door. Hilton Hanby entered. Behind him was Junior. They were both dressed as if for hiking.

"Am I asleep at the switch?" Bill cried, rubbing his eyes. "What is it?"

"Florence Burton is going to see the Pine Plains police tomorrow," Hanby answered. "I can't blame her. You know what that means. Every movement of Tom's will be traced. I suppose I shall have to tell everything I know, from Miss Selenos down to this last disappearance. Dina says she thinks Tom has been murdered."

"You don't mean to say you've got some explanation?" inquired Pelham, with incredulity in his voice.

"I mean just that. If you'll get up and put some such kit as this on, I'll tell you."

"Shoot!" Pelham urged. "I'll be ready in three minutes."

"The last I saw of Tom Burton was when he walked toward that bird sanctuary—those acres that I've guarded so carefully. I don't deny he might have run a spike in his eye. It may be that he's in a nursing home, and we shall have a wire from him in the morning. I've been thinking about that sanctuary a whole lot. It doesn't owe its conservation to any idea of mine. I should never have thought of it but for that talk over the telephone with a man who deliberately slurred his name so that I shouldn't get it straight. Another thing—this man pretended to be a writer on bird subjects, and yet he quoted in extenso from an article that Tom Burton wrote. The man was a liar, but he gained his end. I did not have the thicket removed. He evidently wanted it kept as it was, and I obediently fell into the trap." Hanby's manner was impressive. "Bill, there's something wrong about that bird sanctuary!"

"I believe you're right," agreed Pelham, much impressed. "Who could have done it?"

"Dad thinks," Junior broke in, "that we ought to see what that bird sanctuary really contains." He took an automatic pistol from his pocket, and handed it to Pelham. "Dad and I have one each."

Wedding "Gifts" Once Held Legal Obligation

By a wedding custom common in the British isles until the early part of the Nineteenth century, the couple sent out invitations in which presents were solicited from those who accepted the bidding. More strange, these solicited gifts were regarded in the light of debts to be paid back by the couple. On the eve of the wedding the groom received at his house presents of money, cheese, butter and cattle from his friends, and the bride received similar gifts at her house from her friends. An account of each gift and the giver was kept in writing by the clerk of the wedding and the presents then became debts, which in some cases were transferrable or assignable to other persons. In other words these wedding gift-debts were repayable upon demand at any time, and upon refusal, recoverable at law.

It was in Scotland, however, where a wedding became a real business event. At their "penny weddings" of the last century the expense of the marriage was defrayed not by the couple or their friends, but by the guests all of whom paid something —or stayed away.—Detroit News.

Air's Temperature

The temperature of the air at a given place depends not only on the sunshine it is then getting but also on its own recent history. Wind from the south on a cloudy day may be as warm as wind from the north on a sunshiny day. This is particularly true when as often happens, these winds have come a long way. Furthermore, when it is warm, humid air feels warmer than dry air at the same temperature. —Washington Star

(A Delaware Corporation)

Fifteen-Year 6% Convertible Gold Debentures

Dated August 1, 1929 Due August 1, 1944

Interest payable February 1 and August 1 without deduction for normal Federal income tax not exceeding 2%. The Company will agree to refund to holders, upon proper application, any State income tax not exceeding 5% per annum, and in Massachusetts not exceeding 6% per annum, and personal property and security taxes in certain States as provided in the Trust Indenture. Redeemable at any time as a whole or in part on 60 days' published notice at 105 and accrued interest. Coupon Debentures in interchangeable denominations of $1,000 and $500 registerable as to principal only. Central Hanover Bank and Trust Company, Trustee.

Debentures will be convertible, at the option of the holder, at any time prior to maturity, or up to five days prior to earlier redemption, into Common Stock at the rate of 40 shares for each $1,000 principal amount.

H. H. Fish, Esq., President of the Company, summarizes from his letter to us as follows:

BUSINESS

Western Newspaper Union, successor to a company of the same name and a business founded in 1865, serves more than 10,000 daily and weekly country newspapers, maintaining fully equipped plants in 36 key cities of the United States from California to Massachusetts.

The Company supplies these newspapers with ready printed inside pages or with columns of prepared plate, containing various feature stories, serials and special articles selected by the newspaper publishers; places national advertising in their papers and prepares cuts and copy for local advertising campaigns.

The Company also does a large volume of commercial printing, prints in their entirety various magazines and trade journals and is responsible for the mechanical production of many of the feature services of The Associated Press.

FINANCIAL

During the past 20 years net profits of Western Newspaper Union, after all charges including depreciation, but before Federal taxes, averaged more than $680,000 annually, and in no single year were such net profits less than $450,000.

Net profits after depreciation, but before Federal taxes, for the past 4 years, as certified by Messrs. Arthur Andersen & Co., after eliminating operations of the paper mill, which is being sold coincident with this financing and after other adjustments arising from the reorganization as stated in their certificate, were as follows:

1925	$741,336
1926	955,383
1927	571,249
1928	765,825

Such net profits as above have averaged about $758,448 annually, and for the year ended December 31, 1928, amounted to $765,825, equivalent to more than 3 times the annual Debenture interest requirement.

After deducting from such net profits in 1928 Debenture interest requirements, Federal Taxes (parent company) at 12% and Preferred Stock dividends, the balance amounted to over $352,000, or about $2.35 per share on the 150,000 shares of Common Stock to be presently outstanding.

The net assets of the Company, available for these Debentures, based on the balance sheet, as at April 30, 1929, adjusted to give effect to the present financing, including the sale of the paper mill, were in excess of $8,500,000.

MANAGEMENT

Since the death in 1916 of the former owner, George A. Joslyn, his widow and other heirs have owned the majority of the Common Stock of Western Newspaper Union, control of which is now being acquired by the executives who have been responsible for its successful operation during the past 13 years.

All legal details will be passed upon by Messrs. Tenney, Harding, Sherman & Rogers of Chicago and by Messrs. White & Case of New York.

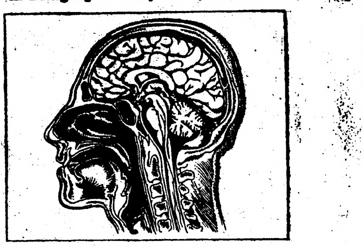
SHARP DUST PARTICLES 'HOOK' THEIR WAY INTO MEMBRANES AND DISEASE RESULTS

Science Tells Why Some Trades, Dry Sweeping and Motoring on Certain Highways Are Dangerous to Health in Bringing on Respiratory Maladies.



Cross-Section of Human Head Showing Mucous Membrane of Nose and Throat.

SCIENTIFIC research is gradually finding out why dust kills one out of every seven persons. The Harvard Medical School, the United States Public Health Service, various insurance companies and the great labor organizations of the country are all interested in the problem.

For example, according to Dr. L. R. Thompson, of the United States Public Health Service, the sickness record of granite workers shows that the greater part of illness proceeds from respiratory conditions and that respiratory diseases are three times as prevalent among granite workers as among workers in general industry.

"It is clear," said Dr. Thompson, "that wherever there is a great amount of granite dust there is a dangerous hazard, a mortality which seems inevitable and which is rising all the time."

Incidentally, according to Federal statistics, from 4,500,000 to 5,000,000 persons are employed in the dusty trade, but everyone, from the man who fears "dry sweeping" by housewives on their front steps to the motorist who must find his way through clouds of dust on the highway, is affected by the menace of fine particles in the air.

Various theories have been proposed to explain why dust should be such a danger to health. The usual explanation seeks the cause in the tenderness of the mucous membrane lining of the throat and nose.

Healthy throats and noses secrete a fluid, the mucus, which is just sufficient to take care of ordinary dust in the air. If that amount should be exceeded, the dust becomes too great to be handled by the mucus and the dust penetrates into the deeper parts of the body lining.

Dust is of various kinds, but whether it is organic or inorganic in origin makes no difference. What makes the dust particles dangerous is their shape. Particles that have sharp corners, such as dust from marble, metal, wood or stone, cut into the membrane very much as an old-fashioned knitting needle cuts into worsted and there the dust particles become fastened.

The mucus fluid referred to passes over those particles, moving them to and fro, and causing the membrane to become tender and then inflamed.

Should the process become continuous, as so often happens, serious sinus conditions result and in aggravated cases, tuberculosis may be their termination. That, in brief, is what happens.

Scientists have tried with all the resources at their command to combat dust in the air, but so far, with a few exceptions, the results have not been fruitful. As a means of prevention, suggestions have been made in various quarters that the dust might be laid with some sort of physical or chemical means and in many sections of the United States municipalities have been laying the dust with calcium chloride. That is a chemical capable of absorbing a high degree of moisture from the air, hygroscopic, it is called, which acts as a binder of dust on the highways. It also has great germicidal value.

Proving

what thousands already know, . . . that here is

America's finest medium-priced automobile

The information in the accompanying chart was compiled by comparing the Oakland All-American with twenty other medium-priced cars, thirteen of the twenty higher than Oakland in price. It proves to everyone who will read what thousands of Oakland owners already know—that today's Oakland All-American Six is America's finest medium-priced automobile.

Only a few comparisons are given here. There are scores more which we will be glad to show you. Come in to see them. And while you are here, drive today's Oakland All-American Six.

What these features mean to you		How Oakland compares with the field
Large piston displacement is needed to develop high power at moderate engine speed. Moderate engine speed is an important factor in the life of a car.	PISTON DISPLACEMENT	Oakland's 228 cubic inch piston displacement is greater than 12 of the 20 cars in its price field. Of the 8 remaining cars, 7 are higher priced than Oakland.
Fisher bodies are famous for style, luxury and roominess. In addition, they hold such advantages as sturdy hardwood and steel construction, VV windshield, side cowl ventilation and adjustable drivers' seats.	FISHER BODY	Only Oakland and two other cars in the field offer bodies by Fisher. And one of the two is nearly $100 higher in price than Oakland. Of the 18 cars which have less-known bodies, 11 are priced above the All-American Six.

Prices, $1145 to $1375, f. o. b. Pontiac, Mich., plus delivery charges. Spring covers and Shock Absorbers included in list prices. Bumpers and rear fender guards extra. General Motors Time Payment Plan available at minimum rate.

Consider the delivered price as well as the list price when comparing automobile values . . . Oakland-Pontiac delivered prices include only reasonable charges for handling and for financing when the G.M.A.C. Time Payment Plan is used.

The Biggest Little Paper In Marshall County

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, August 9, 1929. Volume 19; Number 15.

OBSERVATIONS

Gatzke, Minn.,
July 29, 1929.

Warren Sheaf,
Warren, Minn,
Dear Sirs;

Please allow me a little space in your valuable paper. I want to set forth the unfairness of our County Commissioners in regard to what is termed as the dance law. I understand that they are issuing licenses to people owning halls in the west end of the county and for some reasoo have voted against license to the hall owners in the east end of the county. Now the M. W. A. have just recently made application for licenses at Gatzke, the Modern Woodmen of which we are a part, pay out about four million dollars a month to widows and orphans of this great United States. We build our halls for homes to do business in. We all know that this takes money. We have got the foundation and a floor at Gatzke. We have got to stop this good work on account of being turned down with moonshine halls. This is what I call discriminating between the east end and the west end of the county because the Modern Woodmen are not moonshiners in any sense of the word. Our young folks are bound to have what they pleasure, principally dancing. Our young people are going now from twenty-five to forty miles and spending money in other towns for dances. We have not got two sheriffs in our part of the county like they have in the west end. We notice that you have twenty moonshiners to our one in this end of the county. We get the notice through the Warren Sheaf. Some of you reformers please answer me in regard to this charge.

Aged Woman Gone Beyond

Mrs. Marta Lunde died Monday evening at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Fred Larson.

Mrs. Lunde was 88 years old and had been forced to stay in bed since about the middle of January on account of illness.

Funeral services were held from the Nazareth Luthern Church Wednesday afternoon.

Rev. Lasseson of Thief River Falls officiated.

The Carlson Merc. Co. had charge of the funeral.

Interment was made in the Holt Cemetery.

Shower For Mrs. Anton

Mrs. C. H. Gunheim, Mrs. S. Lorentson and Mrs. Hans O. Hanson were hostesses to a shower at the C. H. Gunheim home given in honor of Mrs. L. P. Anton (nee Dorothy Fuller), Wednesday evening.

Garden flowers, and blue and white streamers were used to decorate the rooms, a large cake decorated with sweet peas forming the table centerpiece.

A program consisting of a vocal solo, by Mrs. Hanson, reading by Mrs. G. Sanoden, piano solo by Mrs. E. Loven, and two vocal solos by Miss Torblaa was given.

Group singing and games formed diversion until Mrs. Anton opened the numerous parcels given by the guests.

A two course luncheon was served.

Out of town guests were Miss Dorothy Collins and her mother Mrs. Collins of Minneapolis, and Miss Viola Torblaa of Fosston.

On an inside page you will find printed the proceedings of the county board.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Bennes and family and B. M. Bennes of Fertile spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Bennes.

LESSON 71

PRODUCTION: Hay cut one day and put in the barn the next when weather is favorable is best for dairy cows. Most of the feed value of alfalfa and clover hay is in the leaves and when the hay is dried too long the leaves fall off and the best of the hay is lost. Hay will cure to a considerable extent in the loft if left even and loosely.

MANUFACTURING: The quality of butter begins with milking the cows because if bad flavors get in the milk at this time they will appear in the butter. Much trouble is caused from milking machines not being kept clean.

MARKETING: The United States produces around two and one-half billion pounds of butter a year, or just about the amount the people of the United States consume. If the production of butter is greatly increased there is danger of an overproduction and surplus unless the consumption of butter is increased. Land O' Lakes is working to increase consumption thru making high quality butter and thru adverting the health and strength giving qualities of good butter.

Farmers Elevators Handle A Tremendous Volume

President Coolidge appointed a commission, with Herbert Hoover chairman, to investigate economic changes in the United States. The work was begun in January, 1928, and finished thirteen months later. The very complete report is published in book form in two volumes of 900 pages.

Commenting on the portion dealing with cooperative marketing, the Farmers Elevator Guide says: "Among other things the report deals with the development of grain marketing by farmers. It shows that of 1926-27 crop 3,300 farmers' elevators marketed 500,000,000 bushels. Including side lines their total sales were $700,000,000.

"Although these 3,300 farmers' elevators operate extensively in twelve states only, they handled over 36 per cent of all of the wheat shipped out of all of the counties of the entire United States for 1926-27.

"The report states that the farmers' elevators handled more than twelve times as much wheat of the 1926-27 crop as any other farmers' marketing agency."

Late Blight Menaces Minnesota Spud Crop

With weather condition ideal for its rapid spread, late blight constitutes a serious menace to Minnesota potatoes this year, says R. C. Rose, plant disease speciolist, University Farm, St. Paul. This is particularly true since the disease has put in its appearance a full two weeks earlier than last year and considerably in advance of the average season.

Applying bordeaux mixture with a high pressure sprayer is the only way to fight the blight, Mr. Rose says, and he advises growers to get busy at once and to keep their plants covered with the spray until frost. Sprayers should have nozzles so arranged as to get the mixture on the under side as well as on top.

Full details, together with directions for mixing the spray, may be had by writing the Mailing Room, University Farm, St. Paul, for the free bulletin on Potatoe Growing.

Alfalfa Hay Makes Fine Feed For Horses

Alfalfa hay is an excellent roughage for horses, being more palatable than timothy or prairie hay and richer in protein and lime. For those reasons, it is particularly valuable for balancing grain rations that are poor in those respects, such ps corn, says A. L. Harvey, horse expert of the animal husbandry division, University Farm, St. Paul.

Many horse owners do not use alfalta at all for their work horses, because they think it affects the kidneys, causes the horses to sweet and is apt to cause heaves. Experiments have proved that no bad effects are obtained if alfalfa hay is not fed in excessive amounts. Not more than one and one-fourth pounds of alfalfa per one hundred pounds live weight should be fed, and even that amount may be too much for some horses.

Many farmers report that they have obtained best results when they replaced about one-half of the usual ration of timothy or prairie hay with alfalfa hay.

This method is to be recommended to beginners or when the second or third cuttings sf alfalfa are fed.

World's Greatest State Fair

SO Colossal is the gigantic entertainment and educational program of Minnesota's 70th State Fair & N. W. Livestock Show, Twin Cities, Aug. 31 to Sept. 7, that its equal has never been staged anywhere.

A thousand thrills have been booked to please the 500,000 persons who will see the Fair.

Daring auto racers; the world's greatest harness and running horses; two stages of open-air circus acts; the big fireworks spectacle "The Last Days of Pompeii"; the State High-school band; the Morris and Castle Midway Shows; and hosts of other big features will be presented.

Eighty acres of machinery; thousands of prize horses, cattle, sheep, and swine; 1,200 boys and girls in club work demonstrations; many county displays; big exhibits of fruits, flowers, and vegetables; auto show; horse show; and scores of other educational attractions have been planned.

Don't fail to visit the "World's Greatest State Fair."

D. H. LaVoi, assistant in animal husbandry, coach of athletics, supervisor of home project work, and proceptor of Stephes Hall, will leave the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, early in September to accept a position as livestoch extension specilist in the Extension division of the Michigan Agricultural College, East Lansing, Michigan. In addition to an attractive salary, Mr. LaVoi will have the privilege of working for his Master's degree.

Since coming to the Northwest School as a graduate of the College of Agriculture of the University of Minnesota six years ago, Mr. LaVoi has made a host of friends throughout Northwestern Minnesota. He has made an envilable record as coach of athletics, turning out championship teams both in football and basketball. Under Mr. LaVoi's coaching, the Northwest School basketball teams have won every game played on the home floor for the past four years. His sterling character has been a big factor in maintaining the high standards of the school.

Faculty, students, alumni and friends of the Northwest School regret this loss, but congradulate Mr. LaVoi on his promotion and opportunity for service in a state-wide field.

HAWAIIAN FISH GODS STILL HOLD POWER

Ancient Form of Worship Adhered to on Island.

Honolulu.—Ancient "fish gods" of Hawaii still retain their power to aid or hinder fishermen, according to the beliefs of many Hawaiian and Oriental followers of the Waltonic art. Though Hawaii has been for more than one hundred years nominally Christian, any old resident can point out the hidden fish altars and relate that they are still used.

An unbeliever in this ancient magic recently visiting the Kohala coast of Hawaii, where the old customs linger to a greater extent than in many parts of the islands, relates that three schools of akule, a popular food fish, were sighted near the mouth of Kapanaia bay. A fishing "hui" or association from the neighboring port of Kawaihae came with its nets and surrounded a portion of the school. Two men, one a Chinese, the other a Hawaiian, took up a lease on the land through which all vehicles must pass to and from the fishing ground and warned all fish venders that one sack of fish would be levied upon each car going through the gate with fish for sale.

People from all parts of the neighborhood approached the shore with bags for the akule, as the fishermen prepared to bring the fish in. Prospects were for a huge catch. But the old Chinese toll taker looked on with disgust.

"No good," he said. "No can catch. He no give akua some fish."

The fishermen maneuvered until they had a much larger school surrounded, in combination with the first. The people shouted in glee. But suddenly the akule broke loose, left the net and headed for the open sea. No fish were caught.

The fishermen had neglected to lay offerings before the rough stone "akuah," the fish gods of the place.

Illiteracy of Males in Japan Decreasing

Washington.—Thanks to the progress of home study methods of education, Japan is making marked headway in decreasing the illiteracy rate of its male population living in remote regions of the empire, the national home study council, Washington, D. C., asserts.

"This fact was confirmed recently in an announcement given by the Japanese ministry of war, which revealed that only 50,000 of the young men from rural districts, who were called to the colors this year, are unable to read or write. In 1926 and 1927 the number of illiterates included in the recruiting classes was 59,000 and 54,000 respectively," the council states, adding:

"While education is compulsory in Japan, there are many of the natives, who, for economic reasons or official carelessness, evade the law and do not attend school long enough to master the rudiments of character writing. Most of this evasion is found in the rural regions among folk far removed from the government schools. This situation is being relieved by the extension of home study programs for these people."

Guards Watch Barber as He Shaves King Zogu

Tirana, Albania.—King's barber has soft job.

A handsome young man is King Zogu's barber, with thick, dark hair, a fashionable tiny mustache and the added "charm of married brows." He is said to have been not only "guaranteed" as a real fascist by Mussolini, but also personally introduced to King Zogu by him.

Whether or not this is true, Giuseppe Falgari is King Zogu's best-paid servant. He receives, in addition to board and lodging, a "retaining fee" of $175 a month, as well as a daily fee of $4 when he shaves the king. Perhaps this compensates for any loss of dignity Giuseppe may feel when the two armed guards stand by during the shaving. The Albanian king takes no risks and these knights protector of the lather, as one might say, are always on hand for the daily operation.

Bees Are Bibliophiles

Ontario, Calif.—Every one admits that the public library here is a mighty sweet place. A few swarms of bees have been storing their honey in the attic for the past three months and the finished product is beginning to ooze through cracks in the ceiling.

Express Agent Flops as a Terrier Chaser

Harbor Springs, Mich.—A dog was shipped by a veterinary to its owner, Mrs. H. S. Woods, Harbor Springs. It was a clever Irish terrier and pet of the family. The crate arrived marked with Mrs. Woods' own tag. It was her crate but the dog was a stranger who showed fight. He was an airedale and tough.

Investigation developed that the terrier, tiring of the confinement, escaped from the crate at Fort Wayne. The express agent chased him four blocks. In the chase the agent spied the airedale, grabbed him and shipped him to Harbor Springs.

UNKNOWN ISLANDS IN PACIFIC OCEAN

Area Near Equator Not Adequately Charted.

Washington.—Even though modern mapmakers have charted almost every scrap of land on the earth, whether large or small, there may still be some uncharted islands in the vast stretches of the Pacific. Successors to Defoe, wishing to write of an unknown island upon which their hero is shipwrecked, might still do so without fear of contradiction if they placed it in the Pacific ocean, slightly south of the equator and about 100 miles south of the Caroline islands. This region is to the north of New Guinea; it is out of the way of steamer tracks and has never been adequately charted.

But, on the whole, Robinson Crusoe would have a difficult time today trying to find an unknown desert island to get wrecked upon. In his time, a little more than 200 years ago, the Pacific ocean was dotted with thousands of unknown, uncharted islands, both verdure-clad and barren.

Recalls Selkirk's Isle.

The profusion of these oceanic oases, especially in the equatorial region, and the fact that they were not placed on any sailing charts, made it an easy matter to pick out a nice, lonely island as remote from the world of men as a corner lot on Mars. Alexander Selkirk, the original Robinson Crusoe, lived on the island of Juan Fernandez, 360 miles west of Valparaiso, for three years without seeing another human being.

The story of the discovery and charting of the Pacific's islands is a fascinating tale, replete with romance and studded with the names of many doughty adventurers. Islands have been discovered, lost, and in some cases rediscovered. The Solomon islands, for instance, were lost for two centuries and then found again. Most interesting, however, are those phantom isles, sighted once or twice by mariners of sailing ships and then never seen again. A great deal of this island hide-and-seek was due to uncertain methods of determining latitude and longitude at sea. The rest was due to the sighting of floating patches of marine life which, at a distance, looked like islands, to submarine earthquake and volcanic action which might push a mass above the surface of the water temporarily, and to the ever-active imaginations of deep-water sailors.

Thousand Phantoms Reported.

Fifty years ago, more than a thousand tiny phantom isles were reported to freckle the Pacific's 70,000,000 square miles. The United States Hydrographic office, at that time, published a "list of reported dangers in the Pacific ocean." The list, in three volumes, contained over 3,000 reported shoals, reefs, and islands, most of them with the notation, "existence doubtful" or "position doubtful." To day, the majority of these reported dangers, especially the islands, have definitely "disappeared." So have sea serpents and the other chimeras which once did the adrenalin act to adventurous sailors' hearts.

Although possible, it is improbable that other islands may be discovered in the vastness of the Pacific wilderness of waves.

Heir to Millions Loses Job; Overstays Leave

Milwaukee, Wis.—Even the rich are subject to disciplinary action when they overstay their vacations.

Proof of this is offered by William Woods Plankinton, Jr., twenty-one, who last year took a $20 a week job in New York, after falling heir to a fortune of millions.

The youthful scion of the packing company finally is here today looking for a job.

"I got fired for taking too long a vacation in Europe recently," Mr. Plankinton explained. "My boss was J. C. Stewart, a building engineer, who incidentally is also my maternal grandfather."

Mr. Plankinton's quest for work is carried on in company with his friend, Frank Lee, of San Francisco. As a diversion the young men take moving pictures of their travels.

Mule Boss Shows How and Gets Shown by Gad

Chicago.—The open spaces of Montana sent two products to an Evanston construction job, Albert Downing, superintendent, and Gad, a mule.

Gad had a Fourth of July hangover and refused to work. Downing was summoned.

"Boys, I'll show you how we handle these birds in Montana," he said. Thereupon he smote Gad forcefully with a piece of plank. Gad whirled like a flash. Two hoofs shot out, landing on Mr. Downing's jaw. He was out when the ambulance arrived. The doctors at the hospital marveled that he had any jaw left. They took ten stitches.

Gad was given a day off.

Bars One-Arm Drivers

Boston.—Massachusetts motorists may either drive or pet, but they mustn't do both at the same time, George A. Parker, register of motor vehicles, has ruled. "Anyone who drives while having his arm around a girl or allows her to sit on his lap is not a proper person to operate a car," he said.

WAR VET FINDS HE HAS NO COUNTRY

Singing in Streets to Earn His Living.

Belfast, Ireland.—Virtually a man without a country, an American who fought for Britain in the World war is singing in the streets of Belfast, accompanied by his wife, in a desperate effort to keep body and soul together.

He has made two round trips across the Atlantic trying to re-enter the land where he was born. He was turned back at Ellis island, and the emigration officials at Liverpool sent him back to America again because they thought the American authorities had no right to refuse him permission to land.

George Young was born in Rhode Island and has the birth certificate to prove it. At the age of eighteen he decided to see the world. He was in Ireland at the outbreak of the World war and joined the Royal Irish Fusiliers.

During months of fighting in France Young was wounded three times and given the military medal for bravery under fire. He remained in the army until 1923, when he was given an honorable discharge and started to work on a farm near Belfast.

Things went nicely with the soldier of fortune and he received money from his family in America to pay his passage home. He had no difficulty getting aboard ship when he showed his birth certificate. But it was a different story at Ellis island. The emigration officials held that the oath of allegiance to the British flag, taken when he joined the fusiliers, made him an alien, and that he would have to await his turn on a quota passport.

The State department upheld the decision of the Ellis island officials and Young returned to Liverpool. From there he was shipped to New York once more, and back again. He finally reached Belfast, but has been unable to find work.

"To make things worse," Young said, "all my papers, including my birth certificates, were retained by the steamship company and sent to New York in connection with the charge against the company of bringing me to America without a visa. I cannot get a passport until my papers are returned. It seems unfortunate that I cannot return to America, because I fought for Britain. If I finally get a passport, I will have to wait my turn on the quota. In the meantime I suppose I shall have to keep on singing in the streets."

An Illusion Smashed, Flea Circuses Fakes

Houston, Texas.—Scientific experiments conducted with fleas have proved to Dr. M. A. Stewart, Rice institute professor, that fleas are dumb and that flea circuses are fakes.

Doctor Stewart is conducting experiments to discover actions of fleas with bubonic bacilli. His explosion of the flea circus hoax came by accident.

"The so-called flea trainers provide the intelligence they claim fleas have," said Doctor Stewart.

"They have platinum wires so thin about the fleas' necks that it takes microscopes to see them. The trainers attach the free ends of these wires to their fingers. Then they can make them go through their tricks on the stage.

"To make them 'waltz' they tie two fleas together. It's the most natural thing in the world for the insects, in trying to get away from each other, to skip around the table. That's the waltz.

"Making a flea play a miniature musical instrument is more difficult. They glue the flea to the table on its back and make a noise. With a piece of paper glued to its legs, the flea kicks about trying to right itself. That's when it plays the instrument."

In his experiments, Doctor Stewart uses the same kind of platinum wire to prevent the fleas from escaping.

Father and Daughter Keep Job 106 Years

Canterbury, N. H.—For 106 years the financial affairs of the local Baptist society have been in charge of two generations of one family. Miss Christiana Clough, eighty-six, has just resigned as treasurer after fifty years' service. Before her, her father, the Rev. Jeremiah Clough, held the office for fifty-six years.

Snakes Swarm Road

Broomhead, Sask.—Thousands of small snakes migrated across the government highway near here recently. They wriggled along in almost orderly formation covering a strip of road several feet in width, moving from one ditch to another and on into the prairie.

Cat Keeps Big Horse From Wandering Away

Kingston, N. C.—S. J. Holloway, Tyrrell county farmer, has a cat which serves the combined purpose of stable hand and "watchdog." The cat holds in its mouth the end of a halter while a big draft horse grazes. When the horse strays to the edge of the lawn, the cat draws it away from the road.

TIRED OF BEING JUST "AND WIFE"

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

" . . . and wife," repeated Lois Seaman bitterly as she threw the morning paper from her. "Eugene Seaman—and wife."

She rose from her chair and started to pace the floor. "They could at least have said Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Seaman. Three years ago they were mighty glad to say 'Miss Lois Morgan' when I was really doing something—known to the reporters as head of the women's department of the National bank, president of the Women's club, but now, I am just—'and wife!' No identity—I hate it."

She went back to the big chair before the fireplace and covered her face with her hands.

"I want to do something. I want to make a mark in the world—why can't Gene see it? Barbara and May can take over the house—I have brains—I want to accomplish—do something besides see there is plenty of food in the ice box and that the corners are not dusty and that Gene's clothes are pressed when he is toastmaster at a banquet where he can stand up and let people know he is accomplishing something—not standing still. Oh, I hate it—I hate it."

There was a sound of a door opening and some one whistled in the hall. Lois puckered her mouth to reply, but the whistle did not come. She sat up quickly, wiped her eyes and smiled at her husband as he came into the room.

"Hello, Gene. Aren't you home early?"

"Knocked off for some golf, Loey. Want to run out to the club with Glover and me?" He stopped short. "What's the matter? You've been crying."

"Nothing. I don't care to go out today."

"Why have you been crying, Loey?"

"I wish you wouldn't ask me. I—I am—so unhappy, Gene, doing—accomplishing nothing! I—I want to be more than just—'and wife.' And she reached over and picked up the morning paper from the floor. She pointed her finger at the article and he read aloud:

"Among the guests present were Dr. and Mrs. Davidson Wynne, the Hon. Theodore and Mrs. Benton, Eugene Seaman, the well-known criminal lawyer, and wife—"

He looked down at her as he folded the paper quietly and placed it on the table. "Are you crying because it does not say, 'formerly Miss Lois Morgan, president of the Women's club and head of the women's department of the National bank, well known for her splendid work in—' "

"Gene, stop! You are laughing, and I won't have it. Oh, can't you see? I want to do something—climb—accomplish—work—live! I want the contacts I used to have."

"I have tried to see from every angle, Loey, but—I cannot! You have a position—the greatest position in the world a woman can fill, that of—wife—home-maker—and I had hoped, mother, I am sorry I have not been able to make your position more agreeable; make you happy, although you will admit I have tried."

He sat in an easy chair, bending forward, his thin, capable hands clasped between his knees. His eyes traveled slowly over the splendid big living room; the soft-piled rugs, glistening mahogany; soft-shaded lamps, and they came back to rest tenderly upon the slender, pretty woman curled in the corner of the davenport, her head resting against her arm.

"I am sorry, sorry, that I have failed, Loey."

"You—you haven't failed, Gene. You are wonderful—but—but I should not—you should have married Bernice Mallory, Gene."

"But I didn't love Bernice, Loey. I loved you." He sat down beside her and took her hands in his.

"I do not feel that I have the right to stand in the way of your happiness, dear. I remove all my objections to your taking your old position back, on condition you will—stay married to me."

Her arms went about his neck. "Silly! As though you could get rid of me. I love you with all my heart."

The next night she met him at the door, her face radiant. She wore her prettiest dress and beyond in the softly lighted dining room he saw a centerpiece of tea roses.

"Bought them all myself—with the money I start to earn—next week," she announced gayly. "I went to see Mr. Slader and he said that my fourth successor—fourth, Gene!—was not satisfactory and I could have my position back, but he wanted to know what you thought about it. I told him frankly and I don't know yet whether he agrees with your viewpoint or mine. He mentioned our lovely home, your success and all that, but he seemed glad I am coming back."

Gene pulled a telegram from his pocket and passed it over to her.

"If I had thought you really meant what you said I would have wired Aunt Mary not to come, but you see by the wire she leaves tonight."

Lois read the message aloud:

"Leaving Wednesday night to make you and your wife a good, long visit. Love to you both. AUNT MARY."

Lois stamped the floor angrily. "There it is again—'and wife!' Oh, why did she have to come right now—just when I have a position? I cannot help it, Gene! I'm going to work, anyway."

"Of course, you are, Loey," soothingly. "But I am sorry it has happened that way, too. She is so old-fashioned; thinks a woman's place is in the home, and as this is her first visit to our home—postponed every year since we were married—it is unfortunate, but I will explain as best I can."

He leaned against the fireplace, his head resting against the mantel. There was a reminiscent smile on his fine face.

"Aunt Mary took me when mother died when I was five. She never had children of her own—she and Uncle Jim had lived alone in the old place, until I came. I remember how she always met him at the door at night, took his lunch box, kissed him, and told him to hurry because supper was ready. Then, the three of us would sit in front of the fireplace and Uncle Jim would tell me a wild west story—they were thrillers, too—and Aunt Mary would listen to my prayers while I warmed my back, and they both took me upstairs to bed, and would stand, their arms about each other, looking down at me until I closed my eyes."

There was silence for a moment before he continued softly:

"Their love, their devotion to each other, was the most beautiful thing I have ever seen. She was just happy being his wife. She wanted nothing else, and I guess that is why I am so narrow on the subject. Loey—I was brought up that way. I have tried, ever since I married you, to be like what Uncle Jim was to Aunt Mary. To make you happy in my love—content to just be my wife. The night he died, she turned to me and said, 'Gene, he has just gone on before. When my call comes he will be waiting on the other side—for his wife.' And he is still waiting. I think I can make her understand, Loey, and we can make her visit happy, although the days may be lonely. And she will be proud of you. I know, and she will love you—"

Lois slipped her arms about his neck and drew his face to hers.

"Oh, Gene—I am so glad you told me—I want to be like Aunt Mary—I will call Mr. Slader right now, and tell him I have decided to keep my other, my most precious position in the world—your wife—and all that goes to make her position glorified."

Ancient Moroccan City Picturesque but Dirty

Rabat, Morocco, built almost 800 years ago by the labor of 40,000 Christian slaves, figured in the late news in connection with a recent attack of tribesmen from the Atlas mountains on a company of Senegalese infantry and Moroccan camel troops.

Rabat is located on the northwestern coast of French Morocco, adjacent to the old city of Sale, a former lair of corsairs. It is also near the ruins of Sheila, a half-forgotten city that was once a thriving Roman colony.

There are two present-day Rabats, French Rabat and the native town, says the National Geographical society. French Rabat is like a bit of transplanted Europe. In its streets are women wearing Parisian clothes, business men in sack suits and smartly uniformed French officers. Everything is modern and efficient and over 13,000 Europeans live within its borders.

Native Rabat is another story. Squat houses line the narrow streets. From the mosque tower the muezzin calls the faithful to prayer. Turbaned Arabs of the Beni Hassan tribe, Berbers from the hills and negroes file through the bazars. Heavily veiled women travel silently through the crooked streets. Groups of the sick and the deformed, clad in dirty white rags, lie in the streets of the bazars, begging alms from the passers-by.

There is slight demand for chairs or knives and forks in the souks. Chairs are used only by the stiff-legged Christian tourists and knives and forks are not necessary to eat couscous, the staple viand of the Moroccan meal.

Couscous is made with flour and meat and vegetables, and tastes not unlike the American dish of dumplings cooked with meat. It is served in a big pot and everyone sticks in his hand and brings forth his portion in three fingers. To use four fingers or two fingers is extremely bad manners. Moroccan etiquette demands three.

Two Mouths

Once in awhile, of course, even a very patient mother finds herself becoming impatient under the rapid-fire questioning of an inquisitive child. One such mother said to her little daughter:

"Now, please don't ask mother any more questions this morning."

A bit later the child returned.

"Mother, I wish I had two mouths."

"Why in the world do you want two mouths?"

"So that one could answer the questions the other one asks."

Imprisoned Queen

In the huge ant hills seen in most tropical countries, there is always a queen, which is imprisoned for life in a hard-formed pocket of clay. She is about two inches long, and looks like a big lump of fat, with the body of an ant attached at one end. She cannot move of herself, and is copiously fed by her subjects. The expression "Sit as an ant queen" is supposed to convey what the natives consider the acme of prosperous ease.

It May Be Urgent

When your Children Cry for It

Castoria is a comfort when Baby is fretful. No sooner taken than the little one is at ease. If restless, a few drops soon bring contentment. No harm done, for Castoria is a baby remedy, meant for babies. Perfectly safe to give the youngest infant; you have the doctors' word for that! It is a vegetable product and you could use it every day. But it's in an emergency that Castoria means most. Some night when constipation must be relieved—or colic pains—or other suffering. Never be without it; some mothers keep an extra bottle, unopened, to make sure there will always be Castoria in the house. It is effective for older children, too; read the book that comes with it.

Germany Given Credit for Idea of Bookplate

A bookplate is a typographical or pictorial label, used to denote the ownership of a book. Bookplates are considered to have had their origin in Germany, though an unsupported claim has been made that they were used in Japan in the Tenth century, and certain small clay tablets are believed to have performed in Babylonia and Assyria an office similar to that of the bookplate of today. The earliest printed bookplate we know today was used about 1480. From Germany the use of the bookplate spread to France and finally to all continental countries. The bookplates first used in America were of English make, brought over by the wealthy colonists. They possess great interest as memorials of the old families, but the plates engraved by the hands of our first American engravers, Nathaniel Hurd and Paul Revere of Boston, Amos Doolittle of Connecticut and Alexander Anderson, easily surpass them in value. The earliest date on an American bookplate by an American engraver is 1749, on the Thomas Dering plate engraved by Hurd.

World's Largest Locomotive

Two of the largest locomotives in the world are being built in Manchester, England, for South Africa. They are 90 feet long, weigh 220 tons each, will cost nearly $150,000.

TOOK ADVICE OF HER MOTHER

Praises Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Wetmore, Colo.—"When I was married 14 years ago I was in bad health for a couple of years and when I tried to do anything I would get tired and worn-out. I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound off and on all these years and have recommended it to hundreds of women. I have given birth to six children and have taken the Vegetable Compound as a tonic before child birth. It has done me worlds of good. My mother had taken it several times and she recommended it to me."—Mrs. John Braas. Wetmore, Colorado.

REPAIR ON COUNTY DITCH NO. 12

Commissioner Ole Bergman offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Information having been supplied this Board in open session and by oral evidence by residents of this County, that certain portions of County Ditch No. 12 is obstructed and out of repair, to-wit:

That portion of said ditch from the NE Corner of Section 5, Township 157 North of Range 49 West to the Northwest corner of Section 2, Township 157 North of Range 50 West, four miles, and that such obstruction consists mainly in silt and dirt which has blown into said ditch since its construction, and the County Board having investigated said matter and being satisfied that the portion of the ditch above described has been obstructed by said silt and dirt and that the same should be removed in order to make said ditch function properly, the Board on its own motion, pursuant to the provisions of section 54 Chapter 415, Laws of 1925, hereby orders and directs Irving E. Quist, a civil engineer, to examine the portion of said ditch above described and to make and file with this Board on or before the 10th day of September 1929, a report in writing, pursuant to the provisions of section 55 Chapter 415 laws 1925, and that said report contain all facts and data necessary to show said Board what must be done in order to place said portion of said ditch above described in the condition it was when originally constructed, according to the plans on file in the office of the County Auditor of this county; and it is further ordered, that on the 5th day of November 1929, at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at the office of the County Board in the Court House in the City of Warren, Minnesota, said board will hold a hearing upon said matter and said report of said engineer, said hearing to be held within the intent and meaning of sections 52 to 59, both inclusive, of Chapter 415, Laws of 1925, and W. O. Braggans is hereby directed to conduct all proceedings in reference thereto.

Let this resolution be published in the official proceedings of this board in the official newspaper of said county and the same shall constitute notice to the public of said hearing.

Commissioner A. N. Lodoen seconded the motion and the same being put, received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

On motion the following bills were audited and allowed as follows:

Commissioner A. C. McMillin offered the following resolution in writing and moved its adoption:

Be it resolved that all sheep three months old and over be assessed at $2.00 per head.

Be it resolved that all dogs be assessed at $3.00 each.

Commissioner A. S. Rokke seconded the motion and the same being put received a majority of the votes of the members of the County Board and was duly carried and was by the Chairman then presiding so declared.

On motion adjourned Sine Die.

THE RURAL DEATH RATE FROM TUBERCULOSIS

Up to the year 1920, the difference between the urban and rural death rates from tuberculosis has been fairly constant. The death rate for the cities has always been higher than that of country districts. The higher city death rate was in a large measure due to over-crowding, lack of sunshine, filth, unsanitary surroundings and other similar factors that tend to reduce man's vitality and render him a fit subject to tuberculosis and other diseases.

Since 1920 there has been a change in the death rate from tuberculosis, the rate for the country districts is now higher than that of the city. Dr. Evans, in his daily health column in the Minneapolis Journal of Feb. 25, 1929, attributes this change to the greater efficiency of the departments of health in cities over that of the rural districts. There is no doubt about the greater efficiency of the health departments of the cities but that of itself will hardly account for the change. Due to the great work being done by health workers and others interested in the welfare of their fellow men, the conditions of living in cities has been greatly improved. There is today in our American cities less over-crowding, less filth, and people live under more sanitary conditions.

The year 1919 was the beginning of an economic change. Since that time the country as a whole, with the exception of the strictly agricultural districts, has been more prosperous than ever before. The city workers have had fairly steady employment and the wages received for their labor has been good. On the other hand, the year 1919 marked the beginning of harder times for the farmer, he had to work harder and longer to make ends meet. He and his family were beset by worries and misfortunes. The luxuries and leisure enjoyed by the city workers were not to be found on the farm. The purchasing power of the farm dollar at one time went as low as sixty-six cents when compared with that of his city brother.

In the writer's humble opinion, the failure of the rural death rate to remain below that of the city since 1919 has been due to a large extent to the economic difference.

No one likes butter with a sour overripe flavor, and this defect, which is very common in farm butter, can be avoided by properly ripening the cream, says the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Keep the cream cold and sweet until about 12 hours before it is to be churned. Then stir it thoroughly, warm to a temperature of 65 degrees to 75 degrees Fahrenheit and hold at that temperature until it thickens, has a glossy appearance, and is mildly sour. Cool it quickly to churning temperature or below, hold for two hours, and churn. The churning temperature should be low enough to produce firm butter. In summer this will be between 52 degrees and 60 degrees. Cream that is allowed to ripen too long or at too high a temperature produces butter with a sour flavor. Such butter does not keep well.

The DAIRY

FEED LIBERALLY FOR BIG PROFITS

Farmers Make Mistake by Cutting Down on Supply.

Some farmers when they find the price of dairy feeds going up seem to think that the only and most profitable thing for them to do is to cut down on the amount of feed which they are giving their cows, and some feeders have been known to cut down to such an extent that they reduce the body maintenance requirement, says a writer in the Michigan Farmer.

It is known that a cow which is fed the proper amount and quality of feed uses about one-half of it for maintaining her body and the other half for the manufacture of her product, hence, cutting down on the ration by 10 per cent may reduce the milk flow 20 per cent while the amount of feed which is used for the maintenance of her body will remain practically the same. The animal must first keep up its body weight and then whatever feed is left over goes for the production of milk.

It is of first importance that the cows have sufficient food for both body and production maintenance. A dairy cow that is bred for production, with the right kind of handling, will pay for her feed, and in many cases she will return two dollars' worth of dairy products for every dollar's worth she consumes.

Many dairy farmers make the mistake of reducing the grain ration in the spring, when the supply of grain begins to get low and the grass is beginning to start. It is well to keep in mind that green grass can in no way compare with concentrated grain feed, until the grass crop is well established. After the stock has been fed liberally during the winter, do not reduce the ration too early in the spring, and thereby lose much that already has been gained, and in making the change do so gradually.

Prevent Tuberculosis by Thorough Cleaning

After diseased animals are found and removed from the premises, a very thorough cleaning and washing of the inside of the barn and other buildings where the animals have been should be made. This must be followed by the proper application of some approved disinfectant. The use of disinfectants without first doing the necessary and proper cleaning is ineffective for the reason that the germs of the disease must be exposed. All utensils or anything else that may have become contaminated by use around the diseased animals should likewise be cleaned and disinfected. The manure and refuse must be hauled from barnyards or lots to plowed fields, spread thin, and exposed to the sunlight. The yards and lots, including feed troughs, water troughs, and fences, can then be sprayed properly with the disinfectant.

All this means much work, but it must be done to prevent infection from spreading to the healthy animals.

Mythological Term.

In Norse mythology the expression "twilight of the gods" refers to the final destruction of the world and the regeneration of gods and men.

Why Bubble Is Round.

A soap bubble is round because it has a surface tension which causes equal pressure in all directions. The soap bubble is covered with a film and the tendency of liquids covered by such a film is to assume a spherical shape.

Why Known as "Pirate."

The Latin word "pirata" means to "attack or assault," and the Italian "piratare" means to "rob by sea." The English word is derived from these.

WHY

Colds Often "Run in the Family."

When colds "run in the family" it is no sign that the family is constitutionally subject to colds. It may be that some member of the family is acting as a carrier, just as some people are typhoid carriers, suggests Dr. P. Watson-Williams in a report to the practitioner of observations made on ninety consecutive patients. Sometimes one child is known for starting colds among his brothers and sisters. This same child may become immune to colds himself, but still harbor cold germs and be able to pass them on to others. If he grows up and has a family he may still be starting colds in the family, although they are no longer traced to him.

The reason for this may be an unsuspected infection of his nasal sinuses, the honeycomb structures back of the nose and eyes. This same infection may be the reason for some children growing a second set of adenoids when the first ones have been removed with the tonsils, Doctor Watson-Williams thinks.

Doctor Watson-Williams also reports a tendency for families that are prone to colds to have infections in the abdomen, for instance in appendix and gall bladder. The body cells that fight disease germs are weakened by resisting the germs always present in nose and throat and become an easy prey to those germs that find their way to the abdomen.—Kansas City Star's Science Service.

Why Paint Sometimes Refuses to "Stay Put"

Experiments and observations of the behavior of paint under varying conditions and circumstances indicate that paint does not really adhere to wood at least after the paint has dried out thoroughly, but hangs on chiefly by gaining mechanical grips in minute openings in the surface of the wood. Where there are plenty of openings the paint hangs on, but where the openings are too few, or too small, as in very dense wood, the paint does not hang on so well.

To understand how the grain of wood may affect paint retention it is only necessary to observe paint failure on woods having wide annual growth rings and in which there is a sharp contrast between spring wood and summer wood. In such woods the summer wood is much denser than the spring wood. Paint scales off more quickly than it does off the bands of spring wood.

Why Earth Is Changing.

Just as the tidal movement of the ocean is affected by the position of the sun and moon, so is the earth's surface influenced and there is constantly going on a heavy pronounced change in the contour of our globe. It is constantly rising and falling and while this movement is imperceptible except to scientific observers it is nevertheless quite pronounced and in the course of time is responsible for some very great changes. The pressure exerted on spots of the earth's crust by the rising tide of the ocean is another thing that makes it heave and fall. Atlantic tides have caused an observed earth bulge 800 miles away, and it is thought probable that this influence girdles the world.

Why Known as "Dumbbells."

Why do we call the wooden exercises we swing dumbbells? Why dumb? Because centuries ago a favorite exercise was in the pattern of the apparatus by which the heavy bells of a church are swung—a task which calls for considerable energy on the part of the ringers. This apparatus was used sometimes for the purpose of training bell-ringers, and it is probable that its use as an exerciser was first suggested in this way. Later on, less cumbersome means of taking exercise were evolved, but "dumbbell" was still kept as the name.

Why Baptize Babies.

It is held by those churches which believe in the baptism of infants that the Old Testament covenant was applicable to all members of the family, from the youngest infant to the oldest man. They believe the New Testament covenant is equally to be applied and that baptism is the sign and seal of participation in this covenant. It is for this reason that most Christian churches baptize infants, at the same time requiring their parents to obligate themselves to bring the children up in the Christian faith.

EDUCATIONAL PREPARATION A GROWING REQUIREMENT FOR SUCCESS IN MODERN BUSINESS

Death-Knell Sounded for Guesswork and Slipshod Methods by Advancing Technical Proficiency in Finance, Trade and Industry—How Banks Are Developing a Professionally Qualified Generation of Younger Bankers.

By HAROLD STONIER
American Bankers Association

HAROLD STONIER

THE great school of Experience is still holding classes in America, but the scientific spirit of the age has so generally invaded the workshops of industry and trade that they have largely become technical research and training laboratories in themselves and are no longer run on the old-fashioned cut-and-try methods of former generations when Experience was considered the only teacher. It would be hard to find a working force in any pre-eminently successful business or industrial organization in the United States today but what the dominating leadership is schooled in the scientific principles of its specific field, whether manufacturing, merchandising or finance. The rapidly advancing standards of business in this country, with their relentless demands for efficiency as the only hope for survival in the competitive struggle for economic existence, has sounded the death-knell for guesswork and slipshod methods.

As a result, educational preparation in the techniques of commerce, industry and finance are virtually essential to outstanding success in these fields, as it is already an absolute prerequisite in the various recognized professions. This is not to depreciate the value of native ability and experience in business, but education after all is merely a means for helping the individual to apply the net good of the accumulated experience of many to his own day's work—a means for helping special native ability to come into its own more rapidly and surely and for enabling all classes of ability to gain the maximum of success to which they are entitled.

These facts are plainly recognized by practical, work-a-day business in every line. Every progressive business organization in America is emphasizing the importance of education as never before. Education has come to be looked upon as the answer to many of the problems within the organization as well as to problems affecting industry as a whole.

Business Organizing Institutes

Institutes for developing specifically qualified workers are being operated or organized in many fields of commercial and industrial activity. These institutes are trying various types of educational work with a distinct trend toward more and more emphasis upon education for the rank and file of business employees of all grades.

We have been having business failures in this country at the rate of about 2,000 a month. This score speaks for itself. It is glaring evidence of incompetence on the part of thousands of business men in handling the problems inherent in their fields of endeavor. The detailed records show that practically 75% of business failure in this country is due to lack of training and competence on the part of those who failed. This is conclusive evidence that no one can afford to undertake executive business responsibilities without adequate education and training. It is for that reason that every enlightened business organization is today insisting as never before that its employees take advantage of some type of technical training.

American banking is fortunate and has just cause for pride in that it has a record of twenty-eight years of definitely organized educational activity among its workers to its credit for developing trained bankers. People in banks in large numbers are taking advantage of the educational opportunity given by the great non-commercial college of the banking business, the American Institute of Banking. They see on every hand evidences of the value of the training it gives. Of the 10,000 graduates of this Institute, 70% now occupy official positions in American banks. The other 30% are still too young to have attained such heights. Here is an example and an encouragement to the people of all lines of business.

The American Institute of Banking has a membership of 64,320. Of these 33,851 are class enrolments, comprising younger bank people, both men and women, who are learning the scientific technique of their chosen business at the same time they are engaged in the practical work of earning their livings at it. The difference between the 33,851 enrolled in classes and the 64,320 total membership comprises older bankers who have taken the Institute courses in the past or are at the present time sponsoring some type of educational work in the organization.

Banking Educates Its People

It has been estimated that there are probably 375,000 bank officers and employees in the United States at the present time. These figures would mean that about one banker in every six is either enrolled in Institute classes in banking or is actively supporting some educational function of the organization. No statement could possibly give more emphasis to the importance placed on education by the banking interests of America than these facts.

The American Institute of Banking is the educational section of the American Bankers Association. It was formed twenty-eight years ago by bank employees and officers and has been carried on ever since as a voluntary organization. Many students who have graduated continue their membership in order to give active support to some type of educational work other than the actual class program.

The greater part of the educational work is carried on in 200 cities and towns in the United States. Here the local chapter of the American Institute of Banking has its regularly organized courses of study under supervision of the national body with local instructors and directors to fulfil the standard requirements regarding text material, classwork and examinations.

Instructors are recruited from the staffs of leading universities, from members of the legal profession and from among accountants and bank men who have made a record in some field of activity in banking that marks them as experts. All instructors must be approved by the national organization. They are compensated by the local units. The students pay tuition, in which they are frequently aided by their employing banks, and this, together with contributions made by the banks for general classroom overhead, finances the educational program.

Education a Pathway to Advancement

Leading banks in various parts of the country are insisting that their employees take work in the Institute. This is frequently a part of their contract of employment at the time they enter the bank. It is also now quite generally understood in the field of American banking that study in the American Institute of Banking is considered one of the basic factors in the promotion of the individual to a place of importance in a bank.

The Standard Certificate of the American Institute of Banking is annually gaining a greater and wider recognition among practical bankers throughout the United States. These certificates are coming to have the same importance in the banking world that certificates of education have in the field of the general professions. This is a practical example and one thoroughly well demonstrated by seasoned experience of the new spirit of American business.

ONE COW VS. ONE DOZEN

"Why milk twelve poor cows when one good cow will do the work of the twelve?" asks the bulletin of the American Bankers Association Agricultural Commission. It declares that analysis of more than 100,000 individual yearly records from cows on test in dairy herd improvement associations indicate that on the average

Cows that produced 100 lbs. butterfat a year returned $14 each over feed cost;

Cows that produced 200 lbs. butterfat a year returned $54 each over feed cost;

Cows that produced 300 lbs. butterfat a year returned $96 each over feed cost;

Cows that produced 400 lbs. butterfat a year returned $138 each over feed cost;

Cows that produced 500 lbs. butterfat a year returned $178 each over feed cost;

In other words, one 500-pound producer will return $10 more over feed cost than twelve 100 lb. producers. This does not take into account either the added labor of milking and caring for the larger herd, or the much greater expense of providing stable room for a dozen instead of a single animal. The figures are based on farm prices from all parts of the country.

Be a Milk Tippler, Says Dr. Schireson

Dr. Schireson.

Peaches and cream complexions of American women have their foundation in a milk diet, according to Dr. Henry J. Schireson, famous Chicago dermatologist and facial plastic surgeon.

Doctor Schireson has won fame by beautifying motion picture, musical comedy and vaudeville stars and many society women of America. He transformed Fanny Brice's nose, rejuvenated Eva Tanguay's face, removed sixty-four pounds of adipose tissue from Truly Shattuck in one operation, straightened the cross eyes of the leading lady of Singer's midgets, and has performed other corrections for making people young and beautiful.

Doctor Schireson has one infallible prescription for the attainment of beauty. It is: "One quart of milk a day, one hour of sunshine, and repeat ad libitum."

"Beauty specialists and cosmetic makers," says Doctor Schireson, "would be driven out of business in a few weeks if all the women of America would drink their quart of milk a day.

"Babies and children have complexions of angels for the reason that they are fed largely on milk. Milk used externally or internally is a beautifier. Anna Held, I believe, was the first actress who adopted the milk bath. While this was a novelty at the time, and her press agent undoubtedly made the most of it, the principle in itself was sound. But a beauty secret of even more value is the daily quart of milk taken as a part of the diet.

"The milk-fed girl is easily distinguished by the velvety texture and the healthy color of her skin. Milk is a wonderful body builder, because it contains every structural element. It is, in a way, an elixir of life.

"Authorities agree that milk is the most nearly perfect food but it is an extremely delicate one as well. Heat sufficient to kill all bacteria is the essential of absolutely pure and sterile milk. One of the advantages of evaporated milk, which is simply fresh cow's milk with sixty per cent of the water removed, is that it is entirely sterile and is more easily assimilated than ordinary market milk.

"Milk is mentioned forty-seven times in the Bible. The Promised Land of the Israelites was said to flow 'with milk and honey' and Ovid graded milk as second only to nectar, the drink of the gods."

DIPLOMAT EQUAL TO ANY FEMININE WILE

Madame De Stael, talking to Talleyrand, suddenly snapped at him, with pointed coquetterie:

"If Madame Grant and I had the misfortune simultaneously to fall into the river before your eyes, which of us two would you attempt to save first?"

Talleyrand, old fox, answered smilingly:

"But, madame, you are a perfect swimmer."

At dinner Talleyrand was once asked what was the difference between a diplomat and a woman of the world. Instantly he replied:

"If a diplomat says 'Yes' he means 'Perhaps.' If he says 'Perhaps' he means 'No'; if he says 'No,' he is no diplomat. But if a lady says 'No,' she most likely means 'Perhaps'; if she says 'Perhaps' she means 'Yes' but if she says 'Yes,' she is not a woman of the world."—Kansas City Star.

Was It "Built for Two?"

This is the favorite story of a certain Indiana college professor.

A student of extremely moderate means fell in love with a coed whose parents were wealthy. She was used to a limousine, but the only possession the poor student boasted was a bicycle, which he frequently rode about the campus.

To the surprise of almost every one the fellow wooed and won the rich girl. An elaborate wedding was solemnized. When the minister asked the bridegroom to repeat: "With all my worldy goods I thee endow," one of the fellow's friends whispered to another: "T[illegible] goes the bicycle!"

St. Louis Standard in Use of American Tongu

New York.—The American language seems to be spoken in St. Louis more than in any other city.

Such was the conclusion of an audience at Columbia after listening to 20 records of as many varieties of speech in the country, from the Vermont twang to the Southern drawl.

Prof. William Cabell Greet of Barnard suggested that St. Louis was the standard and the audience, 100 graduates of Columbia, agreed.

HOW TO SAVE MONEY WHEN SHOPPING

By MRS. HARLAND H. ALLEN

(©, 1922, Harland H. Allen.)

TO TELL A GOOD PIECE OF COTTON CLOTH

"If only I could ever be sure of what I am getting!" cries the shopper who has been made wary by disappointing purchases.

Take cotton goods, now. Cotton, being the cheapest, is seldom adulterated with any of the other fibers. But many a poor piece of cotton cloth is made to appear better and heavier than it really is, by the addition of too much dressing. The spaces between the threads are filled up, and a good finish is given to the material, but the wearing quality is not increased. After washing, the cloth loses both its weight and firmness. This dressing can sometimes be scraped up by picking at the surface of the cloth with the finger nail or by rubbing the material between the hands. Cloth that has a large quantity of this sizing in it will also feel harsh and stiff to the touch. A sure way is to wash a sample of the goods, when most of the dressing will disappear.

It is also a good idea to test the strength of cotton goods by pulling sharply at the edge of the material. It may have been weakened in the bleaching process, or a bolt which has been in stock a long time may have become weakened by the action of some chemical used in the sizing or the dyes. A good way to test the strength of a material is to place the thumbs together and press them down hard holding the cloth tight underneath and noting how much strain it will bear.

The firmness of the weave and the quality of the fiber are also important points to consider. Holding the cloth up to the light and looking through it will show whether the weave is close or not. To judge the quality of the fiber, all you have to do is untwist a thread of the cloth and notice the length of the separate fibers. A long fiber always indicates strength, and, therefore, good wearing quality.

In choosing between two grades of cotton cloth, it is frequently wise to consider the additional wearing quality you can get for a few cents additional cost. Often a piece of goods costing only two or three cents more will wear four or five times as long as the cheaper material. Of course, this is not always true, as sometimes the extra cost is due simply to the novelty of the design or color.

"STYLISH STOUTS"

"I would rather admit that I am stout and be correctly fitted than fool myself into wearing the wrong clothes that only make me look stouter than I really am," said one wise shopper.

It is a common wail going up from stout women that the styles are all made for the slender woman, and that no attention is paid to them. But there are many things which you can do for yourself to keep you from looking—dare I say it?—fat.

Most women who are too stout make the mistake of thinking that the tighter they wear their clothes the better they will appear. This is a preposterous idea, for when carried to extremes, it only makes them look like something "trussed." Rather should the excessive flesh be disguised by soft fullness. And having heard or read somewhere that stripes make a person look slender, they make the mistake of choosing wide stripes. The stripes should be fine and indistinct rather than showing any definite color or line. The cardinal point for every stout woman to keep in mind is that up-and-down lines give slenderness, and round-and-round lines emphasize thickness. It ought not to be necessary to warn her against tunic skirts, or those with ruffles, shirring, and excessive crosswise trimming, and yet we see the walking need of such advice on the streets every day.

Sleeves for the stout woman should be plain, and while not so large as to accentuate the width of the figure, should be loose enough to conceal the super-abundant flesh. The under arm should be close, though "easy fitting." Cuffs that turn back serve to call attention to the short, fat arm.

If your neck is short and thick, you should not wear "choker" collars of any kind. The V-neckline is your best boon, and if lace or trimming is used it should blend in with the blouse so that it is practically lost to the eye. In fact, trimming must always be of a harmonizing rather than a contrasting color; and on no condition must a collar or a belt boldly attract the eye. Unbroken line from neck to hem—therein lies your salvation.

Black and all very dark colors make a figure appear smaller. Avoid blousy, large-figured fabrics and big brocades. In selecting material for garments, pay especial attention to the sheen and finish. Stiff fabrics having a glossy, brilliant surface attract attention and make the figure appear larger, while soft, pliable fabrics in dull colors make the figure look smaller.

Sugar cane waste is now being converted into a coarse form of board used in lining walls.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

Waited Long for Diploma

"Dr. John Guilford Earnest, class of '61." These words were lately uttered at Emory and Henry college. Thereupon Doctor Earnest, eighty-seven years old, the oldest alumnus of Emory and Henry and now its oldest graduate walked forward to be presented with a diploma which would have been his in June, 1861, but for the fact that he had left school the previous April to join the forces of the Confederacy.

Could "Improve" Tennyson

The present Lord Tennyson, grandson of the famous poet, is becoming one of the most popular cricket players in England. Since he has ceased to be known as the Hon. Lionel Tennyson he has had many reminders of his distinguished grand-parent. He recently received the following letter from a woman: "In honor of your visit and your vigorous batting, I have purchased a volume of your poems, which I think are exceedingly good, but I'd like to meet you personally and point out one or two parts that I think you could really improve."

New Dye From Dead Cactus

That a certain species of cactus can be made to produce a natural plant dye is the claim of Prof. H. Molisch, a German chemist. He has named it "cactorubin," because of its reddish color, and says that it is produced when the cells of the plant die.

"This is certainly rubbing it into the house detective," Pelham grinned. "What next, Junior? Do I salute you hereafter?"

"We begin our investigation at daybreak," Junior continued. "If any people are there, we shall have a better chance to surprise and overpower them."

"Does Dina know?" Pelham asked.

"No. This is one of the few times I've had a secret from her. She would worry. You know, old man, there may be danger. You're a deputy. It will be up to you to arrest them. That's why we are taking you along. Junior wanted to do the stunt alone. Observe his sullen face. He thinks we are going to steal his stuff."

"That cheers me;" Pelham said. "I'm ready." He put a large hunting-knife in his pocket, and some cord. "No trained house detective ever ventures on a man-hunting expedition without a small ax. Junior, forget the difference in our rank, and get me one."

When the boy had gone, he turned to Hanby.

"Hi, old top," he laughed, "I've been d—d gloomy the last few days, but I honestly believe you've hit on something good!"

"I don't know about good," said the other slowly. "If the sanctuary holds the key to the mystery, I don't imagine we shall see poor Burton alive again. You see, he blundered right into the thick of things. If I'm right he ran into the bunch that killed Red Kerr. I think that note was a forgery."

The long, creeper-clad front of the Gray house faced the south.

The distance from the extreme boundary of the building and the wire that inclosed the thicket was not more than fifty feet.

When dawn came slowly down the skies, it found Hanby cutting methodically at the wire fence. When the others had passed in, he twisted the cut ends together, so that no passer-by would notice that an entrance had been made.

Permitting impetuous youth to bear the brunt of the opposition offered by the undergrowth, the expedition pushed its way forward. Ahead of them they heard the brook, and were eager to come to it.

The three soon stood in an area lighted from above by the early light filtering through a screen of leaves. There was a chlorotic, eerie quality about this illumination. The stream flowed to them out of the darkness, and a few yards below it disappeared into a black channel.

"Can we work upstream?" Hanby asked.

Junior made an examination.

"It seems impossible. This place has been cleared out for some special reason—probably because the brook makes that sharp turn, and they had to smooth it out."

"Exactly, Sherlock," his father gibed. "Even I see that; but why?"

Junior, in answer, clutched the other's arm. He pointed upstream to the tunnel from which the water poured in unvarying volume.

"What's that?" he demanded.

Peering into the shadows, the others could see that the stream carried a burden—a large dark mass that came steadily toward them. Sometimes it was completely immersed, and then it seemed to lift itself from the water, as if it were a huge animal swimming.

"G—d!" cried Hanby. "It's a man's body." The thing was now almost at his feet. He nerved himself to stoop down for a closer inspection. "It may be poor old Tom Burton!"

Shuddering a little, he turned the corpse over so that its face could be seen. The sightless eyes of Adolf Smucker stared up at him.

Death had not been kind to that mean and evil face. Smucker had come to his end in agony and fear, and those emotions were graven on the face at which the three stared. His neck, in life thin and bony, was now black and swollen. On his narrow forehead was a purple bruise, stretching to the roots of the sparse hair.

Instinctively Hilton Hanby released his hold, and the stream again took up its burden.

"Thank God it wasn't Tom!" Pelham whispered.

"Perhaps, if we wait long enough, he'll come by," Hanby said gloomily.

He was depressed to think that he had allowed Junior to come with him. There was no doubt now that danger lay ahead of them. He knew he could not expect his son calmly to leave his father and his friend to face it alone; and if anything should happen whereby not all of them returned, what would Dina do?

Why had they murdered Smucker? And what was Smucker doing here?

"Well," he said aloud, answering his own question, "speculation is silly and time-wasting. We've got to follow the stream. We can't do it down here, but the channel is easily seen from the outside."

The three made their silent way [illegible] narrow path, each with the [illegible] at the end of it something of a vaguely dangerous character would be found.

Pelham cautioned his companions to proceed more carefully.

"D—n it," he said crossly, "why walk upright? For all you know, some one's looking along rifle sights at you this very moment. Crouch, man, crouch!"

"It's too early for anyone to be about yet," Hanby said. "At that, I think your advice is good."

Suddenly he stopped and picked up a fountain pen. On a silver band around it were the initials "T. B."

"It's Tom's!" he whispered. "That letter was a forgery, after all. He's somewhere here. God save him from Smucker's fate!"

Hanby put the pen in his pocket and pushed on.

"Appleton lied," he said a minute later. "Look—the lake wasn't filled in, after all!"

The path led them suddenly, with a right-angled turn and a quick descent, to the stream level again. It ran through a hollow a hundred yards in length. The place was a natural amphitheater. Coarse-meshed wire had been stretched from side to side, and was so densely overgrown that the hollow, as observed from the roof of the Gray house, seemed but a natural part of the five acres that had been a lake.

The three shrank into the bushes at the edge.

"Who did it?" Junior whispered.

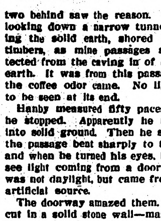
"Why was it done?" Pelham answered.

"We've got to cross this, if we're to find out," Hanby said.

He led the way, keeping to the edge of the leafy wall of this natural tent. He stopped them with a gesture. The odor that floated toward them was unmistakable.

"Coffee!" they whispered in unison.

Hanby went on even more warily than before. When he stopped the two behind saw the reason. He was looking down a narrow tunnel piercing the solid earth, shored up with timbers, as mine passages are protected from the caving in of rocks or earth. It was from this passage that the coffee odor came. No light was to be seen at its end.



With a Roar of Anger, He Sprang at the Crouching Lad and Had Him by the Throat.

Hanby measured fifty paces before he stopped. Apparently he had run into solid ground. Then he saw that the passage bent sharply to the left; and when he turned his eyes, he could see light coming from a doorway. It was not daylight, but came from some artificial source.

The doorway amazed them. It was cut in a solid stone wall—masonry of the same sort as that of the Gray house.

"Dad!" Junior whispered excitedly. "This is our house—I'm certain!"

The three intruders passed through the entrance. It seemed odd that it had no door. The light which enabled them to dispense with the flashlight came from a low-powered electric bulb in the masonry ceiling of a large chamber. The insufficient illumination showed the room to be almost ten feet in height, and filled with piles of lumber.

Now for the first time they heard voices. They drew back into an unlighted chamber, of whose dimensions they could not judge. Here they waited, having for the moment no set plan of action. Junior's guess seemed to be a correct one. For some reason which might soon be discovered, the owner of the Gray house was allowed to use only one-third of his cellar space. Unknowns occupied the rest, and had piled lumber in it. More than that—unknowns made their homes here and breakfasted here.

When the distant voices ceased, Hanby turned on the flashlight and looked about him. They had strayed into a storeroom. On shelves were potatoes, onions, carrots, pears, and apples. The floor was of concrete, and an electric light bulb was the source of illumination.

"I bet I'm paying for their juice!" Hanby whispered.

He stopped suddenly. At last he heard footsteps. The three took what cover they could in the corners.

Luigi entered, and switched on the light. It was Junior whom he first saw. With a roar of anger, he sprang at the crouching lad and had him by the throat.

Hanby remembered those dreadful bruises on Smucker's neck. He raised the heavy cane and brought it down on the strangler's head with all his strength.

"Thanks, dad!" said Junior, making an effort at superb calm.

Bill Pelham, with a yachtsman's skill, trussed up Luigi with knots that the ruffian could not break when he came to. The whole thing had occupied only a few seconds, and had made little sound. Luigi's cry of rage, apparently, had brought no one to investigate its cause. They left him to lie in a corner, covered with sacking. The odds were growing more favorable.

Hanby was amazed to see Bill Pelham stop before another narrow door and slip a key into the lock. He had not noticed that his friend had taken a bundle of keys from the man he was binding.

Pelham worked quietly. The oiled lock made no sound. Darkness was on either side of the door. As it swung open, the three, listening intently, heard a sound as of a man sighing.

"Celia! Celia!" sighed the unseen.

"Les!" Junior whispered, and turned his flashlight on his friend.

Pelham shut the door and looked about for the inevitable electric light.

Leslie Baron blinked at them in amazement. For weeks—or so it seemed—he had looked only into the cruel face of a jailer; and now he saw Celia's father, Celia's brother, and Bill Pelham. His face was blood-stained, and there was a deep cut over one eye, but he sprang to his feet readily enough. They could see that he was practically unhurt.

• • • • • • • •

While the bird sanctuary was being violated, Mr. Appleton drank his early coffee and took his cereal and fruit in his customary unhurried way; but ill humor sat on his florid face, and the eyes peering through his thick lenses no longer looked childlike and bland.

Three people were in the room with him—the woman who had a dozen years ago supplanted his wife, Jim Delaney, and Luigi Bartoli. Jim had been a bully all his life, a man who had innumerable times proved the fatuity of the axiom that every bully is a coward. By his side stood the big Sicilian, gesticulating wildly, and voluble beyond words.

"You murdered a man unnecessarily," said Appleton coldly.

Stripped of the exuberant verbiage interspersed with parenthetical remarks in his native tongue, Luigi's story was this:

He had gone into the little room that was Smucker's cell, there to sleep off some strong wine, and to escape from the observant eye of John Delaney. While slumbering, he had suddenly awakened to find that Smucker had stolen his knife and was about to slit his weasand. He had not murdered the man. He had done what he did to save his own life. In moments of vinous rage he did not properly estimate his own strength. He had been horrified to find Smucker lifeless, but Luigi contended that not a jury in the land would convict him of murder.

Working Principle of Explosive Engine Old

The basic idea of the explosive engine was conceived long before the appearance of steam. In 1680 Huygens described an explosion motor which was to be operated by discharging a quantity of powder to drive the air out of a cylinder and raise the piston. To that point, his engine relied on a force somewhat similar to the working principle of those today, but the useful work was to be done by the piston being forced down by the pressure of the atmosphere against it, thus lifting a weight or doing some other task. There is no record that this engine ever was operated. The steam engine of 1705 functioned on about the same plan, that is, steam was used to lift the weight of the piston, and after this was done, the atmospheric pressure was relied upon for the real work. After Huygens, almost 100 years passed before inventors caught the vision of rotary motion from their engines. His idea simply involved a piston and a cylinder.

Supreme Victory

A more glorious victory cannot be gained over another than this, that when the injury began on his part the kindness should begin on ours.—John Tillotson.

MEAN NEIGHBORS GET PUNISHMENT

Find Accusing Sign Placed on Nearby Lawn.

Jamaica, L. I.—A new wrinkle in signs for front lawns has been introduced by Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Azzevedo. If neighbors are inclined to be independent, why not put up a sign about it so that the public knows it? Mr. and Mrs. Azzevedo did so recently.

The sign in question, which may or may not start a vogue in suburban communities, reads: "The reason why the west side of our house is not painted is because our neighbors on that side refuse to allow our painter to place his ladder on their property in order to do the work."

The west side of the house is garbed in its original coat of white, while the remainder is brightly painted in deep cream. The sign is about a foot and a half square and generally similar to an ordinary real estate placard. It has been specially painted, with extreme regard for legibility.

The houses on Ninetieth avenue are unusually close together making it impossible for painters to raise ladders or erect scaffoldings without stepping on a neighbor's property. When a neighbor objects to this intrusion, as in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Azzevedo, progress on a paint job is seriously impeded.

Auto Accident Leads to Arrest of 2 Criminals

Paris.—An auto accident had a curious sequel here. A limousine was being driven along one of the boulevards by Felix Moncorger, twenty-eight, when he knocked down a pedestrian, who was rushed off to a hospital.

The police took the driver to jail and when they made inquiries found that his auto was one which had been reported stolen only a few hours previously, and the police allege it was Moncorger who stole it. Then a police officer was sent to take a statement from the victim of the accident. The doctors declared the man's condition was grave, but he himself claimed he was not hurt at all. This made the policeman suspicious and when he inquired into the man's past found he was actually sought as an escaped criminal.

When the man in the hospital recovers, he will be taken along to join in jail the driver who knocked him down.

Much Obliged, Says Old Sailor Saved From Sea

Bridgeport, Conn.—Some sort of an award for nonchalance ought to go to an ancient mariner rescued from his leaking rowboat in a driving rainstorm near here recently, Capt. David S. Conrad of the tug Owen J. McWilliams believes.

The gray-haired old man was standing in his water-filled boat, waving his shirt on the end of an oar when he was sighted through the rain.

The tug picked him up and carried him to shore. He did not discuss his name nor reveal his identity.

At the dock the aged boatman turned and said:

"Much obliged, captain."

"Don't mention it," replied Captain Conrad.

Burial Alive All Right, but He Forgot Details

Camas, Wash.—The trouble was that Romo, Man of Mystery at carnivals and county fairs, forgot one of his handy aids to mystery.

Emulating Houdini, Romo attempted to show he could survive one hour in a coffin buried six feet in a grave. Curiously enough, he took along a telephone. Down he went, duly nailed up in a box of one-inch boards, and on him the earth. Only three feet of it, however.

There came frantic calls for help, and when he was exhumed it was discovered the lid of the box had caved in under the weight, Romo having forgotten to put in iron braces.

Sheep Herder With Foot Burned Waits for Help

Enterprise, Ore.—With his right foot badly burned, Phil Hollis, sheep herder, tended his flocks for three days until aid reached him. Hollis had built a campfire to warm himself. He retired while the embers were still warm. A breeze sprang up and fanned the sparks onto his canvas shelter, igniting it. He was awakened when the tent filled with smoke. He dressed the burn and waited three days until a camp tender came before leaving the flock.

Dog Comes Home After Being Gone Five Years

Bolivar, Mo.—Spud, an English shepherd dog belonging to J. P. Lane, had been missing for five years. Several days ago the Lane family was startled to be met at the front door by Spud, joyfully wagging his tail and emitting short yelps of supreme happiness at the reunion. The prodigal was identified by a missing tooth which had been kicked out by a mule.

Spares Life of Friend

Vienna, Austria.—Feeling himself becoming faint while climbing a mountain in Austria, Paul Seidel commanded a friend to cut the rope which linked them together and then plunged 900 feet to his death over a precipice without dragging another along.

Carrot in Disrepute

Popularity of the carrot had not dawned in 1838 when William A. Alcott wrote a cook book, for he warns against use of this vegetable except in very small quantities. The tomato, he gives a very bad bill of health, and he deplores the fact that "at the present time, especially among the fashionable, there is an increasing tendency to regard the potato as somewhat vulgar." Bread, he declares, is sharing the same fate and is tolerated only as a sort of penance.—Detroit News.

Nabbed Bank Robbers

Minnesota's new state highway patrol demonstrated its usefulness last Friday when Earle Brown, chief of the motor patrol, and Patrolman L. A. Auspos captured three bandits who had robbed the First National bank of Elk River. Brown was traveling on T. H. No. 3 and had stopped to talk to Auspos, who lives at Elk River, when they received the report of the robbery. They started in pursuit of the bandits immediately. The pursuit ended in the capture of the bandits near Zimmerman, less than two hours after the robbery.

Capturing bank robbers, however, will not be a regular duty of the highway patrolmen, according to to C. M. Babcock, head of the State Highway department. The law creating the highway patrol limits limits their powers as peace officers to the enforcement of the laws relating to the use and operation of motor and other vehicles on the trunk highways. In pursuing bank robbers, Mr. Brown and Mr. Auspos were acting in the capacity of private citizens. Under the general law any private citizen not only has the power but it is his duty to aid in the apprehension of persons known to be guilty of a felony.

"The main purpose of the highway patrol is to keep traffic moving safely on the highways," says Mr. Babcock. "In this case they simply happened to be there at the right time and performed an incidental duty in an efficient manner".

U. S. Employment Service

Minneapolis, Minn., August 13.—Plans for directing labor to the harvest fields of Minnesota and the Dakotas and Montana, similar to those adopted in the past, will be followed again this year by the United States Employment Service, the State Industrial Commission of Minnesota and the Minneapolis Civic & Commerce Association. This cooperative arrangement is the result of a suggestion made by Gorvernor Theodore Christianson who called upon the other two agencies to aid the state commission in assuring the farmers of the Northwest sufficient labor to harvest their crops.

Prospective harvest workers are urged to inquire at the public Employment Offices, maintained at 125-127 Marquette Avenue, Minneapolis; at 300 Robert Street, St. Paul and 519 West Michigan Street, Duluth where latest information as to labor requirements in harvest areas is available.

Special agents of the Farm Labor Division of the U. S. Employment Service are now stationed at Fargo, Valley City, Bismark, Dickinson, Jamestown, Grand Forks, Minot and Williston in North Dakota, and at Great Falls, Bainville and Havre in Montana. George E. Tucker, field representative of the United States Employment Service, stationed at Fargo, N. D. is sending out telegraphic reports on the harvest demands through these various points.

A bulletin just recived from his office indicates that the spring wheat harvest is in full blast, with the demand for labor heavy in North Dakota and likely to continue through much of September, with threshing following closely upon harvesting.

PRODUCTION: There are many kinds of good silos, but all require a solid foundation. See that the new silo is properly built in this respect—rich cement and clean sand and gravel are very important in a silo foundation. Where there is good drainage the foundation may be extended 5 or 6 feet in the ground and the earth excavated.

MANUFACTURING: A cream cooling tank does good work only when cold water runs thru it. It should set between the well and the stock tank and all water pumped for the stock should be run thru the cream cooling tank.

MARKETING: The production of butter is from 40 to 80 per cent greater in summer than in winter. The surplus butter produced in summer must be stored and carried over to prevent a shortage in winter. The high quality of Land O' Lakes Sweet Cream Butter makes it the desirable butter to store. It keeps best and its fine quality after coming out of storage makes the consumption of butter much greater in winter than it would be with storage butter of poor quality.

RECORD EXHIBITS AT STATE FAIR

Agricultural, Livestock and Industrial Resources to be Displayed in "Show Window."

THE Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, Twin cities, August 31 to September 7, will present the greatest educational program in its history, announces Cal Sivright, vice president and general manager.

Enlarged exhibits and new features, more pretentious than ever attempted before, will make the 70th annual fair an outstanding one. It will be a $25,000,000 exposition vividly portraying all the progress that has been made in agriculture, livestock, industry and home-making in the Northwest the past twelve months.

MINNESOTA
STATE FAIR

The fair has been aptly called the "Show Window of the State." And why? Because it mirrors a true picture of all of its resources. At no other place can such a clear picture be had of its many varied industries, such as dairying, livestock raising, farming, mining, manufacturing and industrial activities.

New classifications, changes in rules, and increased prizes offered have been contributing factors to the increased interest in this year's big educational program. Premiums totaling $131,035.00 have been set aside for educational features, a sum several thousand dollars in excess of the prize money offered a year ago.

N. W. LIVESTOCK SHOW

Officials of the Northwest Livestock Show, staged in conjunction with the State Fair, have gone out of their way in an effort to make the livestock show an outstanding one. In the cattle department will be exhibited many of the finest dairy and beef herds of the nation. More than 1,000 head of cattle, valued at $1,000,000.00, will be housed on the main floor of the Livestock Pavilion. Equally as fine exhibits of horses, sheep and swine have been arranged.

Forty counties of the state will have booth exhibits in the Agricultural building, featuring the finest grains, grasses and vegetables grown in their respective counties.

In the horticultural building will be found stupendous exhibits of fruits and flowers, making it one of the most attractive spots on the grounds.

And then there will be the demonstrations of the boys and girls enrolled in club work. Twelve hundred junior farmers, survivors of the 45,000 children who competed in the preliminary contests throughout the state, will meet in the finals to settle championships in the various projects that have been carried on the past year.

Machinery Hill, with its 80 acres of exhibits, showing all kinds of tractors, threshers, combines, and road equipment in action, will present the premier show of its kind in the country this year.

In the Fine Arts building will be a loan collection of canvasses from the leading art galleries of the nation valued at $1,000,000.

Exhibits that will appeal especially to the woman, whether she be from the urban or rural centers, will be featured in the Woman's Activities department. There will be exhibits touching on home-making, child training, food, clothes, art, travel, and politics.

To Test Cows By Mail-Order

Dairymen will soon be having their cows tested for milk and butterfat production, even if they do not belong to any local testing group.

A system of "mail order" cow-testing is being worked out by the agricultural extension service of the University of Minnesota in co-operation with the Land O' Lakes Creameries, and will probably be put into action this fall. Dairymen will take their own samples of milk each month and mail them to the Land O' Lakes plant at Minneapolis for testing, paying a small charge for this service. The organization of the work and the field service will be taken care of by the agricultural extension service with headquarters at University Farm, St. Paul.

Local units will be established principally in connection with co-operative creameries.

Albary Buschka, 18 year-old German baker's apprentice who came to the United States as a Stowaway on the mighty Graf Zeppelin, was returned to his fatherland last week aboard the liner Thuringia. Young Buschka made the trip across the blue Atlantic Ocean twice without seeing it.

He made the trip to the States shut up in a dark compartment on the Zepplin and, was shut up in a detention cell on the liner going back.

World's biggest fair

THE Great Minnesota State Fair and N. W. Livestock Show, August 31 to September 7, will be one of the world's biggest state fairs. It will have:

270 Acres of Ground
200 Buildings
Miles of Streets
6,000 Exhibitors
$129,750 in Prizes
500,000 Visitors.

The most wonderful program in history is being planned, emphasizing all the agricultural and industrial progress of the past twelve months. It's "The Fair of a Thousand Thrills."

Big Profit Is Seen in Swamp Land

Propagation of Fish Will Yield Dividends, Says U. S. Bureau.

Washington.—Many a farmer has wondered how he could make a bit of spring or swamp land, pond or tiny lake yield some financial return. He strives to render it useful for agricultural purposes by drainage—frequently with very little success. Yet "the propagation of fish on farms in artificially constructed ponds or in natural ponds of limited area is perfectly feasible, and with proper management such ponds will afford a convenient and economical food supply that will justify the expense of their construction or preparation and maintenance," states a recent publication of the United States bureau of fisheries. This report describes the essential features to be considered in the location of a site, the construction of the pond and its operation and the kinds of fish to use such as the basses, sunfish, crappie and catfish.

Brood Fish Need Shelter.

"As with all forms of live stock, it is essential that brood fish be kept in a thrifty condition. Good food, proper shelter, ventilation and exercise—familiar requirements to the farmer—have their equivalents in the food, physical characteristics of the pond, composition and aeration of the water, and the amount of space allotted to a given number of fish." To obtain a maximum production the fish farmer will find it desirable to fertilize the pond each season. This will increase its productivity from two to fourfold. The fertilizer should be applied at intervals of two or three weeks during the spring and early summer.

In rearing bass it is desirable to introduce minnows as forage fish for the cannibalistically inclined bass to feed upon instead of preying on their less fortunate brothers and sisters: "These minnows feed largely on algae and small organisms that are not ordinarily eaten by bass, and consequently make available a food resource that is largely lost if no forage fish are present," the report states.

Black Bass Cannibalistic.

While it is difficult to estimate the capacity of ponds, a two-acre pond has produced 10,000 one-year-old black bass from four to six inches long and 20,000 one-and-one-half to two-inch yearling crappie or sunfish per acre. During the second year, through cannibalism, one may expect the bass stock to be reduced at least 50 per cent. In succeeding years, although the adult bass may consume most of the new year's hatch, enough should escape to maintain the maximum productivity of the pond.

The farmer may usually find a market for his surplus fingerlings for stocking other waters. Fingerling bass generally sell at $20 per thousand and upward.

Planes Equipped for Business in Flight

St. Louis.—The Mahoney-Ryan Aircraft corporation here has produced a cabin plane equipped with desk, dictaphone, filing equipment, book shelves and all the fittings of an office. The cabin is sound-insulated against the roar of the engine.

A system has been perfected whereby the user of the plane may read his business letters into the dictaphone and drop the dictaphone record to the ground by small parachutes, to be mailed. Three of the planes will be built each month.

Former Miner Wins Honor at Oxford

Oxford, England.—A former coal miner, married and the father of two children, is winning his way among the aristocratic sons of the rich at Oxford university.

Leaving the coal mines at Durham in 1923, Albert Dowdell decided he wanted an education at Oxford. He entered the tutorial classes and in four years he had made a brilliant record in history and economics.

In succession he has recently won five scholarships.

Guards Enjoy Snooze as Soviets "Steal" Train

Moscow.—A party of official "snoopers," sent out from Moscow to check up on the efficiency of provincial officials, succeeded in making off with every movable piece of equipment in a railroad yard near Veronej.

Twenty armed railroad guards and a yardmaster were supposed to be protecting the government property at night, according to details of the exploit revealed here. Every single official, the "snoopers" reported, was sound asleep.

"The 'raiders" ran a switch engine out of the roundhouse, and with it they pulled out a string of cars loaded with valuable freight. Then they sounded the fire alarm and waited in vain for the railroad fire brigade.

The next morning the railroad men frantically rushed to the G. P. U. police, and reported that the counter revolutionaries had stolen a whole freight train. The G. P. U. only smiled. Now all the negligent officials are in jail.

Modern Trains Pass Ancient One in Seattle

Seattle.—An ancient train, the locomotive of which cost about $6,000 and which was in service in 1875, together with three old style coaches, is on exhibition here for the summer, to typify the pioneer travel luxury of one northwest railroad. The entire train cost about $15,000.

Daily a 61-hour Chicago-to-Coast train, drawn by a $275,000 electric engine, and eleven royally appointed cars, representing $450,000 more, stops beside the decrepit overland, so that passengers may compare the progress made in transportation.

Gold in Old Mill Sites

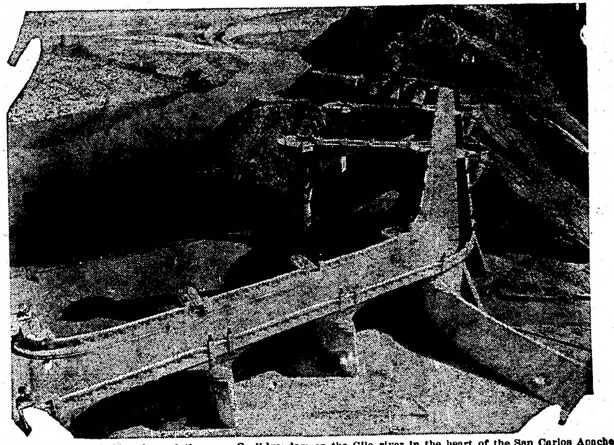
Beautiful View of the Great Coolidge Dam



Here is a remarkable view of the new Coolidge dam on the Gila river in the heart of the San Carlos Apache Indian reservation in Arizona. It is the first multiple dome dam ever built. It impounds 1,200,000 acre-feet of water to irrigate 100,000 acres of desert land, generates 15,000 horsepower of electricity, and provides a great bridge for the transcontinental automobile highway.

NO BACKING OUT OF "HOSS" TRADE, IS JURY'S VERDICT

Tremendous Interest Centered Around Unusual Case in Missouri Court.

Moberly, Mo.—"A hoss trade is a hoss trade," and that's all there is to it.

That, in effect was the decision of a Randolph county jury in Circuit court here. While tremendous interest centered about the trial, and the courtroom was crowded at every session, the facts were simple. Frank Owens, a mail carrier out of Carlo, swapped a mule for Jackson Tole's mare. Frank said the mare was represented as gentle, free from blemishes and would haul the mail cart over the dirt roads of Randolph county with docility and the requisite energy.

But a trial showed the mare had a broken hip, was short of wind and inclined to remonstrate fiercely when he tried to hitch her to a vehicle, the plaintiff told the jury. She just wouldn't do at all, Frank said, and he wanted the deal called off.

Jackson Toles denied any warranty. He said that he and Owens sized up the two animals and agreed to swap. He wanted a mule and Owens wanted a mare. Each trader risked his judgment, and was to take what he got. He didn't know any more about Owen's mule than Owens knew about Tole's mare.

At first trial the court sustained a demurrer. Owens appealed to the higher court, which sent the case back for trial, and the parties went at it for two days.

The crowd of spectators followed the examination of the witnesses with unwearied interest. It was like old times to hear witnesses describe eyes and legs and wind and blemishes and other horse lore instead of the mechanism of an automobile, as they do in cases today. The jury found for Jackson Toles, the defendant, and allowed him $1 on his counter claim of $88 for feed. There were six lawyers in the case, three on a side.

Find Grave of Baron, Famous Glass Maker

Boiling Springs, Pa.—Two weathered stone grave markers, on the lawn of the home of J. C. Bucher here, mark the last resting place of Baron Henry Stiegel, who founded Manheim, Pa., and manufactured the now famous glassware which bears his name. Specimens of Stiegel glassware bring thousands of dollars as antiques.

Mrs. John Robertson, of Mechanicsburg, Pa., said to be the last living descendant of the baron, located the graves through records in an old family Bible.

Mrs. Robertson receives from the congregation of the Zion Lutheran church annually one red rose. It was provided by the baron that his oldest descendant receive the "rose rental," following his death.

NEARBY AND YONDER

By T. T. MAXEY

Lafayette National Park

LAFAYETTE National park is the first of all those broadly-varying and matchless areas of outstanding scenic attractiveness, which Uncle Sam has selected, set aside and maintains as national rest-and-play grounds for the benefit and enjoyment of his people, that lies east of the Mississippi.

It is unique among these national domains, in that it is the first having contact with the sea. It is, in fact, surrounded by the sea and its arms, on territory near which a daring French explorer planted his feet long before the Mayflower pulled up at Plymouth. If, as has been said, the coast of Maine is "An eloquent chapter in the continent's ancient history," then, Lafayette National park is "One of the most dramatic paragraphs in the chapter."

The park is located on Mount Desert island, which is celebrated for its picturesque beauty, the largest island in the archipelago east of Penobscott bay and the largest rock-built island on our Atlantic seaboard. It is indeed a superb grouping of natural topographic elements and features—mountains, cradling half-hidden lakes, hills and plains, cliffs and crags, bold and rocky coast line, majestic woodlands made up of various members of the tree tribe, underbrush of strange varieties, beautifully carpeted with a confusion of many-hued wild flowers, mottled by sunshine and shadow, all encompassed by blue-green salt water and overhung by a sky of shifting colors. "Of its own and in its own way," says the guide book, Lafayette National park is "an American masterpiece."

The American Parthenon

THE Parthenon was "The crown of the glory that was Greece." This temple which bordered on the Acropolis at Athens, was dedicated to Pallas Athena, the goddess of wisdom, more than 400 years B. C., and was used throughout the centuries of its existence as a temple of worship. The pagans occupied it for about one thousand years and the Christians for about another ten centuries. The Christians were routed by the Turks and the ancient structure became a mosque. In 1687 the Turks were overthrown by the Venetians and the building was ruined.

In Centennial park at Nashville, Tenn., on the banks of the Cumberland, stands a faithful reproduction, both as to form as well as to size, of that masterpiece of Greek architecture. First constructed as an attraction of the Tennessee centennial exposition in 1897, it was later rebuilt as an unusual and permanent attraction of the Tennessee capital.

The charm of this beautiful building springs from the refinement of its outline and the well-balanced effect of its proportions, these characteristics blending in a dignity and grace, which have made it famous as the most perfectly proportioned structure the Greeks ever built. It is 101 feet wide, 228 feet long, 65 feet high and is encircled by a row of 50 giant, fluted columns, each 34 feet high and 6½ feet through at the base, which are easily the most attention-attracting feature of the entire ensemble. A frieze containing 92 panels in sculptured relief depicts some of the leading mythological tales which are connected with ancient Greek history.

The Mount of the Holy Cross

THE Mount of the Holy Cross is one of the sky-piercing peaks which constitute the Rocky mountain range. It is located in Eagle county, Colorado, near the town of Minturn. Its hoary head rises to an elevation of 13,978 feet or considerably more than two and one-half miles above the waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific.

On this mountain nature carved a deep ravine some 2,000 feet long running up and down its side, fashioned a transverse ridge some 800 feet long across and above the center of this ravine and thus produced a mighty and holy cross from which the mountain takes its name.

By virtue of its altitude this ridge is almost always covered with snow, high winds cause the snow to drift into the ravine and thus a great, white cross appears on the mountain side and looks out and down upon the world. This inspiring marvel has been referred to as "A Nation's Guiding Emblem of Faith."

Uncle Sam, through his forest service, now has set aside a tract of land of some 350 acres which includes this mountain and is known as Holy Cross National forest, as a shrine for the use of his people for devotional, educational and recreational purposes, and it has come to pass that an annual, non-denominational pilgrimage can be made to the top of Notch mountain, directly opposite this great nature-made cross, by all who desire to "lift up mine eyes" in this unusual and glorious spot.

Wildcat Swap Brings Hunter Heavy Fine

Harrisburg, Pa.—The difference between three wildcats killed in Pennsylvania and three killed in Louisiana is $145 in U. S. money, at least so far as the bounty division of the board of game commissioners is concerned.

Despite the similarity in size and color of three pelts offered recently to the bounty board for payment, members of the board easily detected the difference between a Pennsylvania cat and one from the brakes of a southern state.

Investigations disclosed the cats had been killed in Louisiana. Instead of collecting $45 in bounties, the hunter paid $100 in fines.

BECOMES COUNTESS; FLEECED BY CROOK

Kansas Woman Comes to Grief in France.

Paris.—Things have happened quickly since the day Mrs. Pearl Hussey Flanagan, a music teacher and wife of an undertaker in Wichita, Kan., walked up the steps of the Cathedral of the Sacred Heart, in Paris, France. Events have followed each other almost too quickly, for when Mrs. Flanagan walked down the steps she was Countess de Taurine and owned the Chateau de Taurine, a massive old structure of rough hewn stone.

Now Mrs. Flanagan owns nothing. She plans again to take up the teaching of music where she left off, and she must begin soon, for the law took away from her her fur coat, dresses, stockings, and even underwear. Besides, her husband is suing her for divorce.

When she entered the cathedral in Paris, Mrs. Flanagan met the Abbe Loubiere. She told him of her ambition to establish a school of music in France, and her seriousness so impressed him that he asked her to accept the chateau as a nucleus about which to build the school. The abbe had served in the World war, among American troops, and was not averse to paying some tribute to America. Mrs. Flanagan then learned she had become Countess de Taurine under French civil law.

Seeking to obtain a manager, Mrs. Flanagan in Kansas City hired Charles F. Faye to conduct the business end of her music school abroad. Faye, given a free hand, began the floating of stock, stairstepping the prices. He had been arrested before for raising a check, but Mrs. Flanagan did not know that. When the crash came Faye went to jail and the countess was in debt $5,000. Besides, there was a tax of 60 per cent on the chateau in France. Constables left the "countess"—or Mrs. Flanagan now—with the house dress she was wearing when they departed from the music school.

Scientist Would Study Sun at Close Range

Brussels.—Working closer to the sun than has any human being before him, so far as is known, Prof. Andre Piccard of Brussels university and an assistant hope to study the cosmic rays at a height of nearly 50,000 feet. The professor plans to reach this dizzy height in an especially made balloon with a closed cabin.

Professor Piccard says the cosmic rays are the key to the atmospheric conditions of the earth, and that his initiative may lead to all commercial airplanes using the upper layers for travel rather than the stormy regions close to the earth.

King Albert's $13,800,000 fund for scientific research will finance the venture, which will cost about $15,000.

Woman Makes Bricks

The only woman in England who carries on the ancient craft of hand brickmaking is Mrs. Bennie Gibbs, of Crossways farm, Ingham. Her father died a year or two ago, leaving an old brickyard in a corner of his farm. Mrs. Gibbs turned her attention to brickmaking, and became an expert. She motored with samples of her work to local builders and architects, who welcomed her fine hand-made bricks.

"You fool!" said Appleton, coldly venomous. "I do not object to your killing him. It is the manner of disposing of the body that stamps you as an imbecile. Why didn't you bury it where nobody could find it? What madness made you put it in the stream? It is beyond recovery by us, but the others will find it, and they will hold it like a club—not over you or Jim, but over me. You will find it hurts you, too! Well, it's done now, and we know that it will be discovered. Also we know that the men we are dealing with will make capital out of it." Appleton's icy rage grew with the thought of the disaster. "I shall be the sufferer—I, who thought that after tonight I should have no worries in the world!" He pointed at Luigi. "And this mass of clay from Palermo's underworld, who has had sanctuary here, and food and drink, when he should be in an Italian jail, has twice imperiled us!"

"That isn't fair, Fred," the woman protested. Alone of them she seemed to be in no fear of him. "Kerr, or Chapin, or whatever his real name was, got that job because he knew there was some mystery here, and he hoped to blackmail us. Some one must have given us away. Either Luigi had to get him, or we might all have been discovered."

"Stupid!" he commented crossly. "Why do you all persist in misunderstanding me? You seem to think I am worrying about the death of an escaped convict, when I am only remembering that Luigi, instead of concealing the body here, must throw it in the lake, under the impression that there was an end of it." He waved his hand to the Sicilian. "Go! Remember, we need all your strength today. Sleep, if you want to. Jim will call you when we are ready."

Luigi's great carcass bowed, and animated itself with relief. His was a child's mentality. He bowed to them all. Jim liked his cooking.

"I getta you your breakfas', Jeem," he said, smiling. "I make-a the tomato, garlic, and potato you like."

He took his way to the storeroom gayly. After the meal he would sleep. After that, there would be work for him that no other man here could perform. Jim Delaney was stronger than most men, but he was not like Luigi, who had carried a grand piano on his back.

"You see, Jim," said Appleton, when the Sicilian had gone, "that we are now in the position of dealing with people who hold something definite against us."

"They're in as deep as we are," said Jim.

"Nothing of the kind! We may suspect them of a dozen murders, but whereas we have only suspicion they have a corpus delicti—actually the body of the crime. They can't help finding it. It has cost me a great deal of money and time to make it certain that they must find it. That's one of the exasperating things!"

"Forget it, Fred," the woman said, patting his head. "Two weeks from now we'll be in Europe, living like lords."

"Sure, chief," Jim declared. "They won't want to give you away, anyhow."

"There's risk in the whole affair," Appleton retorted. "If the deal goes through safely, they will use their knowledge to cut my price. If I refuse, they will pay, perhaps, but they'll get me for Luigi's foolishness. If they are discovered, they will have to accuse me to save themselves. Luck doesn't keep on. It was sheer luck that the police dropped the Red Chapin case when they found the mangled body of an old cell mate who had threatened to kill him. This thing worries me. Of course, you might get the body at the culvert, but you would most likely be seen. Safer, perhaps, to let things go. See that Luigi is ready when we need him."

Jim walked to the storerom, calling the Sicilian by name. This cellar had been so constructed as to be soundproof.

It was Junior's quick ear that heard him first, as he passed the door of Leslie Barron's cell.

"They'll find that man and know we're here," he whispered.

"We'll get him as he's finding him," Hanby said.

There were four now who crept toward the storeroom. They entered it just as Jim was kneeling by Luigi's side, untying his bonds. It was Leslie who made the first spring at him. Jim had not a chance. Outnumbered, taken by surprise, unable to rise to his feet, his struggle was futile. Side by side, he and Luigi nibbled viciously against gags.

"Now for Tom Burton!" said Hanby, when they left the storeroom.

When the door opened, Burton stood up and clenched his fists. He knew that some day Luigi's inherent love of torture would lapse into some such exhibition of violence as would kill him. Burton had great ideas of Nordic racial pre-eminence. He would show that even in their moments of dying, the Nordic strain was the thoroughbred one.

"Ah!" he said satirically. "The gentle Luigi! Good morrow, Caliban!"

Not until that moment had Hanby really liked Burton. It was as he saw him standing braced for punishment, and unafraid, that there came a change of heart.

"Tom, old man," he said, "Junior, Bill, and I are here. We've trussed up two gallows birds. How many more are there?"

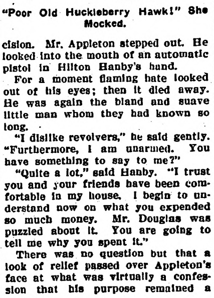
When the light was turned on, it was seen that Tom Burton had suffered at his warder's hands. His face was thin and lined, his body bruised and aching. There were tears in his eyes as he shook his rescuers' hands.

Burton had little to tell. He knew only that the infamous Appleton, who had tipped him into the pit, ruled here absolutely. Burton had seen only Luigi, Jim, and Smucker. There might be others of whom he had not heard. He had no idea for what purpose Appleton had made his home here, or that he had been imprisoned beneath his cousin's house.

"We're here to clean out this place," Hanby said. "You'd better come along with us."

The searchers made slow progress, because they were as yet unaware of the number of inhabitants this subterranean fastness concealed. The general layout was speedily made clear. The large cellar with the lumber was the main feature. Then there were three little cells, a kitchen, a storeroom, and one other apartment. It was through the doors of this last that by straining their ears they could hear the faint hum of human voices.

While they were wondering whether to attempt to force an entrance, or to wait until the people within came out, they were relieved of making the decision. Mr. Appleton stepped out. He looked into the mouth of an automatic pistol in Hilton Hanby's hand.



"Poor Old Huckleberry Hawk!" She Mocked.

For a moment flaming hate looked out of his eyes; then it died away. He was again the bland and suave little man whom they had known so long.

"I dislike revolvers," he said gently. "Furthermore, I am unarmed. You have something to say to me?"

"Quite a lot," said Hanby. "I trust you and your friends have been comfortable in my house. I begin to understand now on what you expended so much money. Mr. Douglas was puzzled about it. You are going to tell me why you spent it."

There was no question but that a look of relief passed over Appleton's face at what was virtually a confession that his purpose remained a secret.

"Call it a fad," he observed benevolently. "This living underground is nothing new. The famous duke of Portland, as you no doubt remember, constructed a ballroom and a riding school under the lake of his famous Welbeck Abbey estate. Consider me a humble disciple."

"He did what he chose on his own property. You are trespassing on mine."

Appleton sighed profoundly.

"That makes a difference, I admit. Well, Mr. Hanby, charge me what you think is a fair price for my tenancy, and I will pay."

"There's another charge, too," Hanby reminded him. "Murder! It doesn't matter whether you strangled Smucker or your strong-arm men did it. You'll have trouble dodging the chair!

"When you have made a complete confession, duly witnessed and signed, I shall turn you over to the police. Appleton, your goose is cooked, and you ought to have sense enough to know it. Why have you been scheming for years to get possession of this place? Why did you keep tenants away?"

"It was a fad," Appleton returned blandly. "Every man has one. You, for example, desired to be the owner of an estate. Well, that was my ambition, too. I have lost. You have won. Why, then, not be generous and let me go?"

He made a movement as if he wished to lead them away from the door. He did not notice that Pelham slipped behind him and produced a bunch of keys. Appleton was only aware that the door opened suddenly and he was pushed into the room.

It was the only apartment well furnished. Breakfast things were on a small table. In a chair a woman, still pretty, but no longer young, was smoking a cigarette. She jumped up in alarm.

"What's the matter, Fred?" she cried. "Who are these men?"

"Mr. Hanby," Appleton began amiably, "is incensed at discovering our retreat. Having found nothing irregular, he decides to accuse us all of murder. You are witness that this poor creature"—he pointed to Burton—"assaulted a giant huckleberry hawk intent on his destruction."

"My G—d!" cried Burton, incoherent in his anger. "He asked me to look at a giant fuchsia moth!"

"There is no such thing, of course," Appleton said pityingly. "You can see that his mind has gone. I had him put under partial guard. I shall admit that he suffered from a homicidal mania? He assaulted Smucker directly he came in, and later, unfortunately, he killed the poor fellow. There are witnesses to this."

"All d—d lies!" roared the professor. "Execrable falsehoods!"

"As to Smucker," continued Appleton, "he came here for the sole purpose of setting fire to the Gray house and killing its owner and all its inmates. I kept him here because I liked and respected Mr. Hanby and his family." Appleton's keen eyes were fixed on Hanby's face. "If Mr. Hanby denies knowledge of Smucker's avowed enmity, I shall be greatly surprised."

"We found him with matches and gasoline all ready to set fire to your house," the woman contributed.

"I don't doubt it," Pelham said dryly; "and I don't doubt that you were glad enough to stop him. If he had burned the Gray house, you would have died in its ruins. So far you haven't made out a case."

She shrugged her shoulders.

"If you don't want to be reasonable," she said, "that is your affair. If you want a murder trial, with a relative of the Hanbys in danger of hanging, call in the police. Two credible witnesses saw the murder committed."

"Madam," said the professor coldly, "you lie!"

"Poor old huckleberry hawk!" she mocked. "You've probably forgotten very conveniently, but you'll be hanged, for all that, if the police ever know about it!" There was a certain insolence about her that compelled admiration. "We may as well tell the truth," she went on. "Fred and I have been fond of each other for years. His wife wouldn't consent to a divorce, and my husband can't be located. Fred arranged this place where we could be undisturbed. He didn't fill in the lake completely, as you've no doubt found out. He fenced it with barbed wire, and planted thorn hedges to keep out trespassers."

Hanby interrupted her.

Scot First Brought Navel Orange North

The United States owes the successful introduction of the naval orange to the late William Saunders, horticulturist. It is not certain, however, that the trees which were introduced by Mr. Saunders were the first which had been brought to the United States, though they were the first to come into successful bearing. The late Thomas Hogg of New York, in an account published in 1888, stated that about 1838 a wealthy Scotch planter in Brazil determined to manumit his slaves and remove with them to the United States. He settled on an island in middle or southern Florida and then returned to Brazil and secured a collection of plants for introduction, which he consigned to Mr. Hogg, who at that time conducted a nursery at the corner of Broadway and Twenty-third street, New York city. Among these plants were several naval orange trees. After the plants had been held in a greenhouse for a year, in order to allow them to recover from the effects of the long sea voyage which they had undergone, they were forwarded to the owner in Florida. During the Seminole war the owner was charged with giving aid and comfort to the enemy, and the entire collection of plants was destroyed by the United States troops. The owner then moved to Haiti.

Where Tornadoes Occur.

Tornadoes seldom occur outside the United States. The Mississippi valley reserves them mainly for itself, says Nature Magazine. Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri run neck and neck for funnel-cloud honors. Nebraska easily takes second place. Then comes Mississippi, Alabama, Iowa, Illinois, the Dakotas and Minnesota. Outside this region the whirling cloud seldom strikes. It is unknown in California. New England is never visited.

At the Training Camp.

The recruit had hurried off to the drill grounds without his rifle. Some of the other rookies would be along soon, so stepping into a canteen he telephoned his company sergeant to have one of the boys bring it along.

"What's that you forgot?" asked the sergeant.

"My gun."

"Your what?"

"My gun. You know, G-U-N. G as in Jerusalem, U as in Europe, N as in pneumatic."

On your toes with POST TOASTIES -quick, rich energy

Busy day ahead? Begin it right with Post Toasties. There's an ample store of brisk new energy in each crisp, appetizing mouthful. Easily digested energy that turns quickly into zest for the day's work.

And it's so good to eat! Pour the crumbly, golden-brown flakes out of the handy package into the saucer. Then add cream and sugar if you like. We've found that rich, natural corn flavor and the toasted crispiness make a perfect combination. Everyone likes it!

Ask your grocer for the genuine Post Toasties in the red and yellow package.

Rodent Has Worn Out Its Welcome in Hawaii

Those who know the mongoose only through Kipling's immortal story of Rikki-Tikki-Tavi may be surprised to hear that Hawaii hunts the little brown rodent as a pest. Originally brought to the islands on the theory that it would do battle with sugar-cane-gnawing rats, the mongoose has become a nuisance which many people feel is worse than the rats. Its destruction of birds, small poultry and eggs is perennial and extensive. Some years ago the legislature put a bounty on the mongoose in the hope that sufficient scalps would be collected to diminish its ravages. However, the mongoose is both wily and prolific, and his kind has not appreciably diminished. A bill in the present territorial legislature proposes to do away with the mongoose bounty on the grounds that were the little chap welcomed and encouraged instead of chased and persecuted, he might co-operate with society more cordially in campaigning against the sweet-toothed rats.

Birds Are Popular

During 1928, 500,000 foreign birds were imported into the United States. Canaries constituted the largest number of these immigrants, averaging more than 1,000 a day. Nearly two-thirds of all game birds imported have been Mexican quail. Next to these stand pheasants. These were formerly a large item in the entries, but state game farms and private enterprises now supply most of the stock and importations have fallen off considerably in recent years.

Fooled the Doctors Good

Taken to a New Orleans hospital Marie Fellcie was told by doctors she could not live more than three days. So she sent for her sweetheart, E. B. Peyronin, and they were married in the hospital. That was in 1879. The Peyronins celebrated their fiftieth anniversary the other day, still hale and hearty. Sometimes doctors make a bad guess.—Capper's Weekly.

Water as Fuel

That water may replace coal as fuel was the prospect offered by a Brazilian delegate at the world fuel conference in London. He stated that, as the result of thirteen years of study, he had discovered a method of using water as fuel.

Mastering Temptation

Two-year-old Keith was very much interested in the deck of cards lying on the floor by his mother's chair at a euchre party. He started a game of his own but was told by his mother to replace the cards in the box. A moment later he had his game going again and was again corrected by his mother, this time more severely. The young culprit immediately sought out the hostess and pleaded: "You put those cards up where I can't get them; my mamma don't want me to have them."

Total Loss

"Yes, I studied eight languages in college," admitted the henpecked man.

"Been any help to you?" asked the other.

"No," he sighed, "I have to do all my listening in one."

PRODUCTION: There are many kinds of good silos, but all require a solid foundation. See that the new silo is properly built in this respect—rich cement and clean sand and gravel are very important in a silo foundation. Where there is good drainage the foundation may be extended 5 or 6 feet in the ground and the earth excavated.

MANUFACTURING: A cream cooling tank does good work only when cold water runs thru it. It should set between the well and the stock tank and all water pumped for the stock should be run thru the cream cooling tank.

MARKETING: The production of butter is from 40 to 80 per cent greater in summer than in winter. The surplus butter produced in summer must be stored and carried over to prevent a shortage in winter. The high quality of Land O' Lakes Sweet Cream Butter makes it the desirable butter to store. It keeps best and its fine quality after coming out of storage makes the consumption of butter much greater in winter than it would be with storage butter of poor quality.

Young People Joined In Wedlock at Chisholm

One of the prettiest home weddings of the season took place yesterday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Swenby of Balkan township, when their daughter, Ruth, became the bride of Mr. George Fricker of Holt, Minnesota.

The home was prettily decorated with streamers, garden flowers, plants, and ferns. Orchid and green were the predominating colors.

The bridal party entered to the strains of Loengren's Wedding March with Little Robert Latick, nephew of the bride, as ring bearer. The bride was given away by her father. Little Ruth Latick was flower girl. She was dressed in a pretty changeable green and gold taffeta dress and carried a basket full of flowers which she strewed in the pathway of the bride.

The wedding ceremony was before a beautiful altar of greens and ferns and tall baskets of garden flowers. Rev. Ebb, of the Lutheran church, of Hibbing, read the nuptial vows. Before the ceremony Mrs. Emily Anderson accompanied by Miss Rayo Krause on the cello, sang Oh Promise Me and I Love You Truly.

Mrs. John Latick, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid. She was attired in a pink silk georgette and carried a bouquet of Ophelia Roses.

Mr. John Latick attended the groom.

The bride was beautifully gowned in a two toned orchid taffeta dress with a tight fitted bodice and uneven hem line. She wore a beatiful diamond pendent which was the gift of the groom. She carried an arm bouquet of brides roses and sweet peas.

The mother of the bride wore a gown of blue georgette. She carried a corsage of flowers.

Following the ceremony a wedding dinner was served at the Nelson Hotel to sixty-five guests. The dining hall was prettily decorated with ferns and garden flowers with orchid and green as the outstanding colors. The tables were trimmed with smilax, ferns, flowers and candles, with place cards and nut baskets in orchid and green. A huge wedding cake adorned the bridal table Mrs. Emily Anderson, soloist, accompanied on the piano and cello, sang 'Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms,' Daisies Won't Tell and 'Dreams of Long Ago' by Caruso.

Mrs. Bror. Magnusson and Mrs. F. Thompson, in behalf of the guests, congratulated the young the couple.

Immediately after the dinner Mr. and Mrs. Fricker left on an extended honeymoon motor trip. For going away Mrs. Fricker wore a dark blue silk crepe suit trimmed in tan with hat to match The young couple will make their future home at Holt, Minnesota.

Mrs. Fricker is very well known and is exceedingly popular among the younger set. She is a graduate of the Chisholm high school and Winona State Teachers College. For the past three years she has taught in the Holt local schools.

Mr. Fricker is a prominent business man and is in charge of the Marshall County State Bank at Holt, Minnesota.

Out-of-town guests who attended the wedding were Mr. M. Fricker, father of the groom, Miss Hazal Fricker, sister of the groom, of St. Hilaire, Minnesota, Mrs. Vern Nelson, sister of the groom, Thief River Falls, Minnesota, Mr. John Gustafson, Blackduck, Minnesota, Mrs. Clara Nelson, Blackduck, Minnesota, Mr. and Mrs. Elof Gustafson, and Clifford, of Goodland, Minnesota, Mr. and Mrs. Axel Johnson, and Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Adolph, of Eveleth, Minnesota, Mrs. Emily Anderson, of Mahoning, Mr. John Peterson, Oscar and Virginia, all of Hibbing, Minnesota.

Warning To Motorists

Several reports of serious accidents "due to loose gravel" have been received from various parts of the state during the past month. Such reports, says a State Highway Bulletin, should be amended to read that the accidents were "due to the driver failing to slow down for loose gravel."

A great deal of regraveling, scarifying, and other work must de done on the highways during the summer. Very often it is necessary to windrow the gravel, but even if it is entirely smooth, loose gravel may be dangerous to machines going at excessive speed. This year, in addition to new gravel, the dry season has been the cause of much of the old gravel wearing loose and this increases the hazard.

The Highway department has repeatedly, through road bulletins and warning signs, cautioned drivers against going too fast through loose gravel. If drivers will slow down to a moderate speed, there should be no danger.

The traffic law recognizes this condition. It requires every driver to operate his vehicle "at a speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, the surface and width of the highway, and of any other conditions then existing."

Earth Tremors Move in Cycles

Astronomer Says World Passed Through Seismic Crisis in 1923.

Paris.—In a recent issue of Le Petit Journal the Abbe Th. Moreux, director of the Observatory of Bourges, discussed the always interesting question of earthquakes periodicity, on which he is a recognized authority. He said:

"It seems to be still the style in certain official quarters to deny peridicity in earthquakes. In fact, we register, one year and another, about 8,000 shocks, but as far as intensity goes the years do not resemble one another.

"As our technique improves we succeed in noting the slightest seismic manifestations, and as long as a savant studies the phenomena with a magnifying glass the broad laws which regulate them will very probably escape him.

Detect Slightest Tremors.

"Here is a fact analagous to what the astronomers observe. At present our instruments have attained such precision that we can detect the slightest perturbations in the march of the planets. These are far from following orbits absolutely elliptical, so that the general laws of celestial mechanics would be more difficult to outline now than when Kepler laid them down for the first time with the aid of rudimentary observations.

"All the same, one would have an incredible lack of good sense not to notice in certain years seismic phenomena of extraordinary amplitude.

"That we passed through such a crisis in 1923 cannot be doubted by those who read the newspapers regularly. I announced that crisis, after November 25, 1922, in these columns and also in my review—'Revue du Ciel'—in the following January issue. It was, moreover, not my first venture of this sort, since my first previsions date from 1902.

"If I insist on this point it is not at all to grant myself the title of prophet. There are enough Nostradamuses. My idea goes further. In the 30 years in which I have studied the sun I have asserted in all quarters of the world that all our climatology depends on the sun. My campaign caused smiles at first, and at the beginning they called me, maliciously, the 'almoner of the sun.' But now the matter is so far advanced that it is a question as to who is entitled to the honor of having discovered that the sun's spots engender all calamities.

"In fact, those who have followed my work know very well that the sun spots are only one single manifestation of the general activity of the great star.

"And I claim that this activity not only exercises an influence on our exterior meteorology—rains, seasons, temperatures—but also on what I call endogenous meteorology—that which goes on under our feet.

Mistrusts Scientific Theories.

"By what mechanism? It matters little, for I mistrust scientific theories like a pest and I always remember those words of Henri Poincare: 'See, he used to say, 'by hypotheses in science—that is the asset which we lack least.'

"In a general way, I have been able to show that the earth troubles when solar activity increases and then brusquely diminishes.

"It is thus that, forecasting the curb of solar activity, I wrote on October 1, 1927: 'Earthquakes are going to diminish the world over during 1928. The years 1929 and 1930 will be a little more agitated, and 1931 will see a new beginning of a period of calm until 1934-'35.'

"On February 18, 1929, I wrote in an article in the Daily Mail: 'We must wait till 1931 for a renewal of earthquakes.

"If you follow in your newspaper dispatches from different points of the globe, or even of Europe, you can note that my prediction is being realized to the letter. The seismologists continue to register shocks. At the end of the year they will be delighted to observe that the average is about the same, but their instruments will be unable to reveal to them the number of victims or the amount of damage caused."

70, He Swims 4 Miles When His Boat Sinks

Brigantine, N. J.—Capt. G. P. Crowley of Tuckerton, seventy years old, swam four miles to shore recently when his 35-foot auxiliary sloop, the Emma B. sank under him.

The swim took him more than three hours, but he refused medical assistance when he landed and promptly took a taxicab to Atlantic City to report the wreck to the Coast Guard. The sloop was carried in by the tide and stranded on a sandbar near the shore.

Sues for $2,500 Over Yule Disappointment

Toledo, Ohio.—Christmas joy is worth $2,500 to Mr. and Mrs. Cary F. Mallory, according to a suit filed here against P. Nash Livingston, photographer.

According to the complaint, Mallory's son was photographed by the defendant to provide a Christmas present for the father. The suit charges the picture was used as a sample by a solicitor for the studios. Neighbors to whom the solicitor had shown the photograph told Mallory, and as a result he was not surprised when he received the gift and the Yule spirit was lost.

900-Foot Rafts Haul Timber to California

Longview, Wash.—The first of the huge cigar-shaped log rafts started on its way out of the Columbia river to the Pacific for a voyage to San Diego, Calif., recently. Five more of these rafts, which are about 900 feet long, draw 24 feet of water and contain 90,000,000 feet of timber, will move out of their cradles during the summer.

The logs came from Washington and Oregon forests. On these rafts deck loads of shingles and hewn timbers enable owners to utilize valuable shipping space. The transit down the coast is made in about 14 days.

MANY MARRIAGE OFFERS EASE TEACHING TEDIUM

Lonely Schoolma'm in Uncivilized District in Oregon Gets 500 Proposals.

Eugene, Ore.—Alone in one of the most uncivilized districts of the United States—Eden valley, Coos county, Oregon—Miss Henriette Hansen, school teacher, probably has spent more romantic hours than any other person of her profession.

A newspaper man pierced the uncivilized territory, photographed Miss Hansen and syndicated a story about her.

As a result she received "mash' mail, proposals and what not, by many shelks who sympathize with the fair teacher.

A spiritualist in Indiana, after seeing her picture, wrote her saying. "I can see that you are very sweet, pure, good and spiritual. You are very psychic and mediumistic. Watch your dream hunches and follow them out.' A ticket for a free reading, if Miss Hansen ever should go to Indiana, was enclosed.

One of the numerous proposals of marriage came from a wealthy land owner in Illinois. The letter, which was written in an almost illegible hand and with pencil, read: "I am looking for a good, honest, single girl. I have a farm with all black soil. I never see a fail year. I don't touch no strong drinks and never was no tobacco youser, no card player swearing and bad language. If you write to me I sent a post stamp. I got car with heater rear seat and front."

Nearly all of the letters were of this nature, according to Miss Hansen. Many professed a strong interest in the West, and sympathized with the young teacher in her lonely life. Many revealed that they believed Oregon and the West still to be overrun with bears cougars and wild savages.

One young fellow-teacher of New York advised her to stay West, however, as his city was "full of crime."

Miss Hansen recently completed her nine months of teaching in Eden valley and was en route to her home in Nebraska when she stopped here. She is a graduate of the University of Oregon.

There were but six children in her school, and these were from two families, the only residents of the section. She received her mail once a month via horseback.

"It was a hard, lonesome life," she said, "but it is wonderful experience to look back upon, and I certainly got a lot of fun out of the nearly 500 letters I received."

Courtesy wins, as well as valor

First Down and Geraldine

By JOHN SMITH

(Copyright.)

IT IS to be doubted if Phil Berkley recognized the bigest day of his life as such when it dawned. Rather is it reasonable to suppose that the rising sun, shining in through the broad windows of the luxurious quarters accorded the team by the entertaining university, awakened him to a feeling of despondency.

What chance had he, left tackle on the third string, of getting more than a sideline participation in the great gridiron contest of the year? And, equally to be deplored, what chance had he of competing with the team's popular captain for the favor of a certain glorious person named Geraldine?

In other words, it looked to Philip as if four years of grueling application to the science of football and four years of dogged courtship were equally doomed to failure.

Geraldine had risen an hour earlier for the sole purpose of taking no risk of not arriving at the game in due season. Her dark blue roadster stood ready at the curb while she finished a leisurely breakfast.

"Poor Phil!" she murmured once. "Dying to be in the game, of course, and not the ghost of a chance."

She threw down her napkin and rose. Perhaps tonight would find her engaged to Sperry, captain of the team. That such was his desire she knew from a letter received that very morning, and the thought was pleasant to dally with as she turned away to prepare for the four-hour cross-country drive to the great game in the college town.

The westering sun that day lighted tier upon tier of tense, colorful spectators whose eyes were glued to a handful of sweater-clad men who alternately scattered and bunched, only to scatter and bunch again. Tied was the score—had been since the end of the first period, when each side had a touchdown and goal to its credit.

Draped in a blanket, Phil Berkley sat with the subs and bent morose eyes on the field. They were being outplayed, doggone it!

Suddenly the referee's hand shot upward and action ceased. Time out. Man hurt! Phil could not see through the group surrounding a prostrate figure, but down his spine ran a premonitory thrill. Just suppose that it was Cox, left tackle on the second squad, who but a moment before had replaced the knocked-out tackle on the first. It if was—

He threw off his blanket and dog-trotted hopefully up and down. Yes, it was actually Cox who limped from the stands. And there signaled the coach's gesture which beckoned him. Berkley, to the fray.

Followed a quick sequence of important events, bringing to Berkley the great moment of his life. Recovering a fumble, he found himself, much to his own amazement, running with the coveted pigskin clenched close to his side, and even as he plunged madly, dodging and twisting and all but leaping the combining interference of his opponents, his brain played wildly with the phrase, "First down and Geraldine! First down and Geraldine!"

Summoning his ultimate ounce of energy, he thrust aside one clutching giant after another, pushed blindly on, stumbled, recovered and went down beneath a pile of brawny fighters who shut from his ears the thundering clamor as one-half the stadium went mad in shouting, hat-flinging delirium. First down on the ten-yard line! Berkley! Berkley! Berkley!

The inevitable touchdown which followed was in the nature of an anticlimax, and Berkley, by making it a foregone conclusion, had already won the game. The question with him now was—had it helped him win Geraldine?

That he wouldn't know for many hours seemed probable. For Geraldine had agreed to dine with Captain Sperry. Consequently, when the hero of the afternoon wandered into the garage where Geraldine kept her car he had no expectation of anything beyond a glimpse of the little roadster belonging to her.

Yes, there was her car and—why, surely that familiar little figure was none other than Geraldine herself!

"Philip!" she cried as she caught sight of him. "Isn't it fine Sperry's men won! I heard the newsboys shouting the score. Had such tough luck! Broke an axle and only arrived this moment. 'Spose you didn't even get a look-in. Never mind! I'd hate to marry a football hero—too likely to be spoiled."

Philip stood as a man in a trance. Geraldine had not been present! She didn't know of his wonderful luck! And what had she said about marrying a football hero?

"Geraldine!" he cried.

Geraldine dropped her head, then lifted it bravely. "Philip, dear," she said, "when I saw you coming in the doorway I knew it was you I loved."

Philip, who had escaped the attentions of his classmates by sheer subterfuge, took one look around and saw that the gathering darkness obscured their particular corner of the garage. "My darling," he whispered, drawing her to him, "this is the crowning glory of the biggest day of my life. You loved me before you knew of my little triumph!"

Tucking her slender hand into the crook of his arm, he led her possessively out among the rollicking crowds.

Woman Appeals to Court Against Voodoo

Lynchburg, Va.—Witchcraft and other mysteries which play on the minds of the superstitious are still vogue, according to evidence adduced in the Municipal court by a young colored woman. She claimed a colored man cut her hair and then told her that he had placed the hair under a tree and that the tree was dying and that she would be dead when the tree was dead. These statements frightened the girl and she rushed to court to break the effects of the voodoo. When the case came to trial she withdrew the charge, telling the judge that the hair had been taken from under the tree and inasmuch as the tree would not die her life was no longer in jeopardy.

BOY BLOWN TO SEA RESCUED AND FINED

Found Paddling Around With Seat as an Oar.

Hingham, Mass.—A strange tale of the sea was told in the Second District court by Arthur Bickford, fourteen, of East Boston.

He had been picked up, while being blown out to sea, by a boat which towed him into the Hingham harbor, where he was observed paddling about the bay in a row boat using one of the seats for a paddle.

The police were notified and Patrolman George Berry went to the Yacht club at Crow Point, where Bickford was found aboard the Foster Trainor yacht, Grey Goose, whose lookout had discerned him paddling about the bay.

Before Judge Edward B. Pratt, where he was arraigned on the charge of stealing a row boat, Bickford said the took the boat from the East Boston Yacht club and rowed to Governor's island where he went ashore. Coming back to the boat he discovered that the oars were gone.

In his effort to get back to East Boston the tide carried him down the bay and far out to sea. All the time, he said, he tried to make headway by using a seat.

He stated far down the bay near a lighthouse a power boat came along and offered him a tow and when inside a point of land which he believed was Nantasket they cast him adrift. He then continued on paddling until sighted by the lookout on the Grey Goose.

He was fined $15 and allowed by the court to pay the amount in $2 weekly payments.

Too Poor to Buy Milk; Mother Burns Infant

Los Angeles.—Because she was "ashamed to face the milkman," to whom she owed a three-weeks' bill, Mrs. Josephine Valente, nineteen, burned her eight-month-old son, Dominick, to death in his go-cart, she confessed to the police. Mrs. Valente, held recently on a murder charge, declared her husband, Sabintino, twenty-one, refused to give her money for the baby's milk.

The young mother said she often tried to help by going to work, but could find no job.

"And I couldn't afford to put our boy in a nursery," she explained. "I knew the milkman would leave us no milk," Mrs. Valente related, "and I got to wondering what I would do. So I got a match and threw it into the baby's carriage after I put him to sleep in it."

Valente, employed by a motion picture studio, insisted he had given his wife $9 for groceries one morning. Detective Lieutenant Frank Condaffer said a $375 insurance policy on the baby's life was issued recently.

Budapest Suicides Continue to Mount

Budapest.—During the last 533 of the 1,901 persons who attempted suicide in Budapest succeeded. The majority in each case were women, the average ratio being 143 women to each 100 men. Each year since the war the number of persons who have tried to kill themselves here has been very high. Chief among the reasons for abnormal suicide rate is the impoverishment into which many well-to-do families have fallen.

Boy of 15 Dies in Fight After Being Called Sissy

New York.—Fifteen-year-old John Nolan of Paterson, N. J., was kicked to death in a fight with a boy who called him a sissy for wearing the wrist watch his widowed mother had given him as a graduation present. Louis Torvello, sixteen, was his opponent. Torvello and two boys who sided with him are held on open complaints pending the completion of the police investigation.

Slightly Astray

They say now that an error of 85,000,000 years was made in computing the age of the dinosaur eggs found last year in the Gobi desert, Manchuria, by Dr. Roy Chapman Andrews, of the American Museum of Natural History. While the explorer at first estimated them to be only 10,000,000 years old, other physicists, geologists, and paleontologists employing the latest scientific methods, have now helped Doctor Andrews to make a new estimate of the age of the eggs at about 95,000,000 years.

Need for Many Chemists

American industry today is sorely handicapped by the lack of chemically trained men to fill executive positions in fields where chemical materials and chemical processes daily become more important, but the training given young chemists in our universities does not fit them for this work. There is accordingly a surplus of routine analysts and research workers, according to William Haynes, well-known chemical economist, while there is a shortage of 25,000 chemists equipped to manage plants or branch offices, and to fill financial executive positions.

"Who was it telephoned me all that stuff about keeping it a bird sanctuary?"

"Fred did," she answered. "I suggested it, and got the data out of a magazine. Rather clever, wasn't it? We were dreadfully upset when you bought it. You wouldn't have done so if you hadn't known Douglas personally, because everything, as a rule, went through Fred's hands. We tried everything—threats of violence, attempts to prey on your superstition. Everything failed but the attempt to make you feel that you were doing a noble thing in protecting the birds." She had a musical laugh. "You don't mind my laughing, do you?" she asked of Hanby. "It really was so quaint!"

"Go ahead!" he said grimly. "The laugh was on me then, but there's a useful old proverb about those who laugh last."

"Oh, you're on top now," she said; "and I'm not even asking you to be generous or forgiving. I'm asking you not to be silly and get a dreadful lot of notoriety. Your wife and daughters would hate it. We have lived here without your permission. That was wrong, but it can be adjusted. As God is my witness, we saved you from that dreadful little anarchist Smucker. That's a pretty good score for us. If the case comes to trial—the murder, I mean—I will testify to the fact that Smucker taunted Professor Burton, and that the professor killed him in self-defense."

"I deny it absolutely!" cried Burton. "This thing must be cleared up. I have my career to think of."

"And a most useful one, no doubt," Appleton said politely. "I shall be glad to testify that on the whole you behaved well. I shall assure the court that had I believed you were really the celebrated Professor Burton, I should not have detained you." He turned to Hanby. "We thought the poor man merely believed himself to be the learned professor."

"Lies, lies!" shouted Burton. "I have no man's blood on my hands. I demand that the police be called in immediately!"

"What for?" Appleton asked. "To arrest me for trespass?"

"I am not thinking of trespass. I am thinking of murder."

"What murder?" Appleton asked pleasantly. "In murder cases there is always needed a corpus delicti—a murdered man. Where is he in this case? Can you produce him, professor?"

"Quite the best thing to do," said the woman, "is to let us go away. I have a good many things here, but I could leave tonight. I say tonight, because we don't want to be seen. These people—the professor and that nice-looking boy—have grievances against us, I admit, but in both instances it was their own fault. The boy assaulted a friend and almost killed him."

"Did you, Les?" Junior demanded.

"It was some fellow who hung around the house at night. Celia saw him, and called him a wild faun. Naturally I wasn't going to stand for that, so I laid for him and started something."

"Very jolly of you!" said the woman, smiling. "Wouldn't the yellow papers enjoy writing about it? I think you acted splendidly, but the reporters wouldn't. They make most fearful fun of youth and moonlight and romance. I'm sure Miss Hanby would enjoy it. We'll promise to be gone before daybreak tomorrow. You see, we haven't done any damage. Mr Hanby, what is it to be?"

"I'll have to talk this over in private," he decided.

"We will await your decision," Appleton said, smiling.

"But not here," returned Hanby. "I'm going to lock you up till I know what is to be the outcome." He smiled a little, and looked at the woman. "I'm a little afraid of you. I think you may be the brains of this whole affair. You shall occupy Leslie's cell for a while."

The laughing look died from her face. Hanby had been right in thinking her a dangerous person.

"I won't go!" she cried.

But in the end Appleton persuaded her. His attitude was perfect. He commended Hanby on his decision.

"You are quite justified," he said benignly. "We are admitted trespassers, and have no locus standi. I consider that you are well within your rights. Come, Belle, don't be silly! It will only be for a little while."

Belle, who knew him and his moods better than anyone else, was not deceived, as were the others. The men, watching, thought they saw Appleton serene in the consciousness of having committed no heinous sins. Belle knew that murder was in his heart at that moment.

"Now, Les and Junior," said Hanby, when the doors had been shut on the captured pair, "go down and bring up the wild faun. Stick your guns in his ribs. If he has any sense, he'll come quietly."

"I'll go, too," said Bill Pelham. "I tied those knots."

When they had gone, Burton turned to his cousin.

"Hil," he cried, "you don't think I killed that man?"

"Not for a minute; but you might have a lot of trouble explaining things, all the same. I'm relieved at his death, I'll admit. I didn't tell Dina, or even Bill, but Mrs. Smucker warned me that he had stolen some money from his old father, and had probably bought a gun. He was seen at the Grand Central, where he inquired how to get to Pine Plains. Mrs. Smucker said he had made threats to kill me. That ties up with Appleton's story. No matter what other reasons he had, I believe he did keep Smucker from trying to kill me."

"Do you mean to let them go, then?"

"It will depend on what we get from this thug that Les and Junior are bringing."

• • • • • • •

Jim Delaney had too much sense to try to escape from three armed men. The fortunes of war had changed, and he was already considering the favorable position of one who turns state's evidence. He sat where Hanby directed him. He could see that the owner of the Gray house was not to be trifled with.

"It's enough for you to know," Hanby began, "that Appleton and Belle are shut away in those cells. We know all about them. I'm going to ask you some questions. Lie, if you want to."

"I'm not going to lie, boss," responded Jim eagerly. "That wouldn't do me no good now, would it?"

"None at all, but I don't want to influence you. Bill, take down his evidence, please. Just explain who you are, and why you and that—"

"Luigi," Jim volunteered. "He's a wop from Sicily. Him and me are employed by Appleton. We've been storing the stuff and guarding it." Jim smiled ruefully. "I don't know who give us away, but you certainly came when it did the most harm!"

"Naturally," Hanby commented, wholly ignorant of what the other meant. "I'm giving you the opportunity of telling me all about it in your own way."

"It all began," Jim declared, "when Appleton bought Seymour's booze. This Seymour was a rich man. His wife was from a swell family in the South, and he expected to live here all his life. He had the house on a lease, with the option of purchase, and he meant to buy, see? So he sends home to England for a stock of booze—whisky in barrels, and port in wood, and liqueurs, and champagnes, and everything a man wants. Them guys in England, when they're well fixed, buy wholesale, and they all have cellars and butlers to look after them. This Seymour, he put in enough so he'd never have to buy anything else if he lived to be a hundred. When his kids was drowned and his wife died, he went back home, and, although he was past fifty, he got into his old regiment. Then his three brothers was killed in the war, and he's a lord or something. Money wasn't anything to him. He wanted to get out of this place, and he liked Appleton, so he took Appleton's check for the cellar. What does Appleton do but get Luigi to build a wall across one end of it? Luigi's a mason by trade. Appleton wasn't like me. I thought prohibition was a joke when it come in. I was tending bar down on Third avenue. Appleton had friends in Washington, and they knew booze was out for keeps."

Jim was here permitted to light a cigar, while Bill put down the main incidents in this recital.

"Yes," Jim went on reflectively, "that give Appleton the idea. He knew booze was going to be scarce, so he started to make a place to cache it in till the price was right and he could dispose of it all at one crack. He made new plans of the house, and left out the cellar where the stuff was stored. I guess that fooled you Mr. Hanby."

"It did," Hanby admitted.

"He'll fool anybody," said Jim, who was enjoying the interest aroused by his story. "I'll say he's the slickest bird I've come across. He plans for the year after next—that's the sort of guy he is. He had the lake partly filled in. Then he had some dago laborers fix the stream, build a tunnel in here, and make the place livable. They didn't know what they was doing, and didn't care, so long as they was paid good. Then he put Luigi in as caretaker. You see the cops were after Luigi, and he didn't stand a chance with that build of his. Any dick could 'a' nabbed him any time. Luigi likes to drink and sleep, and this was meat to him."

"What did you do?" Pelham asked.

"I used to shoot the stuff down the stream. I used to get it off the boats from friends, drive up to the upper road, and put the cases under the culvert, so they'd drift down here. Luigi would pile 'em up, so that when the day come he could dump 'em in the stream and they'd drift down to Boyle's farm. I guess we're out of luck. Tonight's the night. Everything and everyone is fixed, and now you bust up the party!"

"How were you going to have taken it away, if there's so much of it?"

"The road is going to be put under repair after dark, and all traffic will detour. That leaves us uninterrupted. We've got forty ten-ton trucks all ready. They'll get busy at the right time, and take out the stuff, which will be down at that lake by Boyle's barn. There won't be a hitch. This is a great fixing game, and I know how to fix the guys that might be in the way. This is big business," said Jim proudly. "Appleton expected to have two hundred thousand bucks tonight."

Jim was a gambler. He shrugged his shoulders. He had lost before.

"Who killed Smucker?" Hanby demanded suddenly.

"Luigi. Served him right. He was trying to croak him, the dirty little rat! It was justifiable homicide, all right. Don't you waste no tears about Smucker. He come here to bump you off. I found him trying to set fire to the thicket, that night when we had that big gale, and the wind was blowing on to your house."

"Let's get this straight," said Hanby, when he had listened to other particulars. "You and Luigi were going to put these case goods in the stream, where they would float down to Boyle's place unseen. At Boyle's the same trucks that are working on the new road would be waiting. These would take the stuff and dispose of it. Is that right?"

"Positively, boss. Everything was fixed but your gang."

"Show me where it is hidden," Hanby said. "I wouldn't try to escape, if I were you. Those boys will shoot."

At the edge of the large clearing, carefully stacked in piles, the searchers found thousands of cases of whisky, brandy, and old wines. Jim explained that there had been exhaustive experiments as to the length of time they would take to float downstream under the road and come to rest in Boyle's lake.

"It's a straightaway trip but for one place," Jim volunteered. "We found they jammed there sometimes, so we greased the boards, and now they ride pretty."

"What about the Seymour stuff under the lumber in the big cellar?" Hanby asked.

"That wasn't to go yet. I think Appleton was going to make a deal with you direct when the time came. He wouldn't have no difficulty in selling that. You can get any price for stuff that is absolutely old and genuine. There's lots of people afraid of getting wood-alcoholized yet."

Jim pointed to the cases all ready for the journey.

"This is all honest-to-goodness stuff," he went on, "but it ain't old, like it used to be, and it don't do a guy any good to lap it up when it's only two years old. I know. I've bin in the saloon business. Appleton trusted me because I'm off the stuff for keeps. Luigi, he drinks the cheapest sort of wine, like they used to make every morning in the red-ink joints in the city. I'll say Appleton was a good picker. I don't yet get just how you butted in."

Hanby did not satisfy the fellow's zeal for knowledge. What followed puzzled Jim very much, but he made no remarks. He labored under the delusion that Leslie was anxious to shoot.

Nor did Luigi understand, but he, too, thought that his salvation lay in readiness to obey. Without pause he, Jim, Pelham, and Junior dumped the cases into the stream. Darkness was coming on when they finished. Jim had told them that by midnight the entire mass would be on Boyle's property, where Boyle and his sons would help to load them on the trucks.

"I can't keep the stuff," Hanby had explained to Burton, "and I want it seized on some one else's property. You can bet Appleton will keep his mouth closed!"

Splendid Fossil of Ancient Sea Terror

The fossiled skeleton of a teleosaurus, a terror of the seas of the Jurassic period, 150,000,000 years ago, is on exhibition at the Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago. The creature, a sea crocodile about ten feet long, comes from Wurttemberg, Germany, and was excavated near there from land which was a sea bottom in prehistoric times, when that part of Europe was covered by water.

The fossil is unusual in that almost every detail of the skeletal structure of the animal is intact and sharply defined in the specimen. Rows of sharp-pointed, vicious-looking teeth in the jaws indicate that the animal probably was carnivorous, and that it undoubtedly preyed upon lesser creatures of the sea. The crocodile was protected by strong plates along its back, which acted as armor. The bones of these plates are preserved in the fossil.

The skull, the short front legs and the longer hind ones and the vertebrae are virtually complete.

Airplane Pilots Make Study of Bird Flights

New light on the height and speed of which birds fly, and upon bird migration, is being thrown by airplane pilots. Joint plans are being developed by bird societies and aeronautical associations to compile systematically such aerial observations of feathered folk.

It seems that birds are rarely sighted by airmen above a height of about 3,000 feet. Not long ago, however, one pilot reported seeing a couple of large birds, which he took to be eagles, at an altitude of more than 12,000 feet. It is believed that some birds, when on migrating flights, attain nearly 20,000 feet. Ornithologists are asking airmen to make special observations as to the speed at which birds fly. In one case, already on record, a pilot cruising at about 100 miles an hour, was approached by a number of swifts. These graceful birds not only overtook the airplane, but outstripped it with ease.

During the war pilots on patrol above the dunes of western Belgium often amused themselves by putting their airplanes against teal and mallard. Both these birds seemed capable of a speed of more than 100 miles an hour.

Can't Talk With Mars

Radio communication with Mars is considered unlikely, in the opinion of E. O. Hurlburt of naval research laboratory, because of atmospheric conditions on the planet and because of certain limitations there, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. The gist of the situation, as he sees it, is that the short waves which we might transmit to penetrate our atmosphere, if they did reach Mars, would probably find no receiver for them, since the Martians, if they have radio sets, very likely have gone in for those using long waves.

Ignored Stone Real Relic

Occupying an obscure position near the footpath of the Crail-Fifeness road, in Scotland, since 1851, a standing stone has just been found to be a relic dating back to at least the Eleventh century. It is part of the old Celtic church near Crail, and the inspector of ancient monuments has had it removed to a prominent place in Victoria Gardens in Crail.

In Ton Litter Contest

Earl Anderson, a member of the Happy Corner 4-H Club, has achieved his goal in the ton-litter pig contest which he entered in the spring, according to A. D. Collette of Warren, county club leader, who visited in the city the fore part of the week.

Earl's eleven Duroc-Jersey pigs, constituting the litter, now weigh 2200 pounds, with about 30 days remaining before the close of the contest. The animals are said to be making very fine progress, and Mr. Collette is confident that by the end of the 180-day feeding period the litter will weigh close to 2800 pounds.

Earl, who is the first Marshall county youth to achieve this goal in a similar contest, is to be congratulated upon his success. —Stephen Messenger.

New Prizes For 4-H Clubs

Opportunity to achieve distinction and win a free trip to the National Dairy Exposition at St. Louis, Mo., this fall is offered to members of Minnesota 4-H dairy clubs in the form of an essay contest sponsored by the Dairy and Ice Cream Machinery and Supplies association, New York City. The subject of the essay will be to tell what happens to milk in its various forms and products between the farm and the consumer's table.

T. A. Erickson, state 4-H club leader, University Farm, St. Paul, is in charge of the contest in this state and is also chairman of the 4-H Advisory Committee of the National Dairy Exposition which is diretting the national contest. Practically every Minnesota county will be represented in the state contest, he says. The essays are due September 15 and the winner will receive a free trip to the dairy show at St. Louis, where his or her essay will be entered against those from other states in competition for a gold watch.

Before writing their essays, contestants will visit a number of local milk processing plants, studying the handling, processing and manufacturing methods employed. Besides discussing the operations seen, the essays must tell how milk processing and manufacturing plants help the producer. Full details on the contest may be had from county agents or by writing Mr. Erickson.

Notice for Bids

Sealed bids will be received upto 5 o'clock p. m. of Sept. 10th, for three cords of white poplar wood that was cut and split last winter. The wood is to be sawed into stove lengths and to be delivered into the basement of the postoffice at Holt, Minn., as soon as possible.

Ask Patrol For Driving Tips

Members of the new State Highway patrol will be at the Minnesota State Fair next week, ready to answer questions on traffic laws and give tips on safe driving. They will be found at the Highway booth in the State exhibits building. Motorcycles and other equipment used by the traffic officers will also be on display.

The work of the new patrol will be largely educational, as it is the belief of C. M. Babcock, commissioner of highways, and Earle Brown, chief of the state patrol, that more accidents are due to ignorance of traffic rules that to wilful recklessness. For this reason members of the patrol will be assigned to duty at the fair, where they can talk to more people in one week than they can at any other place.

Exhibits of state departments will be grouped, as in the past, in one building. The state exhibits building is a modern, well lighted structure north of the women's building. The Highwa department's minature road, which has attracted much attention at previous fairs, has been reconstructed and several new features incorporated.

The institutions under the State Board of Control will be prominent in the building. The State prison will show farm machinery and binder twine and other institutions will have a wide variety of articles made by the inmates.

The State Department of Agriculture, Dairy and Food, The State Railroad and Warehouse Commission, the mineral and timber departments of the State Auditor's office, the State University agricultural department, the Board of Health, Historical society, Department of education, Drainage department, and the automobile license division of the Secretary of State's office will also have exhibits.

The State Game and Fish and Forestry departments will have a separate building near the State Exhibits building.

Mr. and Mrs. Theo. Ness, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Ness, Mr. and Mrs. Hans Ness and Mr. and Mrs. Olaf Ness and their children spent Sunday at Lake of the Woods.

While going up there Olaf Ness had one of the front fenders torn off his car when he hit a Ford coming off a cross-road in a corn field. No one was hurt.

Ducks Nest in Trees

Whistlers, hooded mergansers and wood ducks build their nests in trees, selecting a hollow limb, or a deep hole in the trunk. Often the trees are considerable distance from the water. On several occasions wild geese were known to nest in trees.

Holstein-Friesians In The United States Sixty Years

Peterboro, N. Y., August 24.—Sixty years ago the first pure-bred Holstein-Friesian calf in America was born on the farm of Merritt Smith Miller here. Today there are more than 1,000,000 head of pure-bred Holstein-Friesians in this country.

On August 17 Frank O. Lowden, former governor of Illinois and president of the American Holstein-Friesian association, delivered the principal address at the unveiling of a tablet on the Gerritt Smith Miller farm, a monument to the beginning of this great branch of the American industry. Miller visited Holland in search of stock for his farm and brought back the nucleus of the first permanent Holstein-Friesian herd in America.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Aakre and daughter Agnes, Mr. and Mrs. Palmer Udstrand and daughters Marceline and Lucille, Mr. and Mrs. Markestad and family, Mr. and Mrs. E. Johnson and daughter Pearl, Mrs. C. O. Saastad and Mrs. Phillips gathered at the M. Udstrand home on Sunday to help Mr. Udstrand celebrate his 71st birthday and little Marceline celebrate her 4th birthday.

Hjalmer Udstrand motored up from Milwaukee. Wisconsin to spend the forepart of last week at his home here.

N. S. A. News

Rufus J. Christgau, Austin, Minnesota, has been appointed to succeed D. H. LaVoi as assistant animal husbandman and director of athletics at the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookstrn, according to an announcement made by Superintendent A. A. Dowell.

Mr. Christgau graduated from the Central School of Agriculture in 1920 and from the College of Agriculture at University Farm, St. Paul, in 1925. While attending College, where he specialized in Agricultural Economics and Animal Husbandry, Mr. Christgau was a member of the University of Minnesota football and basketball squads and Captain of the baseball team. After graduation, he devoted one year to part time graduate work and served as Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at University Farm.

During the past two years he has taught in the St. Peter High School and coached all branches of athletics. Last year the St. Peter High School basketball team won the championship of their district, while the football squad defeated the strong Mankato team for the first time in years.

Mr. Christgau, brother of Congressman Victor Chrisgau, of Austin, comes to the Northwest School admirably equipped by training and experience to assume his new duties. Accompanied by his wife and daughter, he will join the Northwest School family the latter part of September.

PRODUCTION: An article recently published gave the account of a man who paid for a farm without having any plow land on it. It was too stony to plow, except a few acres for garden. It gave pasture and that was all. The owner kept good cows and bought all the grain feed for them and bought hay stumpage on adjoining land. The report was that he got to be well off. It is simply an extreme example of what can be done with good cows.

MANUFACTURING: The dairy industry of the Northwest began with the tin pan and dash churn and stone jar, with all the butter made on the farms, and nearly all consumed there. Even in those days there was discussion on how to make good butter. In 1878 the Minnesota State Dairymen's Association was organized—51 years ago. The first co operative creameries were organized in 1889-1890—forty years ago. Land O' Lakes Creameries was organizad in 1921—eight years ago. There has been steady progress in the manufacture of butter.

Wasp Waistline Is Coming Back

Milady to Face Weeks of Starvation at Command of Fashion.

Paris.—Just a year ago any woman who looked at a picture of her mother in pinching whalebones would have laughed outright, but the wasp waistline of mother's younger days is back, although the whalebones are missing.

Slimness is the last word from the Rue de la Paix. The waist must be wasplike as in the late nineties. In those days a generous application of whalebone brought the desired effect; today it is obtained by scientific and systematic starvation.

It is no longer considered smart to wear weight or have ample lines. The newest dresses have high waist lines and the waists are indicated by pulling as tight as possible a knotted belt. After many seasons of loose hips the effect is startling, and a very small proportion of women can attain the mode without real suffering.

Days of Starvation.

It takes days of starvation, weeks of point rolling, and months of steam baths to bring back the waistlines to wasplike proportions. The pinch will certainly be felt in the stomach, but the style czars are adamant and insist that by winter the waists around which two hands could touch will be back after an absence of thirty years.

The waistlines started to crawl up last spring, and by now they are really high. If they go much farther they will be above the normal height of the supposed waist.

That is not the only news from the famous thoroughfare which runs off the Place Vendome. The Rue de la Paix wants women in red, and everything seems to be based on the idea that women must be seen as well as heard.

Never has there been such a run on red dyes. Greens and yellows, which started the season well, have disappeared from the skyline. Only reds are seen where smart woman gather.

Bathing Suits Extravagant.

There are many other extravagant ideas born with hot weather. Such, for example, as plaited straw sunshades, silk sockettes to protect the foot in the shoe and still leave the limb bare to the cooling winds. Women's bathing garb has undergone a novel change.

Bathing suits are extravagant this summer. They are used to tell the world your preference for blonde or brunette gentlemen. There are many daring costumes being worn at Deauville which carry embroidered adornment in the form of flaming arrows piercing red hearts, accompanied by embroidered mottoes, large or small, depending upon how far the message is to carry.

Some of the mottoes say "Yours till death," or "He's my man," or "A life on the ocean wave." There is one at Deauville which tells a lot in a few words, "I can swim, thank you."

Poetry Suggested as Cure for Marital Woes

Grand Rapids, Mich.—If your husband beats you, try poetry; some of the sentimentality which surged through his breast years ago may still linger there.

The plan has worked in at least one instance, according to Miss Alice Yonkmen, chief of the family service bureau, whose job it is to untangle family difficulties. In this case the worker assigned to the case discovered that the husband often cut poems from papers and magazines. She suggested that he try writing poems to his wife.

Pleased with the idea, he tried it and now, says Miss Yonkmen, he is falling romantically in love with his wife again.

Fame, Fortune Awaits Master of Television

Washington.—"Some bright young man with a fundamental knowledge of radio is going to stumble across the correct television principle, and, if he exploits his discovery or invention properly, he is going to earn both fame and fortune," predicts J. E. Smith, president of the National Radio institute.

Like all other industries, television officials are looking for "that chap in torn trousers, faded tie, and unshaven face who will give us the answer to the television problem. And you can be sure we are overlooking no bets! We'll make it well worth his while," Smith reports.

Rainbow Trout Travels Many Miles in 60 Days

Manistee, Mich.—A rainbow trout 25 inches long, tagged on April 24, 1929, and released near here by the conservation department, has been captured by a Kenosha (Wis.) fisherman. The fish in the 60 days had traveled at least 140 miles, if it crossed the lake in a straight line, and nearer 500 if it followed the shore line.

U. S. Girls Use Mirrors to See Pope; Start Fad

Rome.—A novel expedient used by a group of American girls better to see the ecclesiastical procession caused great interest to the throngs in the square.

Holding the mirrors of their vanity cases high above their heads, they turned their backs upon the scene and were thus able to get a complete view over the heads of the crowds.

The fad was quickly taken up by others, and soon the whole square flashed and twinkled with the gleams of thousands of mirrors in the afternoon sunlight.

St. Louis Plans Airport by Straightening River

St. Louis, Mo.—By straightening the Mississippi river for a distance of five miles, St. Louis can secure a river front park of 4,000 acres with an airport at the very doors of the downtown business section, a bathing beach, golf course, harbor for small boats and a two-and-a-half-mile riverside drive, according to E. J. Russell, chairman of the city plan commission.

PRIMEVAL FORESTS BEING PRESERVED BY GOVERNMENT

Protected Areas Destined to Encourage Research in Wilderness Conditions.

Syracuse, N. Y.—Setting aside wilderness areas is now a current problem with the federal government. One reason why it is a problem is because there are comparatively few suitable primeval forests left, says the New York State college of forestry, at Syracuse university.

The Yellowstone National park was established in 1872, but the principal reasons were its rare scenic features and not particularly its virgin forests. New York state probably was the first to set aside an extensive area of wild land to be kept forever wild because it was wild. This occurred in 1885, when the forest preserve was established, but today there are additional reasons for saving wilderness areas. The romantic wild land idea still persists, but other important considerations are now necessary.

The wilderness areas, being set aside today for the forest service, are as much for research as for the preservation of the primeval forest itself. It is intended that these areas will preserve soil conditions and plant and animal species of great potential value to science which are incapable of surviving under modification caused by the invasion of man and his institutions.

These areas will preserve the conditions under which the early development of the nation took place and which influence the character of our national ideals, traditions and modes of life. The areas will not be smaller than 1,000 acres, which is small enough. Primitive conditions of travel, habitation, subsistence and environment will be maintained and a close guard will be kept against the unnecessary invasion of roads, resorts, summer homes, communities and other forms of use incompatible with the major purpose.

Wilderness preservation illustrates the rapid changes that have taken place. Daniel Boone and his contemporaries would have questioned the sanity of any person suggesting setting aside wilderness areas in order that such places might not disappear, but to be able to walk through a primeval forest is growing to be a rare privilege and it is a source of satisfaction to know that some of the specimens of our former forest grandeur will be preserved.

"But these other two men?" Burton asked anxiously.

"They will find that they have an opportunity to get away. It's clouding over for rain. I'm willing to match my giant huckleberry hawk against your fighting fuchsia moth that we shall never see Jim or Luigi again!"

Jim and Luigi could hardly believe their eyes when they saw that the men with automatics had become neglectful. The two miscreants merged into the shadows, and faded from sight by some secret and unknown path.

There remained Appleton and his lady. Their problem was not so simple. Appleton must be held.

When the cell door was unlocked, the lady was voluble and angry. When Appleton's door was flung open, he lay on the floor.

"You've killed him!" she said, and flung herself at his side.

There was no doubt that she loved him. Presently he sat up and smiled at her. His face was white.

"My heart is not strong," he admitted. "Men with high color often owe it less to good health than to heart trouble. I have had much to worry me today. With your permission, I will get some medicine before we resume our conference."

Appleton seemed shrunken and feeble. It was the woman who supported him. Slowly they walked ahead of their captors toward the large living room. Appleton was courteous to the last.

"It is your house," he said, smiling feebly. "After you, gentlemen!"

Burton was the last to enter. When he was well in the room, the door was suddenly shut and locked behind him.

Five men stared at one another helplessly. The sick man had tricked them.

CHAPTER XI

It was ten minutes before they had smashed the door down. Outside there was nothing but darkness and pelting torrents of rain. With flashlights they searched the sanctuary until, about midnight, torn by thorn spikes and drenched to the skin, they had to confess that they were beaten. Appleton and his lady had escaped.

The five made their way to the wire edge of the bird sanctuary and came, exhausted, to the Gray house. Dina, Cella, and Florence Burton were waiting. Their alarm would have been greater had not Hanby left a note, saying that he and Bill and Junior were going on a long hiking trip.

"Here," said Hanby dramatically, breaking in on them, "are the lost ones! Florence, here is your Tom. Cella, behold the captor of the wild faun. I haven't a moment for explanations," he added. "Junior and I have to go out again." He turned to his son. "Get your car around to the front door as soon as you can."

Hurriedly he picked up the telephone and called the local chief of police, whom he had met in the Red Chapin murder affair.

"Mr. Hanby talking," he began. "I've just come in. I met a whole train of big trucks passing along south. I wouldn't be surprised if they were running a cargo of booze. I'd look into it, if I were you."

He hung up the instrument.

"I did that," he explained to his family, "because I want the seizure made somewhere not on my property. Boyle happens to be one of the tenants whose repairs Appleton has always supervised."

"What seizure?" Dina cried.

"Bill will have to tell you all about it."

Hanby picked up the telephone instrument that connected with the garage, the stables, and the gardeners' quarters. The listeners heard him give what seemed an extraordinary order. He instructed the three men in the stables to ride around the bird sanctuary until he ordered them to cease patrolling, and to hold any trespassers who tried to break away from it.

"Bill will explain," he said. "We'll be back in half an hour."

It was almost an hour before he came in.

"We've been checking up things," he said. "Now for something to eat!"

Again he took up the local telephone. This time he instructed a chauffeur to tell the men riding about the bird sanctuary that their task was done.

By this time Dina knew the whole story. She was particularly incensed at the part played by Appleton's companion, the lady with the pleasing voice.

"You don't mean to say those dreadful people have escaped?"

"Impossible!" Pelham cried. "How do you know?"

"Some three hours ago," Hanby told them, "Doctor Grant was coming from a case, and saw a plump gentleman and a good looking woman at our upper entrance gates. They were soaked through—from the rain, he supposed—and had a reasonable story to tell. Their motor had stalled somewhere, and they were on their way to get gas. Doctor Grant believed it, and took them as far as Stanfordville, where they bought a five gallon can and hired a car to take them back to their machine. The driver was told to go to the nearest railroad station. He did so, and received good pay and the can of gas. They took the ten thirty-five train to New York. I don't have to be a house detective or a Yale sophomore to guess who that drenched couple was."

"How did they get out of the sanctuary and make the upper road?"

"They went up the stream. We know there's a clear way, because Jim used to float the cases down. While we were losing our flesh and clothes in that d—d thicket, they were wading in three feet of water to safety. Another thing—while they delayed us, the crowd at Boyle's made its getaway. Such a night as this—foggy, rainy, and moonless—was a godsend to them. The tracks were plain enough in Boyle's yard when we got there, but the rain has washed all marks from the paved roads."

"Then it won't be easy to trace them?" the professor hazarded.

"It won't be hard to trace forty ten-ton trucks making a convoy for Manhattan. They can't make more than twenty-five miles an hour, at the outside. They'll get them, and they'll get Appleton, too."

Here the telephone rang sharply. It was the local chief of police. He was angry and disappointed. He informed Hanby that, with his own men and prohibition enforcement officials, he had overtaken, held up, and searched a fleet of big trucks proceeding southward. They were laden only with building material, which had been carefully examined. In every instance they were driven by men whose alibis were genuine.

"Wow!" said Hanby, hanging up. "That was a hot one! It certainly proves that the amateur detective business is not as simple as it seems. What Appleton or Jim did was to alter the destination of the booze ships. Instead of going toward Manhattan, they went into hiding."

Dina sensed deep depression in him. Her husband was a man who always played to win.

"Never mind!" she said, putting her arm about his shoulders, affectionately. "I'm proud of you all. You've given a husband back to Florence, and but for you I might have lost my son-in-law." She smiled at Leslie and Cella. "You've cleared up the great mystery!"

"Something is lost in every victory," Pelham reminded him.

Again the telephone disturbed them. Hanby, answering, raised his right hand, enjoining silence and attention.

"Long distance," he whispered. "Listen, all of you!"

They crowded about the instrument. A distant central informed some one as yet unknown that here was his party.

"This is M. Hanby speaking," said the man at the instrument.

There floated out into the room the very clear articulation of Mr. Appleton.

"We wish to thank you," said Appleton, "for our opportunity to escape. Everything turned out as we desired. Jim reports the perfect success of his operations. Mrs. Appleton and I are now in New York. She was very much attracted by your personality. We both feel that we owe a great deal to you. Fortunately we can repay."

Hanby's face turned red. It infuriated him to have Appleton jeering at him over the long distance. He was commencing to tell Mr. Appleton what he thought of him when Dina tapped him on the arm.

"Listen!" she commanded.

"I am not lying when I say we can repay," Mr. Appleton remarked, when Hanby's recriminations were cut short. "Oh, dear me, no! As you will not see any of us again. I bequeath to you the contents of your own cellar. Even the law cannot take it away from you!"

[THE END]

"Jocko" Something of a Freak of Nature

A putty nose and a tail a yard long are among the attractions possessed by a monkey newly placed in the famous London zoo. It comes from the African Gold coast. These monkeys have weak circulations in their tails, for the blood has to be pumped so far by the heart. A touch of cold weather, and the tail wilts like a dahlia in a frost. After stormy blasts in the bay of Biscay the average length of the decoration when the creature reaches this country is from six inches to a foot. Even if the tail is still all there, it has been blighted and fades away in the zoo.

Many putty-nosed monkeys eat their cold-storaged tails. They are quite given to this habit until the zoo uses a certain red ointment, which spoils the flavor.

The new putty-nose was brought to England in wonderful condition by the donor, a Mr. Woodward, who is a laboratory expert at the Medical Research institute at Sekondi, where the yellow fever scourge is tackled.—London Times.

Public Fairly Warned

A warning to the public to keep off the streets while a young woman was taking her driver's test appeared recently in a paper of Vetseraas, Sweden. The advertisement read: "The public is requested to leave the streets today between 11:30 and 12:30. Margit is getting her driver's license." The notice was signed with the name and address of Margit's proud parents.

GIRL PLAYS CUPID AND EARNS $2.50

Finds Occupation Not Remunerative in Paris.

Paris.—In spite of the hectic, hard-boiled kind of life that Paris is pictured as living, romance is not altogether dead in the city on the banks of the Seine.

Some one who can prove this is a certain young American girl. She isn't the heroine of the story. Instead, she played the part of cupid.

In recounting the affair the French newspapers refer to her as Miss X. She arrived in Paris with no clear idea of what she could do, until some one suggested she become a guide for select young ladies. Now guides for young ladies select and otherwise are as numerous as the fishes in the ocean; the idea seemed good to her.

The girl inserted an advertisement in English in the French and English language newspapers in Paris and sat down to wait for answers. One came. It was from an automobile mechanic in New York.

"Dear Miss," he wrote: "I don't want to be guided about Paris, but there is a girl I met over there in Paris towards the end of the war that I should like to know about now. She was so beautiful her face haunts me still—"

He couldn't remember her name, but he had her last address. He recalled, too, that she played the violin. The girl went to the address indicated in the Avenue Jean Jaures, traced the little French sweetheart of the American doughboy, and hurried back to write a letter to him to tell him so.

More letters passed and in one of them the boy in New York asked Miss X to propose for him, which she did. A few weeks later mademoiselle and her mother sailed for New York. And still later came a final letter for Miss X. It contained a check from the bridegroom for two dollars and a half.

Since even people who act cupid must live on something, the American girl is now back home.

Build Dugout on Rich Lot; Live on in Luxury

San Francisco.—Habits of "dug-out" dwelling in France proved an inspiration to Frank Schroeder and Frank Madero, who a year ago constructed a bit of "front line trench" in the heart of San Francisco's business district. The men were "broke" and the fact that the vacant lot they chose was valued at $100,000 didn't matter to the veterans, who sought assurance of a regular place to live.

Among other things the pair made the lot, formerly an unsightly place, a flower garden and repository of beautiful shrubbery. Because of the improved appearance no one objected. As the weeks sped by the cave improved in appearance. Flowers and shrubs concealed most of it, and enlargements were made. Telephone service was installed about eight months ago, and with prosperity came a radio and other comforts of home.

Schroeder and Madero boast of being the only "cavemen in San Francisco," as well as possessing the distinction of having "squatted" on $100,000 worth of property and gotten away with it.

Family Tombstones Sold by Former Aristocrat

Moscow.—The artistic gravestones on the tombs of her parents are helping support a former aristocrat now reduced to beggary.

Lady Maria Skaratina-Demskaya was once among the most brilliant figures in the imperial court at St. Petersburg. Now she is a familiar figure on the streets of Moscow—an old, sick woman who begs kopecks from passersby.

Recently, when it was announced that a monastery where her family tombs are located would be razed, she reclaimed the sculptured gravestones over her father's and mother's tombs and sold them.

10,000,000 Candle Power Leads Flyers to El Paso

El Paso, Tex.—Visible between 100 and 150 miles, the 10,000,000 candle power light atop Mount Franklin near here, guides aviators nightly over Texan, Mexican and New Mexican wastes to El Paso. Sixteen thousand pounds of material, moved up the rough mountain side by man power, were used in making the 50 foot tower.

Born Without Palate; Given One by Surgery

Memphis, Tenn.—Modern surgery has successfully provided seven-year-old Inez Carter with her first palate.

Inez managed to get along after a fashion without that appendage in the roof of her mouth, but her parents in Moorhead, Miss., noticed she suffered some discomfort and failed to grow normally.

Surgeons in a hospital here grafted a brand new palate for Inez from her right arm. The skin was partly severed and attached to the roof of her mouth. After that she merely waited with her right arm bound across her mouth, until a new palate formed.

ESKIMO BOYS FLEE TO ESCAPE DISEASE

Ends Experiment With White Civilization.

Toronto.—Ben and Sam, two Eskimo boys on whom the hopes of their race had been pinned in an experiment with the civilization of the white man, are fleeing for their lives back to the safety of the Arctic wastes. Not from the roar of the cities are they fleeing, nor from the white man's learning, but from a mightier agency—disease. The experiment has failed.

Two years ago an Eskimo chieftain, far up in the silent Arctic, asked the head of the missionaries to send his son to the unknown lands to the south to learn the ways of the white man. "My people haven't a chance unless they are able to meet the white man on his own ground," he said.

Attend White Man's School.

And so nine-year-old Ben, son of Chief John Ell, head of the Southampton Island Eskimos, accompanied by his friend of the same age, Sam Pudbutt, of Lake Harbor, Baffin Land, were handed over to the headmaster of the Lakefield Preparatory school, near Peterboro. They had been brought down from the North by Rev. F. H. Gibbs, a returning missionary.

"It is of the utmost importance that these boys should be considered in every way on the basis of white men," were the instructions of Venerable A. L. Fleming, archdeacon of the Arctic.

Ben and Sam knew no English, but they were good-natured, good sports and intelligent. They were unanimously acclaimed as general favorites by their new white playmates.

But Ben and Sam were forced to relinquish their studies to face an ordeal of sickness, from which they barely escaped with their lives. After influenza they took pneumonia, measles, tonsilitis and underwent operations for mastoids and adenoids.

It had been pronounced that for them to remain here means only one thing—death.

Sail for Arctic Wastes.

So Ben and Sam sailed from Montreal on a Hudson Bay company's icebreaker, the Nascopie. They will be taken back by returning missionaries. They do not want to go back to the land of the midnight sun, and the reason they expressed was just "Baffin' Lan' too code."

"This experiment has been thoroughly satisfactory from one point of view," declared Ven. A. L. Fleming, who bore the responsibility and expense of the enterprise. "It has shown that the Eskimo is in no way inferior to the white man."

The archdeacon said the Eskimo was an intelligent but undeveloped race. The way Ben and Sam picked up the white man's language and customs in such a short time was remarkable. "I wish white men could learn Eskimo as quickly as these two picked up English," said the archdeacon.

Surgeon Gives His Own Blood to Save Friend

St. Paul.—The story of how a surgeon performed an emergency operation on an old friend, gave the patient a transfusion of his own blood and then hurried away to perform another operation was revealed here by attendants of a St. Paul hospital.

The patient, J. M. Riegel, widely-known northwest newspaper man, underwent an operation for the removal of a kidney. As he lay on the operating table it was seen that he needed a transfusion; both a nurse and an anesthetist, promptly gave some of their blood.

Reigel was taken to his room where his condition was found to be growing steadily weaker. Close friends and relatives of the patient gathered at the door, eager to give him some of their blood.

But with only moments to spare the physician, whose name was not revealed, refused to take the time necessary for tests, but bared his own arm and gave the patient some of his own blood.

The surgeon then hurried back to the operating room to complete the day's work, which included another major operation. Shortly after the transfusion Reigel began a steady improvement.

Find Cache of Tear Gas Buried in Berlin Suburb

Berlin.—Residents of the fashionable west end suburb of Wilmersdorf were thrown into a panic last night when an extensive cache of poison gas was discovered in the heart of their district, buried only a few inches under the surface of the streets.

Workers found layers of small glass bottles under the surface. Not knowing the contents, they broke a few. Several were so severely poisoned they were taken to hospitals.

The police discovered the cache was located on the site of a war-time tear-gas factory and that 100,000 bottles of the gas were buried there when the production of the poison was abandoned.

Lightning Empties Well

Indianapolis.—Police Sergt. George R. Liese believes that a flash of lightning that struck his house evaporated 95 barrels of water in his cistern. Liese discovered the cistern was dry and found no leaks in the concrete.

FINDS HAPPINESS IN SHARING RICHES

Wealthy Man Cuts Down to Moderate Means.

St. Louis, Mo.—Giving away a fortune has provided happiness in the declining years of life for Robert S. Brookings, of this city. Thirty-three years ago Mr. Brookings was a wealthy man. Today he has only a moderate income—because he believes a man can enjoy money more by spending it wisely than by hoarding it.

Mr. Brookings is now seventy-nine years old.

The philanthropist began his business career as a shipping clerk at a salary of $25 a month, which was just enough to pay for his room and board. He was promoted time after time until he was high in the employ of a large manufacturing business operated by Samuel Cupples, in St. Louis.

Just 33 years ago Mr. Brookings and Mr. Cupples held one of the strangest conferences in history—the former asking his employer just how was the best way of getting rid of all his money except what he would need to support himself.

The ultimate result of that conference was that Mr. Brookings has organized three institutions for study and research in problems of government, developed a tottering little college into an institution of world-wide fame, Washington university, and devoted much of his time and money to patriotic service for his country. There are hundreds upon hundreds of homes in St. Louis today which are more luxurious than his. But he is happy!

Says Garden of Eden Was in South Africa

New York.—The cradle of mankind, the spot where man came into being as a new species and from which he spread throughout the world, can now be placed with fair assurance in South Africa, it was announced recently by Alonzo W. Pond, assistant curator of Logan museum, Beloit, Wis., who returned on the French liner De Grasse from an extensive exploration of prehistoric sites in Algeria.

Pond brought back skeletons and parts of skeletons of 13 individuals, two of whom he is convinced lived more than 80,000 years ago and 6,000 flint and bone implements which he collected from the 47 prehistoric habitations which he excavated. Beside these he found charred fruits which may furnish information as to the character of the vegetation in North Africa 20 to 25 centuries ago.

The wealth of prehistoric material which he found almost wherever he searched in the Saraha strengthened his belief that the scene of the actual "Garden of Eden" might be found in Africa and his investigations just concluded provided much additional evidence. Included in Pond's investigations was a detailed study of the routes which man has followed in his migrations.

Medal for Aid to Blind Given Vienna Doctor

New York.—The Leslie Dana gold medal for 1929, awarded in recognition of "the most outstanding achievement in the prevention of blindness and the conservation of vision," will be presented to Dr. Ernest Fuchs, of Vienna, at the International Ophthalmological congress in Amsterdam, on September 10. This will be the first time that any other than an American is given this honor, Lewis H. Carris, managing director of the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness said in announcing the award.

"Doctor Fuchs charted the way for all prevention of blindness work accomplished throughout the world in the last 45 years," said Mr. Carris. "He did this when he won the prize at the Fifth International Congress for Hygiene at The Hague in 1884 with his essay on 'The Causes and Prevention of Blindness.'"

Sea Returns $300,000

Ventura, Calif.—A trunk containing $300,000 worth of negotiable securities was washed up by the sea here. The papers were made out to Bartlett Heard and his father, Dwight B. Heard of Phoenix, Ariz., newspaper publisher, who died last March.

Bakersfield, Calif.—For eight years Mrs. Dora Wilson has been a charity worker here. During that time she has baked 140,460 cookies. She intends to keep on baking.

Veteran Missing 14 Years Finds Wife Wed

Pavia, Italy.—Luigi Rossi, a mechanician, who was supposed to have given his life for Italy amid the fiercest fighting in the battle of Asiago highlands in 1915, returned to his birthplace recently to find his wife married again and the mother of three children.

Signor Rossi, upon his arrival, was received as one returned from the dead. He said that the Austrians had captured him in a battle 14 years ago and that he had been living in the wildest spot in Bessarabia since the war.

He decided to permit his wife to decide what she is going to do about it.

Note of Thankfulness

Just a Bit Premature

As the circus performance was drawing to a close the two girls looked uneasily at the crowds around them, eyed the distant tent opening, and wondered how they would ever get there. Seeing no other exit possible, they finally pushed and squirmed their way "turtle fashion" out into the open.

Not knowing where to go for the trolley car, they followed the crowds and trusted to luck that they would get there.

Just as they reached the sidewalk a circus team stalled and though the driver yelled and the horses pushed, they pulled dangerously near the walk, and the crowd with one impulse moved backward. The girls divided their time praying for the team to depart and mourning over their trampled toes.

Finally, though, the girls were permitted to cross the road. "Thank goodness," said one, "We don't have to go through that again."

Her friend looked at her for a moment and then mournfully replied, "I've just remembered that I left my coat on the back of the circus seat."—Springfield Union.

Would Ruin Him

Two young prospective aviators were discussing the subject of aviation, and a certain famous flyer, when the smaller, age eight, remarked to the other:

"What if the tail of the plane would get caught as he started up; it would cut a gash in his head, wouldn't it?"

His brother answered: "Yes, it would just mash him down and break his back."

And the little fellow said: "Yes, it would break his general cord."

The Worse Way

Lyle Womak, who sued his wife, Ruth Elder, for divorce on the ground of cruelty and coldness, has joined the Byrd expedition to the pole.

"It will be cold in the Antarctic," he said to a Panama correspondent, "but it won't be as cold as Ruth."

Then in allusion to his divorce he added bitterly:

"In the old days marital problems used to be solved—now they're dissolved."

She Misunderstood Him

Adam—Wonderful night, a beautiful girl—what a combination.

Eve—Goodness! Is that showing?

STATE FAIR HAS THRILL PROGRAM

Spectacular Entertainment Features Recruited from Four Corners of the Globe.

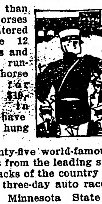
THE most gigantic entertainment program in the history of the Northwest, costing more than $100,000.00, will be presented at the coming Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, Twin Cities, August 31 to September 77, announces Cal Sivright, vice president and general manager of the fair.

Feature attractions recruited from the four corners of the globe will provide thrills galore for fair visitors. It will be a program that will be varied enough to please the most exacting visitor. It will include spectacular vaudeville attractions from the leading circuses and theatrical circuits of the country, horse races, auto races, band concerts by famous bands, captive observation balloons, aviation thrillers, a stupendous fire-works spectacle, a big Evening Horse Show, a midway with 25 rides and shows, and a thousand and one other features, all of which spell a good time.

The California Poppies, featuring 12 dancing girls, in amazing contortion feats on a great Spider's Web of glittering silver high in the air, a new sensation in the amusement world, will be one of the dozen big headliners on the vaudeville program to be presented in front of the grandstand.

Another spectacular feature will be Christiansen's Ten Creamoline Stallions, under the personal direction of Jorgen M. Christiansen producer of equestrian numbers for the leading circuses of the world for many seasons.

Bee Starr, famous aerialist acrobat, ranked by many as a greater star than Lillian Leitzel, will perform all kinds of difficult gyrations while spinning on the end of a rope suspended from a pole 60 feet above the ground. Other thrillers: Francis trio, clown acrobats; the Three Flying Sullys, novelty artists on high bars and trampoline; the six O'Rellys, balancing artists; the Barcardie trio, knockabout clowns; the Six Galenos, premier teeter-board performers; Christopher and Columbus, clowning horizontal bar artists; the Van De Velde troupe; and Krazy Kar, a trick car that goes through all kinds of laugh-producing antics.



More than 200 horses are entered in the 12 harness and nine running horse races for which $10,000.00 in purses have been hung up.

Twenty-five world-famous auto race drivers from the leading speedway and dirt tracks of the country will compete in the three-day auto race program.

The Minnesota State Fair High School band of 225-pieces, the largest band ever booked by the fair management, will give daily concerts.

A captive observation balloon of the type used by the American Army during the world war will be another thriller.

The Evening Horse Show will be staged five nights, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. Prizes totaling $12,110.00 will be paid out to owners of winning horses.

"The Last Days of Pompeii", the greatest fireworks spectacle in fair history, will be presented as the feature of the evening show in front of the grandstand.

Thrilling Races at State Fair

DARING auto racers, the world's fastest race horses, the pick of America's open-air circus acts, gorgeous fireworks, forty-four great Midway Shows, the Minnesota High-School Band of 225 pieces, and hosts of other attractions will head the entertainment program of the great Minnesota State Fair and Northwest Livestock Show, Twin Cities, from Aug. 31 to Sept. 7.

Twenty-five of the world's champion auto race drivers will try for new records. "The Last Days of Pompeii", the most wonderful fireworks spectacle ever engaged by the State Fair, will be staged nightly.

Four days of the fastest horse racing ever seen in the Northwest will mark the afternoon programs, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday.

Fifteen thrilling circus acts, headed by "The California Poppies"; a dozen big bands; and a score of other mammoth attractions make up a bill never equalled at any former Fair, held anywhere in the world.

Sale of School and Other State Lands.

State of Minnesota,
State Auditor's Office,
St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 21, 1929

Notice is hereby given that on October 18, 1929, at 10 o'clock a. m., in the office of the county auditor, at Warren, Marshall county, in the State of Minnesota, I will offer for sale certain unsold state lands and also those state lands which have reverted to the state by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Terms of Sale:

Fifteen per cent of the purchase price is payable to the County Treasurer at the time of sale. The unpaid balance is payable at any time in whole or in part within forty years from the date of sale, interest rate of four per cent per annum, due on June 1st, of each year; provided, that the interest can be paid at any time within the interest year without penalty. In effect, this means that the interest money may be paid any time between June first and May thirty-first without penalty.

The appraised value of timber when so stated, must be paid in full at the time of sale.

All mineral rights are reserved to the State by the laws of the State.

All lands are sold subject to any and all ditch taxes thereon.

Lands on which the interest has become delinquent may be redeemed at any time up to the hour of sale or before resale, to the actual purchaser. Such lands are listed under the caption: "Delinquent Lands."

No person can purchase more than 320 acres of land, provided, however, that State lands purchased previous to 1905 are not charged against such purchaser.

Agents acting for purchasers must furnish affidavit of authority.

Appraisers' report showing quality and kind of soil are on file in this office.

Lists giving legal descriptions of lands to be offered may be obtained of the State Auditor at St. Paul, and of the County Auditor at the county seat.

RAY P. CHASE,
State Auditor.

The Cod Leaves Boston

"THE land of the sacred cod" used to mean only Boston, but with new developments in the fish industry there is no telling just how far the phrase may soon apply. One of the largest factors in supplying codfish to inlanders has been the recent canning, as well as salting, of the fish. Canned codfish is ready to cook just as salmon or tuna is ready for use.

Flakes or Cakes

Even canned codfish is put up in several ways. One is in flakes, large, toothsome flakes which may be creamed, made into hash, timbales, and used with omelets, in salads or in other ways. It saves a lot of time not to have to soak dried codfish in making cakes or cream sauce for baked potatoes, for instance, but to use these flakes or canned codfish instead.

Another variety of codfish is of such a character that it can be easily shaped with the hands, and, when fried in deep fat, makes crusty, tender balls; or it may be turned out of the can, sliced and sautéed. Codfish hash is also put up in cans. Canned codfish is not expensive and is a welcome addition to any meal in the day.

To make fish flake timbales, add one-fourth cup sifted bread crumbs, one-fourth teaspoon paprika, two well-beaten eggs and one and one-half cups milk to a can of fish flakes. Mix well and turn into buttered timbale molds or patty pans. Stand these in a pan of boiling water reaching nearly to the top. Bake until firm. The water should barely be simmering. Unmold timbales onto a hot platter; garnish with white sauce and sliced, hard-cooked eggs.*

Many Attend Harvest Festival

The Lutheran Church Harvest Festival held at the Hjalmar Johnson home Sunday was a big success. The program rendered by local and outside folks was enjoyed by all who attended the festival.

Not only local folks come to enjoy the program and dinner at these festivals which are held annually here but, we noticed cars from several of our neighbor villages and cities. In behalf of those who sponsored the festival we wish to thank one and all for their coming here Sunday and, we hope to see them back again next year.

The net proceeds of the day were $85.20 which was sent to the Home Mission to apply on the local church budget for which purpose it was raised. It will be sent back by the Mission to apply on the salary of our local pastor.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer J. Pearson returned to their home at Minot, N. Dak., last Wednesday after visiting for some time at the home of Mrs. Pearson's parent's Mr. and Mrs. Louis Wegge.

Dennis Wegge accompanied them to Minot where he will finish his senior year at the Minot high school.

Short Lessons in Dairying

LESSON 74

PRODUCTION: A dairy cow that will average 300 pounds of butterfat a year may be considered a first class cow. This means an income of $150 a year per cow for butterfat alone, not counting the value of the skim milk, calf, and manure. Such cows pay $100 a year above cost of feed from the sale of butterfat. This means an income of better than $7 a day spent caring for a cow.

MANUFACTURING: Progress in the manufacturin of dairy products has been made pershaps slowly, but steadily from the early pioneer days. Better methods of dairying have been taught for 50 years, and because of educational work the manufacture of dairy products has reached a high degree of efficiency in quality and improvement in price.

MARKETING: There are four chief factors in marketing that influence the price of a product. First, the need for the product, or the demand; second, the supply; third, the grade or quality of the product; and, fourth, the extent to which the product is known.

When The Republic Was Young

Only the more careful readers of our country's history are familiar with the peculiar characteristics of the War of 1812—the thrilling sea battles and the strenuous political conditions—strife between the adherents of Jefferson and those of Adams, which threatened the very foundation of the young republic.

These conditions and the color and romance of the period are made charmingly apparent in the novel, "Hate," by Arthur D. Howden Smith, the new serial in The News. We believe you will say that you have never read a better story about the early struggling days of the United States.

Farm Buildings Burn

Fire of unknown origin burned the barn and silo on the P. O. Reierson farm about three miles west of here on Monday morning at about 9 o'clock. When first discovered the fire was burning in the roof of the barn which was covered with old hay instead of shingles. Several men of a threshing crew were notified and came over to help save the silo but the wind turned on them and they were forced to leave on account of the heat from the burning barn. The heaviest loss will be felt by Carl Sorenson who is renting the farm and who built the silo for himself only a few years ago.

Just A Little Rain

The first little rain since about the first of July fell here on Monday and Tuesday. It delayed a few threshing machines from finishing up their runs but, as the work was pretty well done up here, it will not take but a few days to have all the threshing cleaned up in this community.

N. S. A. News

All permanent teaching positions at the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston, have now been filled according to an announcement made this week by Superintendent A. A. Dowell.

R. J. Christgau, Austin, Minnesota has been appointed assistant Animal Husbandman and diaector of athletics, to succeed D. H. LaVoi. Mr. Chrisgau is a graduate of the Central School, and College of Agriculture, University Farm, St. Paul. In addition to devoting one year to graduate work and acting as Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., Mr. Christgau has had several years experience teaching, and coaching all branches of athletics. He is a brother of Congressman Victor Christgau, Austin, Minn.

John W. Mlinar succeeds A. H. Larson as Registrar and instructor in advanced subjects. Last year Mr. Mlinar took an active part in a number of outside school activities, serving as faculty advisor to the Senior class in cooperation with Miss Retta Bede.

Elsie May Kingston, Wayne, Nebraska, has been appointed instructor in clothing and textiles and director of physical education for girls. Miss Kingston is a graduate of the Home Economics Division of the Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa, and has had two years teaching experience.

Miss Hildure Peterson, a graduate of the Music Department of the Universisy of Minnesota, succeeds Miss Helen Brown as instructor in voice, glee clubs and choruses.

Lydia H. Dahlin, Thief River Falls, will take charge of the Health service Department at the opening of the fall term, while E. L. Ocock, a graduate of the University of Illinois will assist with the farm machanics, gas motors, and field machinery, lecture and laboratory work.

With 311 advance room reservations on August 31, compared to 268 on the same date last year, Registrar Mlinar anticipates a new atteadance record during the coming year which opens September 30.

School Notice

We wish to urge all who plan to enter our high school for the coming year and who have not already done so, to enroll in the very near future. We also wish to emphasize the importance of regular attendence. It is necessary for progress in school.

Kindly note what the Department of Education has to say regarding this matter. Page 24, Standards for Graded Elementary and Secondary Schools dated August 1929. "The time element is essential in determining high school credit. Therefore, whether instruction is given in public or private summer schools or elsewhere, to ignore the time element in the granting of credits, for work other than review, is destructive of high school standards."

By Order of the School Board.

Olaf Ness, manager of the Holt Holding Co. Elevator announces that he will mow buy all kinds of grain and sweet clover seed for the Matt Barzen Co. at Thief River Falls.

Nels M. Engen, Supt. of Schools was here Wednesday and met with the school board out at Riverside and made arrangements for that district to have school there this winter.

25,000 Farmer Are Now Called Business Officials

"A survey covering the entire surplus grain area of the United States which was made by the U. S. Department of Agriculture shows that in excess of 25,000 farmers are serving on boards of directors of 4,000 farmers' elevators," according to the Farmers Elevator Guide.

"These 25,000 farmers in charge of the co-operative elevators are receiving practical business training. They get an inside view of real business. They learn the stern requirements that are exacted by the business world.

"Nothing has done more to give farmers a practical education in co-operative marketing than the business experience of these 25,000 farmers. Many of these same farmers are now serving as directors of other co-operatives and of farmers' banks and other sucessful business institutions.

"Although these farmers are real business men, they are serving the farmers' elevator companies for nominal sums. The farmers' elevator movement, the largest of our farmers business movements' has never paid extravagant salaries to its officers."

Mr. Odin Sastad, who has spent a year studying in France and touring other European countries, left Tuesday for his home at Vancouver., British Columbia, after spending a week at the C. O. Saastad home and visiting other relatives in this community.

S. E. Reierson and family from Karlstad spent Sunday here.

School Opened Tuesday

Teachers arrived here on Monday September 2 to take over their duties for the coming year. Miss Mable Ahlsten, Wheaton, Minnesota, will teach first and second grades. Miss Jeanette Lanman, McIntosh, Minnesota, will teach third and fourth grades. Miss Amy Rognlie, Halstad, Minnesota, who taught fifth and sixth grades last year will have charge of the same work the coming year. Mr. Clifford Overum, Thief River Falls, will teach seventh and eighth grades.

Miss Viola Torblaa, Fosston, Minnesota, who taught in the high school department here last year will have charge of the same department this year.

Miss Lanman, and Miss Ahlsten graduated from the Moorhead State Teachers College in June of this year. Miss Lanman was employed in Mahnomen County as teacher in 1927-28. Miss Ahlsten was located near Wheaton, Minnesota during 1927-28 doing school work there.

Mr. Overum graduated from the Teacher Training Department at Thief River Falls in June 1927. In the fall of that year he was employed as teacher of district 19 Marshall County. He was graduated from the Moorhead State Seachers College last June.

R. J. Vieths, Goohue, Minnesota, is again at the head of the local school for the third year.

How Dry Raids Help Disabled War Veterans

When Washington revenue officers raid an illicit distillery, the copper which composes the still is carefully saved and turned over to disabled veterans at Walter Reed hospital, who use it to make candlesticks, bowls, ash trays and other novelties. The photo shows one of the boys cutting up a section of a large still while his comrades are busily turning other parts of it into useful and legal articles.

Card Sharpers Busy on Ships

Many Americans Who Are Swindled in Games Not Aware of Crookedness.

Paris.—If you are coming to Europe, watch out for the man aboard the liner who warns you of the tricks of the card sharpers who haunt the transatlantic giants. Most likely he is one of the gang himself and has picked you out as his pigeon.

This is a favorite opening for the card sharper, according to the French police, who each year have more and more complaints from Americans debarking at Cherbourg, who have been swindled during the voyage. It is estimated also that perhaps 50 per cent of the passengers who are swindled are ignorant of the fact, believing they lost their money fairly.

Police Co-Operate.

Recently the French Surate-Generale and Scotland Yard got together to try to curb the activities of the transatlantic crooks, but it is a hard job. In the first place, the shipping companies do not want detectives to travel aboard their vessels, since if passengers found out they would probably tell their friends and the ships would gain a bad reputation.

Most of the shipping companies know the prominent card sharpers. This is understood, as these crooks spend the season traveling between the United States and Europe. But the ship owners are unable to interfere, for two reasons. First, they have no definite proof and they would hate to take a chance; secondly, the fear of creating bad publicity again holds good here.

Blackmailed of $5,000.

It is known that some card sharps travel all the year round on the Atlantic route, devoting their attentions in the winter to big men of business going to Europe. Other crooks change about, going down to Havana in the winter, or even working the Pacific until business brightens on the Atlantic. The Atlantic trip, however, is more favored, since the voyage is shorter, enabling the crook to skip ashore at Cherbourg with his loot before the ship gets too hot to hold him.

Nor are card sharps the only pests. He is only one of a variety of parasites who make the big ships their business field. When the tourist season opened this year a rich New Yorker was swindled by blackmailers to the tune of $5,000. He had made the acquaintance of a good-looking girl who invited herself to a cocktail party in his cabin, and then along came the husband unexpectedly. The business man paid to keep things quiet.

Where Nature Intended Bedbugs Should Live

Mancelona, Mich.—That the unspeakable bedbug was designed by nature to live a life in the woods is the assertion of lumbermen working at Camp No. 8 of the Antrim Iron company here. The company is the owner of the last stand of virgin hardwoods below the straits.

"Bedbugs are frequently found swarming like bees in old hemlocks," said J. G. Morey, scaler of the camp. "Thousands of them will be found in an area of a few feet. They usually select old and shaky trees as their rendezvous."

Bedbugs are brought to human habitations by bats, according to Morey, who declares that civilization changed their habits.

Driftwood in Gotham Harbor Costly Snags

New York.—Driftwood and other obstacles in New York harbor imposes a heavy financial penalty on boat owners, according to a report by Edwin B. Lapham, vice president of the Waterway league of America. In the first five months of the year, the report said, members of the New York towboat exchange paid out $40,000 for new propellers and the cost of fitting them after old ones had been damaged by the drifting debris. Lapham pointed out that some mishaps have been so serious that boats have been required to go to drydock, owners thus losing also the services of the vessels.

Good Morning Kiss for Breakfast

The bears at Paradise Inn, Rainier National park, certainly know where their meals come from. Whenever their hunger gets the best of them, they trot right up to the kitchen and demand food. The photograph shows "Bruin" using tact in asking for his breakfast from one of the kitchen attendants. His darker pal has been served.

Burro Back on Job After 500-Foot Fall

Eugene, Ore.—A member of the burro family put a blemish on the reputation of that species of pack animal as far as surefootedness is concerned when he fell 500 feet over a precipice in the Cascade mountains recently.

The little animal set a new record for hardihood, however.

Dee Wright, packer and guide, told the story when he came into town here recently. While traveling a narrow trail the burro slipped and fell over the edge of the cliff for an almost sheer drop of 500 feet. Then he rolled another 500 and lodged in a clump of trees on the mountainside.

When released from the limbs, between which he was jammed, the tough little beast leaped to his feet. The next day he was back in the pack train and carrying his accustomed load.

GANGLAND'S BEST BRAINS BEING DEFIED IN GOTHAM

U. S. Builds Huge Vault in New York for Storage of Dangerous Drugs.

New York—Meeting the challenge of the New York underworld, the United States is constructing the largest vault ever built anywhere for the storage of dangerous drugs.

The vault is nearing completion on the seventh floor of building A at the army base in South Brooklyn. When its massive steel doors, more formidable than those used in bank vaults, arrive from a Pennsylvania factory, the vault will be ready to protect additional millions of dollars' worth of cocaine, heroin, opium and morphine.

Every well-informed gangster in the metropolis knows about the new vault. For organized crime in New York for the past three years has been making persistent and almost incredibly daring attempts to outwit the army guardians of the base.

Gangland knows what the public does not suspect—that is, the army is storing in Brooklyn not only the largest drug supply ever collected under one roof, but the largest amount of pure liquor in any one place in the country.

The underworld always has a market for good whisky and rare wines, for they can be diluted a great deal. And it needs dope to nerve its denizens on to holdups and assaults of the more vicious sort.

Uncle Sam, on the other hand, is hoarding the narcotics for hospital use in the next war and is taking new precautions every month to trap his criminal opponents.

The scene of the struggle is 100 acres of waterfront property between Fifty-eighth and Sixty-fifth streets. Ten-foot high wire surrounds three sides of the army base and water the fourth. Armed guards pace up and down at the entrance to protect this principal peace time supply place of the whole army, where everything, from locomotives to flannel shirts, is stored.

The United States ran short of drugs in the last war, as did other nations. Next time it intends to be prepared. Drugs do not deteriorate. When seized throughout the country frequently they are shipped by court authorities to the two vaults already in use, one on the sixth, another on the third floor of building A.

Engineer Runs 167,000 Miles on 50-Mile Road

Clarendon, Ark.—J. M. "Uncle Bud" Smith of Clarendon has issued a challenge to every railroad man in America to equal his forty-seven years of service with one 50-mile railroad.

While in a mood for statistics "Uncle Bud" recently figured he had run his engine more than 167,000 miles over the fifty mile line from Helena to Clarendon.

THREE PERFECT DAYS

(© by D. J. Walsh.)

MARGARET GRANT'S poise had a restful effect on her fellow passengers when she entered the dining car. The nervous little woman with the fretful baby relaxed somewhat as Margaret sat down beside her. Richard Adams, across the aisle, unpuckered his forehead and seemed to think better of the caustic criticism he was about to address to the ebony attendant about the length of time it took to broil a steak. Two children being piloted out stopped instinctively to smile up into the brown friendliness of her eyes and were started again on their way by impatient parents.

The nervous little voice of the nervous little woman rasped out a commonplace sentence and was answered by Margaret's velvety contralto, which made Richard Adams smooth the last faint wrinkle from between his eyes and sigh contentedly.

She did not notice the extreme deliberation which enabled him to finish just as she rose from the table, and the keen look which followed her bronze head would have been lost on her if the train had not given a sudden lurch just as she reached the door. Some one of the line waiting in the vestibule had loosened the catch that held the door, and only a quick brown hand thrust against it prevented it slamming on Margaret's fingers as she regained her balance.

"Oh, thank you," frankly looking up into a pair of surprisingly blue eyes, which would have been stern if they had not been crinkled at the corners by the action of the sun without and a sense of humor within. She felt his strong hand steady her for a necessary moment and only that.

"Making up time, I guess, and none too smooth a roadbed to do it on," she heard above the roar of the train as they crossed the space between the two cars, with its flimsy, accordion-like cover. Then he seemed to draw into himself with a reserve equal to her own. His seat proved to be opposite hers in the pullman.

She sat quite motionless, entertaining herself with mental pictures of the end of the journey, a sure-enough holiday in California, after a year of exacting hospital duty, following her graduation. The doctors whose opinion made it flattering, insisted on having her as their "special" when they could. Now she had only Jack's eager face before her and she blew him an airy radio kiss, though her hands remained idly clasped in her lap, hands whose every firm curve said, "Let me help you."

She was barely conscious of the man opposite, though she had taken a nurse's satisfaction in the ease with which he had swung his heavy Gladstone bag up before him and when he burrowed for the book which now absorbed him. Poor Jack! Never well, but so debonair and appealing that she had to love him and promise to marry him when he was better.

The next day was passing and Richard began to inwardly curse the conventions that kept them apart. "Hang it all! I suppose if I were a young sheik and she a flapper we wouldn't be miles apart. I could walk right over and tell her she is the first woman I ever really saw."

She seemed so oblivious of him, friendly only with children and never tiring of them. Her seat became a mecca for all the little chaps in her car and adjoining ones. Over the corner of his book Richard saw the most amazing toys involved from candy boxes and paper, bits of string and the most unpromising material that the children produced.

At last he could stay out of the charmed circle no longer. "I could whittle those handles a bit and then they would stay in the wheelbarrow," he volunteered, carefully adjusting the milk bottle top which served as a wheel.

"That's just what we need, isn't it, Billy?" she said, admitting him without demanding a countersign, an accurate account of his genealogy, or a letter of introduction as he felt that she might.

I saw a ship a-sailing, a-sailing on the sea,
And, oh it was all laden with pretty things for me.

she crooned to a waiting five-year-old as she ballasted a half walnut shell with softened wax and adjusted a tiny sail on its toothpick mast.

There were comfits in the cabin and apples in the hold,
The sails were made of silk and the masts were made of gold,

he finished, and they smiled in absurd freemasonry over the shared nursery rhyme.

"Why do people look for ships which they have never sent out?" she wondered.

"Because we all want the impossible," he replied, "then we are not bored by our wishes coming true too soon."

"But isn't it ironical of fate to produce what one has always longed for, when the freedom to take it is gone?" She had an odd and almost uncanny sensation of having known this man before, of having always known him. All her twenty-seven years, or at least as long as she could remember, she had wanted and expected a playmate with exactly this comradly smile she saw opposite. A year ago she had given up his ever coming, and had more than half promised herself to Jack Dunston when he left the hospital after a long illness. Now she could see that what he satisfied in her was the desire to mother something. But, oh, if she had only not let him care as he did.

When Richard Adams found she was going to California he anathematized the luck which he had just been blessing, that made his immediate presence necessary in the Imperial valley for the biggest engineering project he had yet undertaken. He must see her long enough to establish a bond that would hold until he could find her again. His practical soul scoffed at love at first sight. But his mystical side admitted the answer to her call. She summoned him and he recognized her right. No one in his thirty years had even imitated it.

When they left El Paso after a flying visit to Juarez their acquaintance had extended to the point where an unfinished phrase carried an electric thrill of understanding.

At Tucson, where he was to change, she walked along the platform with him to rest from the cramping monotony of the train. "Violet rays will never feel magnetic to me again!" she thought as her hand touched his, and the bronze and blue of his rare smile upturned to her suggested the sea or the open spaces of the desert as he helped her down the steps.

Suddenly he said: "Why, there's Brooks and his wife." A man and woman coming toward them stopped in pleased amazement and the latter exclaimed: "Why, Dick Adams; walking right out here to Arizona with my paragon after saying you never cared to meet her!"

The Los Angeles train was ready to leave.

"You must come to the Imperial valley and spend the winter with us, Margaret," insisted Mrs. Brooks, "after you have seen Los Angeles." But Margaret gave no promises. Richard Adams was content to wait.

"Hasta manana," he said as they parted, and "Hasta manana," she answered, but in her heart she felt it was "Adios."

Los Angeles and Jack came all too soon. She knew just how his eyes would caress her and envelop her. "His future and even his life may depend on me," she thought as she struggled to put out of her life forever the dream of three perfect days.

But Jack avoided her straitforward look as he piloted her to his beautiful car, and in an instant she sensed the reason. Curled up in the front seat with a charming air of possession was the most entrancing bit of flapperdom she had ever seen.

"Carol, this is Miss Grant," Jack announced, and then they proceeded to the hotel.

Then, as he settled her in her room: "Margaret, I've been a cad. Here you were expecting—" She turned a radiant face toward him, cutting him short.

"Jack, dear, I was expecting and hoping to find you well, and I am more than glad that you do not need me. I can stay only a week. Alice Brooks expects me back in Arizona for a long visit. She says it is frightfully lonely with only those tiresome engineers about."

"Well," said Carol as he swung into the seat beside her, "the old dear took it cheerfully."

"Yes," agreed Jack, "Margaret is a good sport, but, honestly, I hated to break her heart after all she did for me."

Onions Sure to Put Up Strong Case in Court

In the lawsuit between a San Francisco landlord and one of his former tenants, a dentist, to determine, whether or not a lease may be broken by fried onions, a strong case might be made for either side.

The onion is no joke. It is a vegetable to be taken seriously. It is one of the oldest of cultivated plants and is now known to have been a chief food of the ancient Egyptians. When this fact was established the mystery of how the pharaohs got the great monoliths to the upper stories of the pyramids was at once solved. In onion there is strength.

A once famous advertising slogan told us that "The world's greatest general died from eating a dish of fried onions." Later biographers of Napoleon reject this allegation as inaccurate. It isn't the man who eats the fried onions who is in danger. But if his associates will only resort to the homeopathic principle that "like cures like" they will be entirely safe and also add much to their enjoyment of life.

As a mater of fact, the onion is one of nature's most valuable contributions to cookery. By a delicate use of the onion the French have raised cooking to a fine art.

Whether the onion appears as chives, scallions, garlic or just plain onion its charm is resistless. Young women have sacrificed their hope of marriage through weakness for onions at the romantic age. Men have turned from expensive menus to feast on an onion sandwich.

The onion, as every crossword puzzle fan has found out by looking in the dictionary, is a liliaceous plant—basically a lily. Which may explain the obscure Bible passage, "Consider the lilies of the field. They toil not, neither do they spin." If those lilies were really onions they belonged to the aristocracy of plants and therefore shouldn't be expected to toil. There is, in our modern phrase, such a thing as being too strong to work.

CHAPTER I

—1—

Wreck of the Sachem

There were black looks from the men as they cut away the wreckage of the main-topmast and curses on their lips lost nothing in vehemence for being muted by the gale. Fellowes, remote on the poop, missed none of the discontent, although he seemed to have eyes only for the huntress astern, and the rocky coast that filled the horizon to starboard. He held himself very erect, his slight, wiry frame tensed with energy, his hard-chiseled, young face frowning bleakly. Old Henderson, his first mate, standing beside him, nodded toward the frigate's close-reefed tops'ls lifting nearer about the combers.

"'Tis bad luck, sir. We'll go ashore if they hit the other stick."

"They won't follow us in much closer," Fellowes answered shortly. "There's a port called Faro we ought to open any moment. I know where we are. That's Algarve, in southern Portugal."

He scanned the viscous pall that draped the sky behind the frigate. An onshore gale, that was the crowning affliction! Everything had gone wrong since they spoke the Salem letter-of-marque off the Cape Verdes, and heard Madison had declared war—baffling winds, suspicious cruisers, the storm that had driven them east into the Gulf of Cadiz. And now, this tall-sparred, yellow frigate!

A cold rage possessed Fellowes; his blue eyes, bluer for the tan of cheek bones and brow, sparkled icily. He reviewed the long voyage to Canton, the patience with which he had assembled a choice cargo, certain to pay big profits.

Was he to see that cargo put up at auction by a British prize court? See the Sachem that he had groomed and cherished lovingly sold off at Portsmouth for British registry? He'd die first, he told himself. And his jaw set squarely as a tongue of flame and a roundshot whined overhead in the rigging.

"Gettin' closer," croaked the first mate. "And we're purty nigh them rocks."

"I see it, Mr. Henderson," Fellowes assented crisply. "And once for all, I'll not strike. The frigate daren't follow us much farther—she draws twice what we do."

"Aye, aye, sir," muttered the first mate, but his tone was one of dissent.

Fellowes' fists clinched tight under the skirts of his watch-coat. Give him a few hours of darkness, and he'd contrive to slip free of his trap, beat past the blinded frigate, perhaps turn and steer east again for Cadiz—he could, at a pinch, find a market for his cargo with the Spanish merchants. But profit, trade was a secondary consideration. The main thing was to outface the arrogance of British power, show that America could keep the seas.

The frigate, undeterred by the imminence of a dangerous coast, continued on her course a point or two nearer the wind than the Sachem's. Suddenly, in her bows, glowed two little jets of flame for eyes. The whippy boom of Long Toms rumbled down the wind. And the deck of the Sachem trembled under Fellowes. There was a creaking and rending of timbers, but he looked in vain for signs of damage, until he saw the helmsman clutching at the madly spinning wheel.

"She don't answer, Cap'n! She don't answer," babbled the man.

Overhead spars banged and canvas slatted as the brig broached to; the foretopmast went by the board with a crash in a welter of tangled rigging. And in the midst of the confusion, Fellowes heard himself saying calmly:

"The rudder's shot away. You'd best get for'ard, my man."

"I knowed 'twould happen," cried the first mate. "She'll be on them rocks in a jiffy. The sooner we lower the boats, the surer we'll be o' savin' the crew."

"There'll be time," snapped Fellowes. "Her head's swinging into the wind. The foretopmast will serve as a sea-anchor while it holds.

"Mr. Henderson, we'll lower the quarterboats." And he called down to the crew: "Smartly, men! I'm sorry you're going into captivity. Any who prefer to stay with me I'll do what I can for."

"Ain't you comin' sir?" exclaimed Henderson.

"I was brought up in England," Fellowes answered dryly. "I don't hanker for their prisons."

"But them rocks—"

"I'll risk it. My luck is due for a turn. Now, then, look alive, all of you! No small gear, men. Just as you are."

They obeyed him mechanically, officers and men alike demoralized by the rapidity with which disaster had overtaken them.

Presently old Henderson rolled aft, and hailed him respectfully:

"Better come along of us, Cap'n; she's a goner."

"I'd rather chance the rocks than Dartmoor," Fellowes rejoined, with a smile. "Make no mistake. You'd be wiser to stay with me—go for a privateersman after we reach home."

"You'll never reach home through them rocks," Henderson answered stubbornly. "I'm sorry, sir. Ye been a good skipper. I'd stay—if I seed any chance of gettin' ashore."

"Thank you, Mr. Henderson. Don't worry—you're right to go."

The mate's face was unhappy, but he saluted clumsily, and clambered over the bulwarks. A moment later, the small boats cast off, and pulled away. Fellowes was relieved when the frigate held on her course to pick them up. At least he had the satisfaction of knowing he wasn't responsible for any deaths. And he told himself, surveying the battered hulk of brig, that he'd done all that was possible to save her.

But she was a goner, as old Henderson had said. Drifting steadily on shore. He dropped off the poop into the green pool of the waist, and sloshed through the companionway of his cabin, where he discarded watch-coat and sea-boots, and buckled on a belt containing his scanty funds. He had barely regained the deck when a wave demolished the clutter of wreckage that moored the brig's bow.

Fellowes was half-suffocated by the cascades of emerald water that breached the bulwarks, but he fought his way for'ard, and succeeded in lashing himself to the windlass. He had his parting view of the frigate, lying to, the Sachem's boats under her counter. Ahead, a saw-toothed ledge of rocks dripped blackly in a hollow between two waves, and he pulled the slip-knot of his lashings, bracing himself for the shock. It came with a jarring and rending of timbers, a mighty din of waters. Then he was snatched off the deck, hurled up—and up—and up. He must swim, he realized, but at once he began to sink. Down—down—down! A drumming in his ears, eyes smarting, lungs oppressed. But he must fight on. He must! Show these Englishmen—

• • • • • • •

Fellowes was aroused by fingers prodding at his garments. A hairy face glared greedily into his; a curved knife flashed in the gusty light of torches, playing hazily about a ring of other hairy faces, bestial and cruel.

The man holding the knife wrenched at his soaking neckcloth. Easy to imagine what would happen next. He braced himself for the nick of the steel—and a woman's voice belled in the shadows, high and clear. The hairy faces receded; the knife was hidden. The woman spoke briefly again.

The torches blazed nearer, straw torches, tightly braided and dipped in resin. Across the area of plebby beach, he saw distinctly the three people who approached him: two women, one slim and willowy, despite the cloak that enveloped her, the other enormous in girth, panting and wheezing as she waddled along, and with them a cassocked priest.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

It Came With a Jarring and Rending of Timber, a Mighty Din of Waters.

Phrase Often Misapplied

Probably the majority of people who use the phrase "of that ilk" are ignorant of the real meaning of "ilk." It does not properly mean kind, set, family or race, as often supposed. "Ilk" is from the Anglo-Saxon "ilc" and means identical or same. In Scotch "of that ilk" denotes that a person's surname is the same as the name of his estate "Knockwinnock of that ilk" means simply "Knockwinnock of Knockwinnock," the name of proprietor and property being identical. The improper usage of "ilk" to mean kind or sort probably originated as a joke and has been perpetuated through ignorance of the true meaning.—Exchange.

Papal Pronouncements

A papal bull is a letter sealed with a bulla or with a red ink imprint of the device on a bulla. Bulls since 1878 have been dated by the civil calendar. Prior to this they were written on rough parchment and dated "a die Incarnationis" ("from the day of the Incarnation"). The bulla used is a round leaden seal, which has on one side a representation of St. Peter and St. Paul and on the other the name of the pope who uses it.

HE DISCOVERED WHAT WATER IS

English Genius World's Most Timid Man.

London.—Any schoolboy fresh from his first chemistry lesson, will tell you that water is H2O—a statement, by the way, with which modern scientists do not altogether agree. Not everybody, however, can say who first made that stupendous fact known to the world.

It was a millionaire bachelor, Henry Cavendish by name, nephew of one of the dukes of Devonshire. He was so shy that he kept many of his discoveries secret lest he should become famous, and they were only unearthed after his death; so shy that if he ever caught sight of one of his own woman servants, she had to pack her bag and leave that day. He was so shy that when his banker came to tell him he had $400,000 in his account—and wasn't that rather a lot to lie idle?—he sent the man of business away, told him to do what he liked with it, but said he would close his account if they ever bothered him again.

He was so shy, says the London Mail, that having a wonderful library of books he was quite willing to lend, he took a separate house in Soho, so that borrowers need never disturb his studies. Whenever he took out a book himself he always signed for it like any stranger.

Not only did he tell how water is made. He was one of the first to discover that heat is not a substance but a state; one of the first to measure the density of the earth; a pioneer of electricity, an astronomer, a geologist. Rustics at Clapham, where he had his country seat, peeped through his windows and saw, instead of furniture, a laboratory and a forge. They thought he was either a wizard or a madman; but he was merely a genius.

Air Post Office Designed to Sort 250,000 Letters

Seattle, Wash.—When the government desires to move all first-class mail by air, especially designed planes will be available for such service. A fully equipped airplane on display in a local plant will carry three tons of mail, or a quarter million letters, at 135 miles an hour.

Eighteen-passenger transports built for use on the transcontinental air route this summer are so constructed that they can be quickly transformed into mail planes. Sorting tables and sacks can be placed around the cabin for the distribution of mail en route, as is done on mail trains. These cabins are 19½ feet long, more than six feet high and five and one-half feet wide.

These newer planes have a wing span of 80 feet and a length over all of 55 feet. Letter clerks will have their meals aboard the planes in well-equipped buffets electrically heated. Each plane is provided with a fully equipped lavatory with hot and cold water. Large, unobstructed windows of non-shatterable glass give excellent vision. Instruments mounted over the sorting tables would tell the clerks how fast they are flying and how much time they have to distribute mail for various cities en route.

Numerous applications for airplane mail clerk jobs are on file with the Post Office department, it was announced here.

Towns' Names on Roofs Guide Distance Flyers

Washington.—Remarkable progress in the movement to have name signs painted on the roofs of prominent buildings of towns throughout the country was reported by W. Irving Glover, second assistant postmaster general in charge of air mail, on his return from an inspection trip over the air mail lines.

The campaign was started by the Daniel Guggenheim Fund for the Promotion of Aeronautics and postmasters have been enlisted to further the movement. Mr. Glover said he was surprised with the results already accomplished.

He said the people in the West were more interested in the air mail than those in the East.

Four Finnish Spies Go to Prison in Russia

Leningrad. — Four men, charged with espionage on Soviet soil in behalf of Finland, have pleaded guilty in a military trial here. They were sentenced to eight years of imprisonment and confiscation of all their properties. The self-confessed spies are Yalmar Lempianen, Edward Vesterinin, Solomen Uttu and Uri Reiman.

Sun and Tape 'Brand' Bathers in Virginia

Richmond, Va.—The vogue for suntan here has brought the "brand." A "brand" is easily acquired with a few strips of adhesive tape and an afternoon at the swimming pool.

It consists of shaping the desired design or initials from the tape, applying them to the skin and stepping into the sunshine. The space covered by the tape remains white and is easily seen when the tape is removed. Greek letter fraternity "brands" appear to be the most popular.

ROMAN SHIP BARED IN DRAINED LAKE

Caligula's Galley Disappoints Italians.

Rome. — Caligula's galley, about which so much has been written in Italy and elsewhere, is proving a disappointment to the Italians, and a source of worry to the peasants of Nemi, whose medieval city overlooks the lake in which the galley was sunk.

Now that several million gallons have been drained from what was till recently the most beautiful lake near Rome, the hulk has appeared in all its dilapidation. Its worn beams, entirely bare of those ornaments of marble, copper and mosaic that were described with such glowing color, have been kept together only by the mud of the bottom of the lake. Now that they have been exposed to the sun, they are in danger of crumbling away altogether, and the two firms that have undertaken its salvage at their own expense hastily had it boarded up, while continuing pumping operations, though on a reduced scale, as the rapid pumping of the last six months not only caused landslips, but may throw the beams of the hulk apart altogether.

Hope to Reconstruct Galley.

Archeologists and antiquarians are not so disappointed as the general public, nor do they share the anger of the Nemi peasants, whose famous strawberry beds, which used to reach to the water's edge, are damaged by the withdrawal of moisture and the frequent landslides.

They point out that once the water is drained from the galley's keel, and the cooler weather makes it possible to remove the boarding, it will be simple enough to remove the hulk beam by beam and "reconstruct" it on the shores of the lake, where a small museum is to be built for its reception.

Whether the operation will solve the riddle of how galleys of ancient Rome were propelled remains to be seen. Former attempts to save this one did more harm than good. Large quantities of wood taken from it were sold for fuel, and the better parts made into "keepsakes," such as snuff boxes and walking sticks.

Emperor Is Playful.

As to the precious marbles and bronzes with which the barges were covered, local rumor has it that the Emperor Caligula, being in a playful mood, sunk the boats on purpose, with his friends on board to see what they would do when in danger of drowning, but carefully had everything of value removed. The discovery of a large wolf's head in copper, a few tiles and some long copper nails does not entirely refute this legend, for the heads were used as figureheads, and the tiles may have covered a cabin. One head, evidently the twin of that found near the hulk recently, has been in Terme museum in Rome for some years. The copper nails were purely ornamental, as experts who examined the hulk found the beams were kept together by dove-tailing one into the other.

Now that the barge near the shore has proved disappointing, archeologists' hopes are centered on the one further out which, they say, will be in better condition, as neither peasants nor relic hunters could get at it so easily. But the two firms who are undertaking their salvage for purely patriotic reasons have already spent over 1,500,000 liras ($75,000) against an estimated 200,000 liras ($10,000). And it is not certain that they will be able to attack the second vessel, which would prove even more costly. The estimate was that both would be laid bare by next October.

British Police Report Rise in Motor Bandits

London.—Motor bandits have become so active and successful throughout the British Isles that police have been forced to seek new means of curbing their activities.

More than 100 motor raids were reported in London alone during the first half of 1929. The number of attacks increased steadily from six in January to 51 in May. Few of the culprits were arrested.

The bandits not only use automobiles to escape after a robbery. They patrol residential districts in their fast cars, attacking and robbing persons on the sidewalks.

Police admit they are meeting serious difficulties in attempting to solve the problem.

In a recent case, a stolen car was driven through three cordons of police who sought to stop it. Three attempts to rob the postoffice at Uxbridge have been foiled but the criminals have always managed to escape in motor cars.

90 P. C. of World's Motors Made in U. S.

Washington.—Nine out of every ten automobiles in use throughout the world were made in the United States, according to a report issued by the authoritative division of the Department of Commerce. Of the 32,028,500 automobiles in world circulation, 28,551,500, or more than 90 per cent, were produced by American manufacturers. This includes 25,567,000 passenger cars and 3,984,500 trucks.

Approximately half of the 6,336,843 machines in foreign countries bear the name of American manufacturers. The automobile industry in the United States outranks all other manufacturing industries.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Coincidence

New York.—Several months ago an author of my acquaintance completed a novel, which has been appearing as a serial in a magazine but is not yet out in book form, in which the hero is the inventor of a machine which enables motorists to serve themselves with gasoline by dropping quarters in a slot. A few weeks ago it was announced that a California inventor had perfected such an apparatus.

City Museum

New York, which already may lay claim to being the city of museums, will have a museum of its own next year, wherein will be displayed the municipal waxworks. Unlike the waxworks at Coney Island, which pictures such civic events as the murder of Arnold Rothstein, this museum will depict the more serious and important moments in the history of the municipality. The first scene will show Henry Hudson on the deck of the Half Moon, approaching the island of Manhattan on his search for a route to the Indies. Other scenes will show Peter Minuit making his famous $24 deal with the Indians, and Washington's inauguration at Federal hall. Also pictured will be a draft riot in Union Square during the Civil war, and the waterfront in the days of clipper ships. No plans have been laid for picturing more modern events, but I, for one, vote for the inclusion of a scene depicting the returning of Lindbergh from Paris. There was something that for sheer magnificence may never be duplicated.

Floating Hotel

Several years ago an imaginative reporter got himself and his newspaper into all sorts of trouble with a highly colored story about a floating palace on Rum Row, where the elite of the fast set were enjoying gambling and drinking orgies. The vessel was pure imagination on the reporter's part, and every one agreed, a very superior grade of imagination. But now the real thing has appeared off the coast of Long Island. It is a luxurious boat, operated as a hotel where stage and society folk spend their week-ends. It is no gambling hell or floating liquor dispensary, and it operates within the law.

Foolish Squirrels

Columbia university, where men and women are equipped in a superior fashion for their battle with life, has proved the undoing of a community of squirrels. These animals have been broken down mentally to such an extent that they have forgotten the inborn squirrel instinct to bury nuts in summer so that they may eat in winter. The students are at fault. Apparently all of the thousands that attend the university in the winter session have been willing to provide nuts for the campus squirrels, and the squirrels have developed a devil-may-care philosophy. And the strange part of it is that early summer is the leanest period of the year for these improvidents, for the winter students have departed and the summer session attendants have not yet arrived.

Army Studies Airplane Equipment for Camping

Washington. — Airplane camping equipment to provide for field expeditions by air is being devised by the army air corps. Secretary of War Good has directed Maj. Gen. James E. Fechet to initiate a study of the equipment question, with a particular view to lightweight sleeping bags, camping stoves using gasoline fuel, and "tents" to fit over the lower wings of an airplane to provide shelter. All these must be light and most compact, for storage in the plane.

Claims Plane Shakes Dishes Off Her Shelf

Syracuse, N. Y.—That a low-flying airplane keeps her awake and "shakes dishes off the shelves" in the wee hours of the morning was the complaint made to the police here recently by one housewife.

"It flies so low it wakes us all up and the vibration from the engine shakes dishes off my shelves," said the woman, adding that she wanted "something done about it." The sergeant promised to do his best, though as yet there are no "air cops" on the force.

Corsica's Good Bandit

Banditry in Corsica does not necessarily mean robbery and murder as for many years the country was practically ruled by a recognized bandit, who permitted plunder and bloodshed only in the case of the vendetta, which was regarded as a sufficient excuse for any kind of outlawry as long as it was confined to the principals and their following. This bandit was Romanetti, whose edicts and wishes were recognized throughout the country although he had no official capacity.

Bird Study

There are now nearly 1,200 banding stations in all parts of the United States, operated for the study of bird migrations and habits. Operators send the data regarding each individual bird banded to the United States bureau of biological survey, which has established an indexed card file of such records. Widespread interest is expressed in reports of the capture of banded birds, of which 13,794, representing about 200 species, have been retaken, either alive or dead.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

America's finest medium-priced automobile

Today's Oakland All-American Six stands out unmistakably as America's finest medium-priced automobile. Its value supremacy has been established by facts revealed in comparison of the All-American Six with twenty other medium-priced automobiles. Let us go over all the results of this comparison with you. When you have seen how on every basis of comparison the All-American Six towers above its field—you will agree with us that you get more for your dollar in America's finest medium-priced automobile.

Proof of Oakland Value Superiority

The following facts were obtained from a comparison of the Oakland All-American Six with 20 other medium-priced automobiles. All told, 878 individual comparisons were made. Of these, Oakland proved to be distinctly superior in 451 or 51.37 per cent. The 20 cars combined were at best equal to Oakland on 382 or 43.50 per cent. And 13 of the 20 were higher-priced than Oakland.

WHEELBASE

Only one car as low-priced as Oakland has a wheelbase as long as Oakland's, which is 117 inches. That car requires a turning circle to the left of 42 feet as compared with Oakland's 36 feet. Six higher-priced cars have shorter wheelbases.

FISHER BODY

Only Oakland and two other cars in the field offer bodies by Fisher. And one of the two is nearly $100 higher in price than Oakland. Of the 18 cars which have less-known bodies, 11 are priced above the All-American Six.

BRAKES

Only Oakland and one other car in its field use the fine type of brakes which Oakland employs. And no car in the field equals Oakland's 290 square inches of brake band area. Oakland's separate emergency brake operates on the transmission. Seven cars in the field have no separate emergency brakes, although three of them exceed Oakland in price.

PISTON DISPLACEMENT

Oakland's 228 cubic inch piston displacement is greater than 12 of the 20 cars in its price field. Of the 8 remaining cars, 7 are much higher priced than Oakland.

Oakland All-American Six, $1145 to $1375, f. o. b. Pontiac, Mich., plus delivery charges. Spring covers, Lovejoy Shock Absorbers included in list prices. Bumpers and rear fender guards extra. General Motors Time Payment Plan available at minimum rate.

$1145 AND UP

Consider the delivered price as well as the list (f. o. b) price when comparing automobile values . . . Oakland-Pontiac delivered prices include only authorized charges for freight and delivery and the charge for any additional accessories or financing desired.

Sale of School and Other State Lands

State of Minnesota,
State Auditor's Office,
St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 21, 1929

Notice is hereby given that on October 18, 1929, at 10 o'clock a. m., in the office of the county auditor, at Warren, Marshall county, in the State of Minnesota, I will offer for sale certain unsold state lands and also those state lands which have reverted to the state by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Terms of Sale:

Fifteen per cent of the purchase price is payable to the County Treasurer at the time of sale. The unpaid balance is payable at any time in whole or in part within forty years from the date of sale, interest rate of four per cent per annum, due on June 1st, of each year; provided, that the interest can be paid at any time within the interest year without penalty. In effect, this means that the interest money may be paid any time between June first and May thirty-first without penalty.

The appraised value of timber when so stated, must be paid in full at the time of sale.

All mineral rights are reserved to the State by the laws of the State.

All lands are sold subject to any and all ditch taxes thereon.

Lands on which the interest has become delinquent may be redeemed at any time up to the hour of sale or before resale, to the actual purchaser. Such lands are listed under the caption: "Delinquent Lands."

No person can purchase more than 320 acres of land, provided, however, that State lands purchased previous to 1905 are not charged against such purchaser.

Agents acting for purchasers must furnish affidavit of authority.

Appraisers' report showing quality and kind of soil are on file in this office.

Lists giving legal descriptions of lands to be offered may be obtained of the State Auditor at St. Paul, and of the County Auditor at the county seat.

Price On Flax Goes Up

The price on Flax took one of the biggest jumps on Saturday that it has ever done according to local elevator managers and old time farmers. The price advanced seventeen cents, which almost shot the Flax up to three dollars. It lost some of its pep again on Monday but just the same we would like to have five thousand bushels to sell.

Since we set the above article Flax prices have taken a notion to chase up and down like a streak of greased lightning. It dropped back to $2.83 on Tuesday from the high mark of $2.95 reached Saturday. The drop was on Monday and Tuesday.

On Wednesday it topped the Saturday raise by 1 cent when it jumped sky high with an 18 cent raise, making the price yesterday $3.01 a bushel.

Governor's Order

We are hereby publishing in part an order issued by Governor Christianson extening additional protection to prairie chickens or pinnated grouse, white breasted or sharp tailed grouse, in all the counties of the state with the exception of Kittson, Marshall, Pennington, Red Lake, Polk, Norman, Clay, Wilkin, Swift, Big Stone, Aitkin, Pine, Kanabec, Morrison, Todd and Roseau counties, and therein for a period of seven days only from September 16th to September 22nd, 1929, inclusive.

Due to the fact that there is danger of the undue depletion of the above mentioned game birds in Minnesota, the season is closed in all but the sixteen counties named above.

The Czar of Lights

THE brightest beacon which guards our coast is that in service at Navasink, N. J., which marks the entrance to New York harbor.

This czar of lights flashes from a massive stone tower, built in 1862, and located at the highest point along the Atlantic coast for hundreds of miles—north or south—the light being 248 feet above the water.

Having the power of 710,000 candles, this light is plainly visibly over 1,000 square miles of water. Under normal conditions, it can be seen for 26 miles, and, under unusually good atmospheric conditions, has been sighted by incoming ships 50 miles at sea.

The great lens, surprisingly beautiful and displaying every color of the rainbow, is five feet in diameter and made up of nearly 400 separate prisms, held together by copper frames and set to focus the rays of light into a single beam. It rests on a turntable which in turn rests on a bed of quicksilver weighing five tons. The lens and table weigh ten tons and are turned by a clock-like mechanism.

The light is furnished by three incandescent oil-vapor burners within the lens. Its intensity resembles a flash of sheet lightning. The flash lasts for three-fourths of a second, followed by two seconds of darkness and is so distinctive that, 'tis said, no experienced observer could mistake it for any other light. Its closeup glare is so blinding that the keepers are obliged to wear dark-smoked glasses to avoid serious eye injury.

Kindly note what the Department of Education has to say regarding this matter. Page 24, Standards for Graded Elementary and Secondary Schools dated August 1929. "The time element is essential in determining high school credit. Therefore, whether instruction is given in public or private summer schools or elsewhere, to ignore the time element in the granting of credits, for work other than review, is destructive of high school standards."

By Order of the School Board.

The Gas Tax Money

There is already a lot of talk about what should be done with the first half of the gas tax collected by the state under the new law.

The amount received recently by the county treasurer from the state treasurer amounted to $33,783.50, and is to be used by the county commissioners in the improvements of secondary roads in the county. The balance of the gas tax money will be available in February.

In any event that there should be a few dollars left over at any time, we hope that they could be used in fixing up the road going west from the C. L. Heinze farm to the Newfolden Township line.

Some Close Shaves

Some local boys took a spill with their car about four miles northwest of town early Sunday morning while driving home from a dance at Newfolden.

One of them lost a finger and the rest got a shaking down.

Theo. Halvorson and two little sons got a little shaking up late Wednesday evening, while driving home from Thief River Falls when their car hit some loose gravel on the highway about a mile south of town, causing it to leave the road and roll over on its side. None of the occupants were hurt and no damage was done to the car.

A heavy shower of rain here Wednesday evening delayed the threshing operations yesterday. The rain helped some for the fall plowing which many farmers are busy doing now.

Warning To Hunters

With a hundred thousand hunters in the fields and woods, and along the lake shores, with the opening of the hunting season on September 16th, the Commissioner of Gamo and Fish, Geo. W. McCullough, cautions all nimrods to be careful of their camp fires.

The past two months has been an exceptionally dry season and a great number of fires have swept the northern portion of the state. Approximately fifty thousand acres have been burned over and all of the fires are not yet under control. Although the rains of the past week have lessened the danger to some extent, nevertheless certain sections are dry enough to constisute a fire menace.

Anglers have been notoriously slack in their camp fire conduct and it is hoped that the hunter will show more discretion and thought and exercise better judgment in the selection of a place for a camp fire and its extinguishment after the need for the camp fire has ceased.

Birthday Party

About forty friends and relatives of Mrs. Chas. Skoglund gathered at her home on Sunday afternoon, Sept. 8th, to help her celebrate her birthday. A very delicious lunch was served, there being two large birthday cakes decorated in pink and green.

Many beautiful presents were given her by her many friends and a very enjoyable time was had by all.

PRODUCTION: Records kept by Experiment Stations show that it requires 150 hours a year to care for a dairy cow, or 15 days of 10 hours each. This includes feeding, milking, separating, hauling cream to creamery, cleaning out barn, etc. This is the average time in caring for a herd of cows. At this rate it would take half a man's time to care for a herd of 12 cows, but a herd of 12 good cows would pay a man at the rate of $100 a month for labor.

MANUFACTURING: Progress and success do not come by chance, but by effort and by paying. Cooperative creameries came after farmers studied their value and were willing to pay for them. Better butter was made when the buttermakers took a course in the Minnesota Dairy School and learned the science of manufacturing butter.

MARKETING: Manufacturers in the business world control tse marketing of their product. They set the price, control the supply, and advertise to make their product favorably known. Farmers are applying the same methods thru co-operative marketing of their products.

STORY FROM THE START

Capt. Lion Fellowes' American merchant ship is sunk by a British frigate off Portugal in the War of 1812. The crew surrenders, but Fellowes reaches shore exhausted. His life is saved by an English-speaking girl.

The slim woman stooped over Fellowes, and he looked up into a pair of velvet brown eyes, dewy and compassionate, set in a lovely, oval face.

"Poor soul," she exclaimed in English, innocent of accent. "We saw your misfortune from the castle. But why did you remain on your ship?"

"I don't strike," he whispered.

A shadow mantled her olive features.

"All the world at war, and America must thrust her infant into the melee! But we'll not talk politics, sir. I'll have you carried to Padre Antonio's."

Four of the hairy peasants, very uneasy and deferential now, lifted the American upon their shoulders, and tramped off at a fast gait up a winding path in a vent of the cliffs. But Fellowes knew little of that climb, for the rough handling tortured his battered frame, and most of the way he was unconscious.

When he came to, he was lying in a huge, canopied bed, warm and drowsy. His wet clothes had been removed, and liniment applied to his cuts and bruises. Moving tentatively under his covers, feet rustled among the rushes, and the girl of the mantilla appeared beside him, no longer cloaked, her figure showing to advantage in a gown of woolen stuff as brown as her eyes. At her elbow was the enormous woman, who had attended her on the beach, a creature so stout as to seem a caricature.

The girl dropped a hand on Fellowes' forehead.

"Ah, your fever is going," she said approvingly. "You'll do well, sir."

"Thanks to you," he murmured.

"No, no! Thanks to yourself—and such aid as we could render."

"I'd have had—knife in throat—but for you," he insisted.

"We won't speak of that. Our peasants, alas, are little better than savages. But there is something I must say to you, sir. I am obliged to leave this place, Perenha, in the morning. There is no one here who speaks English. So, if you will tell me your wishes, I will explain them to Padre Antonio. He has the money-belt you wore, and will return it at your pleasure."

"Where do you go?" asked Fellowes.

"To Lisbon." She caught her lip in her teeth, as if regretful of the statement. "If you will be advised, sir," she hastened on, "you will journey into Spain. The British control all northern Portugal, and their authorities in Lisbon will not be partial to a shipwrecked American."

He hesitated.

"I think I'll try Lisbon."

"As you choose." She was almost haughty. "But you will require rest and refreshment in the meantime. The Padre understands.

"Now you must sleep, sir."

"But I haven't thanked you! And I want—"

"'Tis late, and I rise with the sun. Good-night, sir—God fetch you safe home."

She was gone. And fretful as he was, a power stronger than his will pushed shut his leaden eyelids.

He awoke to a stamping and shouting in the street below. Mindful of his rescuer's departure, he managed to stumble out of bed, and hobble to a window. His curiosity was rewarded. A stately coach, six stalwart Andalusian mules hitched to the pole, stood at the priest's door, that functionary, himself, in the act of ushering the two women into it.

The girl leaned from the coach window to give some parting message, and called to the coachman perched high on his box. The ponderous vehicle swayed off, the mules' hoofs clacking daintily. Fellowes, more weary than he had reckoned, was content to crawl back to bed. He must discover who she was, he told himself, yielding to sleep again. The Padre should know.

He was awakened by the priest tapping his shoulder, proffering a cup of chocolate.

The chocolate put new strength in him, spurred him to inquire the girl's identity. But he could make nothing of the Padre's Portuguese, the Padre looked blank at his English, and the most Fellowes could gather was that a certain Donna Cara was a great lady, a good lady, if somewhat unusual in her conduct. He supposed the girl to be Donna Cara, but he wasn't by any means sure of it. All he could be assured of was that she had gone to Lisbon. Very well, he'd go there. And the third day of his stay he announced his intention. The Padre seemed disturbed, but after considerable debate, he shrugged his shoulders, produced Fellowes' money-belt and a hairy-face named Rojas, who looked like a bandit and passed for a muleteer.

The fourth day Fellowes rode forth of the village. At the top of the narrow street, he halted to look back for the last time. His eyes were upon the rocks where the Sachem had gone to her doom, a doom so complete that the only vestiges remaining of the brig were scattered bits of wreckage lodged in inaccessible crannies of the cliffs.

CHAPTER II

A Licensed Trader

The diligence from Beja deposited Fellowes at the ferry-landing opposite Lisbon. The river was crowded with shipping, and his heart leaped in his throat at sight of the legend. "True Bounty, New York," printed across the broad stern of a ship. His mind harked overseas, to the sprawling town on the tip of Manhattan island, a little, red-brick town, bowered in tulip trees and chestnuts, that he'd left a year and a half ago, and to the sleepy village he called home, huddled between the pine forests of Long Island and the Great South bay.

He wondered how an American ship, flying American colors—the Stars and Stripes flaunted proudly from the mizzen yardarm, as if in defiance of the White Ensign displayed by the King's ships—could lie here in the Tagus. How had she gotten in? And more important, how would she get out? A small boat lay alongside her, and as he watched, a lank stoop-shouldered man descended into it. Saul Chater! No wonder he'd been thinking of Babylon. And Chater's presence meant the True Bounty was an Inglepin ship. Ben Inglepin's, of course. Ben had married a Portuguese, and very naturally, specialized in the Peninsula trade. In that, as in everything else, differing from Joshua.

Fellowes chuckled as he remembered the whimsical feud between the brothers. They had been enemies from the day the firm of Inglepin Brothers was dissolved in '93, after Joshua had declared General Washington was plotting to return the country to the British Crown. Joshua believed in Jefferson; Ben cursed him for a demagogue. Joshua considered Washington had been "that libertine, Hamilton's, puppet"; Ben all but said his prayers to the General's memory.

The ferry bumped into the quay, and noticing Chater's boat heading for the same landing-steps, Fellowes decided to wait, and speak to the True Bounty's master. Chater was the last American he would have chosen to meet in a foreign land, but the fellow was an American, and what was more, came from Babylon. Fellowes recalled the day the New Englander had appeared in the village, buyer of the farmlands across Sampawam's creek from the Manor. Fellowes' father, whose ancestors had held the Manor since the conquest from the Dutch, insisted the village must give Chater fair treatment.

Fellowes knew his father had come to detest the man, but he, himself, had seen little of Chater. For he had taken to the sea in the hope of replenishing the family fortunes, undermined by years of ill-paid diplomatic service, and particularly since his father's death, was seldom at home. Now, he reflected, there'd be nothing to lure him from Babylon, unless he could obtain a privateer. All his spare funds had gone in the wreck.

He banished such thoughts, however, as Chater shambled up the landing-steps. It would never do to let the New Englander suspect the extent of his misfortunes. So, proffering his hand, he mustered a cheery smile.

"How are you, Captain Chater?"

"Well, well, naow," Chater whinnied nasally. "If 'taint Lion Fellowes! 'Last I heard, ye'd sailed for Canton."

"I was wrecked a couple of weeks ago," Fellowes explained. "Driven ashore by a British frigate, south in Algarve."

"That was pesky luck. Ye got to be careful in wartime, Cap'n Fellowes."

"D'you call this careful?"

Small Farms in India

"India is essentially a country of small holdings," says Sir Verney Lovett, author of "India." "In many parts of the country the land is held mainly by families of peasant properties. In other parts the bulk of the land is owned by large properties, but even in such cases the tenant in chief has generally been protected by a series of rent acts which not only insure him fixity of tenure during his lifetime but often grant the right of descent of the tenure to his heirs on his death. The disruptive tendencies of the Hindu and Mohammedan laws have profoundly affected agricultural economy through encouraging the minute subdivision of land." Fragmentation is the rule.

On or Off?

Tom, age five, was getting ready for bed when he suddenly asked: "Dad, must I get scaled with my shoes on or off?"

Dad didn't seem to understand what it was all about so Tom explained:

"The nurse comes to kindergarten to scale us and I don't know whether I should keep my shoes on or take them off."

LONE WHITE WOLF BAFFLES HUNTERS

Killer at Large Despite Big Bounty Offered.

Stanford, Mont.—Swift as lightning, cunning as a fox, a bold killer white wolf has become the terror of the Little Belt mountains. Ranchers fear him, and assisted by federal hunters, have constantly sought to remove this big white beast that decreases their herds. But the $700 bounty offered by the Stockmen's association for the white wolf's hide remains unclaimed.

The killer wolf has been seen by many. Scores of shots have been fired at him. None has found its mark.

The wolf is never close enough for a sure shot when he enters the vision of an armed rancher or hunter. But he often appears at close range to unarmed ranchers, as though flaunting his cunning.

Most of his depredations occur during the winter months, when snow makes sight of him difficult. Many hunters have remarked that the killer darts for snow patches when he encounters humans, the snow forming a white background that effectively conceals him.

The wolf has ranged at will for several years, killing cattle, colts and sheep with the ease and skill of a much larger animal. He always travels alone, and his tracks are distinguishable by their size. He is the biggest wolf in the mountains, and the only desperate killer who has managed to elude pursuers and continue his depredations over a long period.

Colts, calves and sheep are not his only prey. He kills full grown cattle with ease. His method of attack consists of swift slashing onslaughts. He hamstrings cattle until they are unable to fight or run. Then the killing is made comparatively simple.

The total loss in stock killed in the Little Belt by White Wolf is estimated to be $3,000.

Lang to Quit Job as Christ in Passion Play

Oberammergau, Bavaria. — Anton Lang is anxious to retire from the role of Christus in the decennially produced Passion play of Oberammergau.

The famous actor-glass worker added, however, that he would abide by the decision of the general committee which is to meet in September to select a cast for the 1930 performance.

Lang said he did not feel that he was growing any stronger in the interpretation of the leading role, as he wished to do from decade to decade, and that perhaps a younger man should have the role.

"It is a great physical strain to hang from the cross for a half hour at a time," he declared. "One must also not forget that weather changes, which can take place within a few hours in a mountain village, demand a healthy constitution for acting on an open air stage.

"The thin tricot which is worn during the crucifixion scene affords little protection against chills or colds, particularly when the performances last into the raw days of autumn."

57-Ton Girder Carried 230 Feet by Flood

Butte, Mont.—Northern Pacific railway engineers, digging in the mud of a usually dry creek bed in eastern Montana, unearthed a treasure of $13,265. Several weeks ago, a cloudburst carried away a Northern Pacific bridge. Crews discovered that an 87-foot 57½ ton steel girder had completely disappeared.

Several days ago engineers saw the rough outline of the missing girder, 230 feet below the bridge site. It was two feet below the surface of the mud, completely buried. The girder represented a cost of $13,265.

Colony Plan Fails

Vienna.—After 147 years in Russia, the Swedish colony Alt-Schwendorf, has been forced to return to Sweden on account of hunger and poverty, it become known here recently.

Red Used as Danger Signal in Ages Past

Milwaukee. — Evidence that red paint may have been used to denote danger 25,000 years ago was noticed in Niaux cave, 50 miles from Toulouse, France, by George A. West, president of the Milwaukee public museum board, who has returned from a tour of Italy, France and England.

Vessels of red paint were found on the floors when the cave first came to public notice in 1906 and, wherever there was a dangerous passage, red dots, made, according to French scientists, by fingers of Cro-Magnons, inhabitants of the cave, were printed on the walls, according to Mr. West.

Mr. West said that he found evidence of four glacial periods in southwestern France, the last two of which coincided with two Wisconsin glaciers.

In the first period, estimated at about 500,000 years ago, the lowest type of culture is represented, Mr. West said. The only tools people then seemed to possess were broken rocks with jagged ends and rough edges.

GIANT SEAPLANE TO TRY OCEAN FLIGHT

100-Passenger German Ship Has 12 Motors.

Friedrichshafen.—Dox, the great 12-engined, all-steel, 100-passenger flying boat which was launched July 13 and carried out her flying tests above Lake Constance to the full satisfaction of her designers, is to attempt a transatlantic crossing for the sole purpose of trying out her capacities.

This announcement by Doctor Dornier, the builder, marks a complete change in plans, for only a month ago he declared roundly that he did not intend a regular Atlantic service. He wanted no sensations at all, but a serviceable long distance flying boat that would allow economic transport with the maximum of safety.

Hitherto aircraft has not been able to carry any appreciable cargo, as the fuel in itself was a sufficient load. The designers of Dox hope to demonstrate by means of a transatlantic voyage that a new era has dawned.

Carries Large Staff.

A great feature of the new flying boat is the unusually large technical staff that she is to carry on her flights.

There will be two pilots who will do nothing but obey the captain's orders and an engineer and four mechanics who will do nothing but supervise the motors. This means that the weight of responsibility is shared in much the same manner as it is on board ship.

Apart from this feature there is, of course, the unusual size of the Dox and its general capacity over the old type aircraft. On her trial flight, while traveling at less than sixty miles an hour, the engines were able to raise the 34 tons of her weight into the air with the greatest ease after a takeoff run of only 500 yards.

On the first morning after the giant machine was released from the huge sheds where she had been under construction for the better part of two and a half years she rose from the water three times without a hitch. A storm of cheering rose from the banks of all the lakeside towns as the boat swept past.

Housewives Cheer.

Housewives and burghers left their homes and gazed in wonderment across the waters. Among the spectators were Dr. Hugo Eckener, Zeppelin navigator and builder, and Commander Rosendahl of the United States navy.

The Dox aircraft was built by Doctor Dornier in the greatest secrecy. At no time were plans or details of construction made public in view of the fact that many of the foremost aeronautical experts of Germany, France and England had made the prediction that a ship of the kind proposed by Doctor Dornier could never rise from the water with a load of 34 tons. The ship carried that weight on her trial flight, and when she goes on the long trip across the Atlantic she is going to be loaded with 11 additional tons of weight in passengers and baggage, making a total of 45 tons.

Twenty expert engineers were on board during the trial flights, but no passengers were carried. Doctor Dornier wanted to take no chances.

Although cabins are ready on the Dox for 40 passengers, sleeping accommodation for 100 can be arranged. The twelve engines can develop a total of 6,000 horsepower and the interest from a technical point of view resides in the fact that each of the motors can be treated individually without affecting its neighbors.

The flying boat measures 150 feet from tip to tail. Its wings are 10 feet thick and 150 feet from wing tip to wing tip. Six great turrets project from each wing and each turret is equipped with two engines of 500 horsepower.

Expert Finds X-Rays Help in Plant Growth

Berkeley, Calif.—Prof. T. H. Goodspeed of the University of California claims discovering a new function of the X-ray—possibly of enormous commercial value in connection with plant life. He believes certain living plants, notably tobacco plants, may have their entire character and even their sex changed by being treated with X-rays or the gamma rays of radium.

Goodspeed found that certain dosages of the mysterious rays brought about changes in the shape, size and gender of plants, and that these changes were transmitted to the children and grandchildren, so-called, of the treated plants.

The commercial possibilities of the discovery rest in the likelihood that other plants may be treated with similar results—that fruit growers, for example, might breed superplants through the influence of the rays, and that these plants might transmit their unusual and superior qualities to their descendants.

TOY TRAIN GOES AT VOCAL ORDER

Amazing Demonstration of New Televox Device.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—After extensive laboratory treatment, R. J. Wensley, engineer for the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company, has evolved a big brother to Televox who understands the English language.

No longer will it be necessary to whistle into the telephone connected to the device to make it obey commands. One merely speaks and the device obeys.

The televox at its first public demonstration, was connected to a toy electric train and executives, representing the principal railroads of the United States and manufacturers of railroad equipment who witnessed the device perform its tricks, were treated to a demonstration in new fangled railroading which amazed them.

"Go," commanded Mr. Wensley, and the toy electric train, on a long table, started forward.

"Stop," he ordered and the train halted.

"Back up," was the next command and the train, consisting of a locomotive, box car, flat car and caboose obediently reversed itself.

All of the starting, stopping and reversing was done through spoken commands. The commands were transmitted to the engine cab through a telephone connected to electrical apparatus that resembled a radio amplifier. Sound selective relays, vacuum tube amplifiers, rectox units and other electrical devices capable of directing action by voice are included in the equipment.

The unit contains electrical apparatus far more sensitive to sound than the human ear and these sound waves control the mechanism. It is stated that more practical applications of the device will come with further experimentation.

Washington and Aids Suddenly Turn Firemen

Florence, Colo.—Page Paul Revere so that he can ride forth and warn the community that "J. A. Patterson's wood shed is on fire. To the hose cart, hurry."

Whether Paul Revere did the riding and shouting remains to the imagination, but George Washington, powdered wig, short breeches, silk stockings and all, attended the fire and helped extinguish the blaze.

At George's right and left, fire hoses playing upon the blaze, stood such celebrities as Col. Henry Lee, John Marshall, Col. Edward Randolph and Gen. Nathaniel Green.

As a play, "John Brent," was being given at the high school, the fire gong sounded. George Washington and his colleagues being members of the volunteer firemen, heard duty call, and ran out to fight the fire.

Wheel of Old Olympia One of Academy "Sights"

Annapolis, Md. — When Admiral Dewey's flagship, the U. S. S. Olympia, ordered sold recently by a navy board of survey, is junked or turned over to a historical society, one part of it will be missing. The wheel of the ship is now one of the first sights which greet prebes entering the United States Naval academy here.

It was removed from the Olympia 30 years ago and is now just inside one of the entrances to the receiving ship of the academy, the Reina Mercedes, a Spanish ship captured during the Spanish-American war and anchored here.

Magnets on Truck Pick Up 120 Pounds of Iron

Ashland, Mo.—One hundred and twenty pounds of iron were picked up by magnets attached to a highway department truck between this place and Cedar City in an experiment by officials of the highway department.

Included in the junk were nails, wire, staples, screws, bolts and small parts of automobiles, pieces of a size likely to cause punctures to automobile tires.

Expert Dog Golf Ball Thief Sought by Cops

New York.—Mashie, the bulldog snatcher of golf balls, is still at large, according to the Kingsbridge police.

He is wanted on two charges, stealing golf balls from players on the Van Cortlandt Park golf course, and resisting an officer.

Patrolman Joseph Cleary located the hideout of the dog recently. He arrested Frank Conroy, no address, who was with Mashie and had several tooth-marked golf balls in his pocket.

Mashie, urged on by Conroy, sank several teeth into Cleary's leg and fled. He had been stealing golf balls from players for over a month before police were called in to put a stop to it.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescriptional product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

Gang Member Is Taken for a Ride

Retaliation Seen in Slaying of Leader in Detroit Purple Mob.

Detroit, Mich.—Irving Shapiro, known to the police for the last three years as an extortionist, racketeer and one of the mainstays of the Purple gang, recently died the gangster's death.

The twenty-five-year-old gunman, expensively and tastefully dressed as was his wont, was "taken for a ride," four bullets fired into his head and neck, and his body dumped into the street as a speeding automobile roared away from the scene.

The shots awakened Albert Rose, 2464 Taylor avenue. As he ran to the front windows of his home, he heard the roar of the killers' car. Directly across the street, slumped beneath the glare of a street light, he saw a body. Rose called the police.

Victim Is Dead.

The gunmen's victim was dead when the police arrived and the body was removed to the morgue. There it was found all the labels and marks of identification had been cut from the victim's clothing. The pockets contained only a $50 bill, a watch and chain. The body was identified as that of Shapiro by Detective Russell McCarty, of the identification bureau, by fingerprints.

The death car was not sighted by Rose. He said it had disappeared when he reached the windows. Edward W. Brown, a private residential policeman, who was patroling his beat along Taylor avenue, told the police he saw the car. It was a large gray touring car, he said, and turned south on La Salle boulevard after going east on Taylor. He could not determine how many men the car contained.

Two theories are advanced by the police in explanation of the slaying. Inspector Fred W. Frahm, head of the homicide squad, believes Shapiro's death may have been in retaliation for the slaying of Sammy Abramson, professional bondsman, last April. Inspector Henry J. Garvin, head of the crime and bomb squad, believes Shapiro attempted to extort money from some one who proved himself "too hard" to be intimidated.

Shapiro's body was left in the street not far from where Abramson formerly lived. At the time Abramson was slain his home was at 2058 Taylor avenue. To Inspector Frahm this is not a mere coincidence. He believes the scene of Shapiro's slaying was chosen because of its proximity to the former Abramson residence.

Plan Memorial to Mary Ann Rutledge

Des Moines.—A campaign to raise funds for a memorial to mark the grave of Mary Ann Rutledge, mother of Abraham Lincoln's sweetheart, Ann Rutledge, is now being considered by the historical, memorial and art department of the state of Iowa.

Her body lies in an almost forgotten cemetery in Jefferson county, Iowa, near the small town of Birmingham. It was here that she spent the last years of her life, a life made sad by the unhappy romance of her daughter.

Abramson's body was found in an alley at the rear of 6717 Strong avenue April 17. He had been a bootlegger before he became a professional bondsman. He had been arrested 14 times but convicted only once, that being on a federal charge of violating the prohibition law.

Inspector Garvin's theory of the slaying is based on information he said he had received concerning the recent activities of Shapiro and two other members of the Purple gang. Inspector Garvin says these three have been "cutting themselves in" on the profits of blindpigs and recently have been trying to revive the "protection" racket in connection with cleaning and dyeing establishments.

Beginning of the End.

He believes the other two men will be "the next to go." Other police officers expressed the same opinion.

Inspector Garvin sees in the slaying of Shapiro and the recent conviction of four other members of the Purple gang in federal court on charges of conspiracy to violate the prohibition law the "beginning of the end for the Purple gang."

The Purple gang got its name from a Hastings street merchant who called a small group of youths in Detroit's Ghetto "purple" eleven years ago meaning they were prone to commit petty crimes of one sort and another.

The Purple gang that came to be known and feared in Detroit within the last three years was not wholly composed of the group of Hastings street hoodlums, however.

The first act attributed to the Purple gang was the triple slaying of Frank Wright, Reuben Cohen and Joseph Bloom, in March, 1926, in the Miraflores apartments, 106 Alexandrine avenue east. They were mowed down by machine gun fire. It was the first time machine guns had been used in Detroit crimes.

Aged Man Gets Wish to Sleep and Never Waken

Evansville, Ind.—"I want to sleep and never waken," William H. Blackman, ninety-four years old, told his daughter, Mrs. William B. Wheaton, and shortly afterwards closed his eyes and realized his wish. He was the last surviving member of a band of English settlers who settled here in the early fifties. On the same ship came Elizabeth Sutton, whom he later married.

ALIENS SMUGGLED BY AIR TAKEN BY BORDER PATROL

Traffic at Detroit Discouraged by Activity of Immigration Service.

Detroit, Mich.—A party of aliens, including an eight-months-old baby, who were smuggled into this country by airplane were apprehended recently by the Roseville police, and five others who tried the more common method of crossing the Detroit river by boat were picked up by the immigration border patrol.

Peter Kommer, twenty-six years old, his wife, Magdalene, twenty-two years old, and their infant daughter, Anna, were arrested by Patrolmen John Lanox and Theodore Mesle of Roseville, as they crouched by the side of the road at Gratiot airport waiting for a man to come for them in an automobile. They are Rumanians.

They had just been landed at the airport by a gray airplane. The pilot landed in the far corner of the field, and after directing the aliens where to go he reported to the office of the field that he had made a forced landing because of a broken gas line.

The Roseville police turned the family over to John L. Zurbrick, district director of immigration. The father is being held at the Wayne county jail, and the mother and daughter at the Women's Detention home. It is the first time in two years that a case of airplane alien smuggling has been discovered, according to the officials. Members of the immigration border patrol are seeking the pilot, who abandoned his plane.

The other five aliens, also Rumanians, were apprehended by Immigration Inspectors R. S. Beaver, John Farnell, and Christopher J. Leason on the shore of the Huron river near United States highway No. 25.

The inspectors saw a boat with several passengers in the river, and later found two men hiding in the weeds along the bank, who said they were waiting for two other men to come for them in a rowboat. The boat and its two occupants were located later, and the wife of one of the men was discovered asleep in an automobile parked nearby.

David Balo, one of the men found hiding in the weeds, was arrested as the alleged smuggler. The others were Joseph Kozolo and his wife, Catherine, John Kosti, and Julius Pavelo.

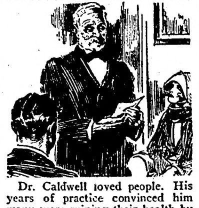
FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION



Dr. Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases; old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste. All drugstores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

News Gathering Both Simple and Effective

Life in the highly sophisticated South Sea Isles is by no means as newsless as one might hazard by measuring the number of miles separating them from Fleet street (writes a globe-trotting correspondent). The Papeete planters have bestowed the pleasing name of coconut wireless on the means by which their wives and daughters keep up with all the news that really matters. Every sun-up the native maids meet at the market-place and pool the previous day's domestic log while they do the forthcoming day's shopping. These reporters bring back their gleanings to the housewife news editors, who publish to their yawning spouses, over the breakfast coffee, "All the News That's Fit to Print" (and a great deal that isn't). In consequence, what every family does not know about every other family can positively be sprawled across the head of a pin.

School Observatory Is New Idea in Education

The city of Oakland, Calif., maintains a unique institution as a part of its public school system. It is Chabot observatory, a modern astronomical and meteorological observatory situated on Leona heights in the suburbs of that city. It is maintained for popular instruction in the sciences relating to weather, climate, and the stars. It is also affiliated with the United States Weather bureau and with the college. It has a large telescope through which visitors are permitted to view the wonders of the heavens, and it is free and open to the public day and night. In addition to the school children of Oakland, many thousands of tourists call at the observatory every year. It is, perhaps, the only institution of its kind in the United States maintained as part of the municipal public school system.

If you want to spend your money in a foolish way buy from the city peddlers.

There are now seven dredges working on the new highway near Middle River and Stratrcona. They are rushing the work along so as to have the new road completed some time in Oct.

The threshing rigs in this vicinity are now on the homeward run according to reports reaching this office.

The weather has been just right for the work and it has all went kind of easy and fast.

There is no reason in heaven or on earth why the weeds on the skating rink should not be cut and the place fixed up a little bit now! As it stands now full of weeds with ripe seeds blowing all over town, one might think we were trying to see how much foul seeds could be grown on those few lots the rink covers.

We believe that it would be a good idea for the Village Council and the local school board to make it a ruling that all the school children walk on the sidewalk in going to and coming from the school house.

The way they scatter out in coming up the street, makes it bad for anyone to drive as you don't know which way they are going to jump.

The Great Northern put in the walk on the north side of the street from the Reierson corner to the creamery for to walk on, and, we hope that the folks will realize that it is safer for their children there than on the street.

BANKERS IN NATIONAL MOVE FOR UNIFORM FINANCIAL PRACTICES

Would Promote Greater Consistency Among All the State Laws in Respect to Banking Conditions—Uniformity of Practice and Understanding Will Make for Greater Convenience, Efficiency and Safety for All Business.

By S. J. HIGH
President State Bank Division, American Bankers Association

S. J. HIGH

RAPID interchange of business and the quick transportation of goods in the United States, coupled with almost instantaneous means of inter-communication by telegraph, telephone and wireless, have welded the country into an economic unit. The nation is not, in a business sense, conducting its affairs in water-tight compartments, as in a measure it did in the days of slow travel and remote places, but styles, methods, commodities and business practices flow freely today in all directions. Therefore it is desirable that finance, trade and industry throughout the country operate along generally uniform, or at least consistent lines, so that a contract or an agreement or obligation in connection with business transactions shall mean virtually the same thing in all parts of the country. Particularly necessary in this connection is the establishment of uniform financial and banking practices so as to facilitate the flow of trade along accepted and understood lines.

Banking in the United States is recognized as a semi-public type of business and is therefore subject to laws to define the scope and character of its activities. These laws at present set up a great diversity of conditions under which banking is conducted in various parts of the country since they come from both state and federal authorities. The national banks are all chartered by the federal government and therefore operate on the same lines in every state of the Union, but there is no such regularity in respect to the conditions under which the state banks chartered by the respective forty-eight states must conduct their business. All state banking codes, while they have similarities, also have many great dissimilarities in respect both to the national bank laws and the banking laws covering state bank operations in other jurisdictions.

Bankers Move for Uniform Laws

The State Bank Division of the American Bankers Association, which latter includes in its membership banks of all descriptions throughout the country subject to all the variations of state and federal banking laws, is committed to the effort to bring about greater consistency and uniformity among the statutes of all these various jurisdictions. This body is conducting a vigorous nation-wide campaign urging that active steps be taken to secure greater co-ordination in banking legislation, more equitable conditions and more uniformly efficient public supervision of banks in the several states.

The organization is particularly concerned with fostering this movement bring about more uniformly desirable conditions throughout the United States in respect to the public supervision of banking institutions by the state banking departments. It is on record as favoring the policy that the important office of state bank commissioner should be kept as free from entangling partisan politics as the judiciary itself and should be completely detached from all other functions of state government.

It is also on record as favoring the policy that the tenure of office of state bank commissioners should be made more secure and lasting than is now the case in many state jurisdictions and that this important public officer be granted sufficient compensation and discretionary power so that the office shall attract and retain the services of men of outstanding executive ability and successful banking experience.

It is also a part of this policy that the bank commissioner's ability to serve well should be strengthened by providing him with adequate forces of bank examiners, selected on the basis of merit from men having the requisite qualifications of honesty, ability, training and banking knowledge to carry out the duties of their offices on the highest plane of usefulness to the public as well as to banking.

The Trend of State Laws

The Association's State Bank Division has recently concluded a nation-wide survey of state banking legislation and conditions and in general has discovered a definite trend along the following lines:

There is a distinct tendency among the states to raise the minimum capital required for banking institutions to $25,000 and also to give the bank commissioners or the banking boards sole power as to the granting of charters for new banks, thus enabling them to use discretion as to the need or desirability of added banking facilities or the fitness of the organizers to enter the banking field. In this connection many states are creating banking boards to act in an advisory capacity with the state bank commissioners.

There has also been observed a tendency to increase the compensation of the bank commissioners and to lengthen their terms of office and to give them power to appoint necessary deputies and examiners so as to build up an adequate force to carry out their responsibilities and duties. An important augmentation of the powers of bank commissioners in some states is found in laws giving them complete charge of insolvent banks and their liquidation as distinguished from more costly liquidation through the courts.

In the Public Interest

Distinctly in the public interest are laws prohibiting or limiting an officer or director of a bank from borrowing from his own bank unless his collateral security is approved by a majority of the board of directors of the bank. Also there is recent legislation noted providing for closer supervision and regulation of building and loan associations, credit unions, finance companies and private banks.

In some states measures have been enacted broadening the field for investment of funds of savings banks and trust companies, which have materially enhanced the service that these institutions can render, particularly in the way of co-operation with their customers in personal financial management. Another type of legislation, important especially to banking in view of the frequent efforts to defraud banks, is that which makes the issuance of worthless checks a misdemeanor with specific penalties.

The State Bank Division of the American Bankers Association endorses in the fullest degree in principle the development of banking laws along the foregoing lines and is actively engaged in fostering the spread of such legislation wherever its services are considered useful both to banking and to the public. Uniformly sound banking institutions and practices, together with common methods and understanding, will materially add to the convenience, efficiency and safety of business in serving the well-being of the public in all parts of the nation, especially in those transactions involving dealings between different localities.

AMERICA LEADS THE WORLD IN SAVINGS

The past year saw the greatest gains in savings in a single twelve-month ever recorded in the United States, bringing the total savings deposits in banks to over $28,400,000,000 on June 30, 1928, held in more than 53,000,000 individual accounts, it is reported by the American Bankers Association. These are the biggest figures in this field shown by any country in the world.

These figures are indicative of prosperity more general than any time since the business depression of 1920 the report declares. Only three states failed to show a gain and the 1928 volume of savings constituted an increase of more than $2,327,000,000 above the 1927 figure. The gain per inhabitant for 1928 over 1927 was $17 and the gain in number of savings depositors was 2,496,079, an increase of 5.2% as against a growth in the population of the country of 1.2%.

The gain in savings per inhabitant in New England and the Middle Atlantic states over the previous year was $36. These groups of states, with 29.9% of the population of the United States and 52.8% of the total savings deposits, have the largest savings rate $461 per inhabitant, of any area in the world. The per capita savings for the United States as a whole this year stands at $237 as compared with $220 last year.

"An acre of alfalfa for every cow in Howard County, Iowa," is the slogan adopted by the county bankers association there after watching several hundred thousand dollars go out of their county last winter for feed.

Sale of School and Other State Lands

State of Minnesota,
State Auditor's Office,
St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 21, 1929

Notice is hereby given that on October 18, 1929, at 10 o'clock a. m., in the office of the county auditor, at Warren, Marshall county, in the State of Minnesota, I will offer for sale certain unsold state lands, and also those state lands which have reverted to the state by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Terms of Sale:

Fifteen per cent of the purchase price is payable to the County Treasurer at the time of sale. The unpaid balance is payable at any time in whole or in part within forty years from the date of sale, interest rate of four per cent per annum, due on June 1st, of each year; provided, that the interest can be paid at any time within the interest year without penalty. In effect, this means that the interest money may be paid any time between June first and May thirty-first without penalty.

The appraised value of timber when so stated, must be paid in full at the time of sale.

All mineral rights are reserved to the State by the laws of the State.

All lands are sold subject to any and all ditch taxes thereon.

Lands on which the interest has become delinquent may be redeemed at any time up to the hour of sale or before resale, to the actual purchaser. Such lands are listed under the caption: "Delinquent Lands."

No person can purchase more than 320 acres of land, provided, however, that State lands purchased previous to 1905 are not charged against such purchaser.

Agents acting for purchasers must furnish affidavit of authority.

Appraisers' report showing quality and kind of soil are on file in this office.

Lists giving legal descriptions of lands to be offered may be obtained of the State Auditor at St. Paul, and of the County Auditor at the county seat.

RAY P. CHASE,
State Auditor.

Short Lessons in Dairying

LESSON 75

PRODUCTION: Records kept by Experiment Stations show that it requires 150 hours a year to care for a dairy cow, or 15 days of 10 hours each. This includes feeding, milking, separating, hauling cream to creamery, cleaning out barn, etc. This is the average time in caring for a herd of cows. At this rate it would take half a man's time to care for a herd of 12 cows, but a herd of 12 good cows would pay a man at the rate of $100 a month for labor.

MANUFACTURING: Progress and success do not come by chance, but by effort and by paying. Cooperative creameries came after farmers studied their value and were willing to pay for them. Better butter was made when the buttermakers took a course in the Minnesota Dairy School and learned the science of manufacturing butter.

MARKETING: Manufacturers in the business world control tse marketing of their product. They set the price, control the supply, and advertise to make their product favorably known. Farmers are applying the same methods thru co-operative marketing of their products.

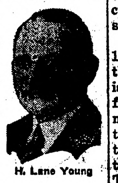
THE BANK'S PART IN THE FARM PROBLEM

By H. LANE YOUNG
Member American Bankers Association Agricultural Commission



H. Lane Young

ONE of the most discussed and least understood questions regarding the farmer's problems is the part the bank has played, or is to play, in financing the farmer. The basis of co-operation between the two, however, is a very simple one.

Both sides are subject to criticism for the condition that exists today. The major share of the blame rests on those banks that have failed through disregarding fundamental principles in loaning other people's money, that have encouraged the farmer to expect bank loans without first putting his business on the earning basis which would justify a bank to lend him money.

One of the underlying reasons for the failure of so many country banks has been the existence of too many banks. With the limited business of the commmunity divided among too many banks it was impossible for them to make enough money to justify the employment of officers with the proper ability to manage the bank successfully. Then the scramble for business was so hard that good judgment and foresight were forgotten in granting loans, with the resultant failure of the weaker institutions.

In the future, banks are not going to loan the money of their depositors without the kind of security that can be immediately realized upon in case the loan is not paid, or unless the applicant presents a sound and successful record of business operation—whether that business be manufacturing, merchandising, or farming.

Farming-Banking Interdependent

This is a perfectly obvious attitude, because country banking cannot be successfully and profitably carried on unless farming is successfully and profitably operated—the two businesses are dependent upon each other. There is no longer any question that the time has arrived for these interdependent businesses to reach a common ground of understanding of the requirements that both must meet for their mutual welfare.

There is no doubt but what the future prosperity of the farmer and the basis of cooperation between banker and farmer is the intelligent diversification of crops. It is necessary, however, to have the right conception of diversification.

The mistake that many farmers have made in attempting to diversify has been to invest too much money, time and land in a new and untried crop—sometimes a hazardous crop, or one for which no immediate market has been developed, resulting in a loss of the initial effort and discouragement of future efforts on a more conservative basis.

Disregarding the primary and essential principle of farming—namely, increasing earnings by decreasing the cost of production through the practice of building up soil by crop rotation and intensive cultivation, is responsible for a large share of the farmers' trouble today.

First Cow Testing Association

The first cow-testing association in Minnesota, said to be the largest one in the world—and a remarkably successful one, too—was the Pioneer association in Freeborn county, organized by Theodore Sexauer, formerly director of the department of agriculture of the Albert Lea high school.

It started testing December 1, 1910, when Mr. Sexauer said that "if there is anything that is going to separate the sheep from the goats in the dairy business, it is these testing associations. The men who go into them and stay in are going to be the real dairymen of the future. The men who stay out will go out of the dairy business, because they cannot compete with the men who use their brains in their daily work."

The success of the Pioneer association has been due largely to the patient, concientious and careful work of one man, the tester, H. C. McMurray, who is in many ways ideally constituted for this work.

When he resigned on January 1, 1924 to enter the banking business in the North Side State bank of Albert Lea it was necessary to organize several smaller associations with a tester in each one, to do the work that this tireless apostle of better dairying has been doing for years.

"Mac" and his faithful steed, "Max," which he drove all over the county until the latter's death, were familiar figures there for years. "Mac" himself estimates that they traveled a distance greater than the circumference of the earth, or 25,000 miles in their journeys to and fro together for 11 years. They developed this unique organization devoted to finding out each dairy cow's real wort, by testing her performances at the pail, weighing her milk and eliminating the unfit by sending all the "boarder cows" to the butcher's block.

McMurray, however, did the remarkable stunt of testing about 80 herds a month, for the past several years, taking all the samples himself, and keeping all the records.

The above article was taken from an issue of the Minneapolis Tribune published Feb. 10, 1924.

The past two years McMurray has been making his home here at Holt with his brother, W. F. McMurray, with whom he has half interest in one of the finest Holstein herds in this part of the state.

School Notice

We wish to urge all who plan to enter our high school for the coming year and who have not already done so, to enroll in the very near future. We also wish to emphasize the importance of regular attendence. It is necessary for progress in school.

Kindly note what the Department of Education has to say regarding this matter. Page 24, Standards for Graded Elementary and Secondary Schools dated August 1929. "The time element is essential in determining high school credit. Therefore, whether instruction is given in public or private summer schools or elsewhere, to ignore the time element in the granting of credits, for work other than review, is destructive of high school standards."

By Order of the School Board.

School Boys Wreck Train

The Gas-Electric train running thru here was derailed at Greenbush Saturday evening on its way back to Crookston. Three school boys up there had broke two switch stand locks and had left the two switches half open in the east end of the Greenbush yards. No one was hurt in the wreck but, several dollars worth of damage was done to the train.

The three boys were arrested on Monday.

NOTICE!

Notice is hereby given that we will take charge of all livestock found running on NW Quarter of Section 23, Town of East Valley, and all costs and damages will have to be settled for before the stock is released to the owner.

SCRUB BULL IS HALED TO COURT

Placed on Trial for Hindering Development and Prosperity of Dairy Industry.

Indicted for robbery, larceny, and a few other such charges, Scrub Bull went on trial for his life at Laurel, Mississippi, recently. It seems that for some time people had suspicions that Mr. Bull was hindering the right and lawful development of the dairy industry, thereby "maliciously and wilfully lowering production and decreasing profits in the dairy business," says the Bulletin of the American Bankers Association Agricultural Commission in commenting on the case.

This, it says, was the first trial of its kind ever held in that section and was attended by several hundred people. The jury, representing every vocation within the boundaries of the Laurel trade territory, rendered a unanimous verdict of "guilty." The death sentence was pronounced, "but during the night, before the sentence could be carried out, friends of the convict secretly spirited him away, and he has not been seen since."

The arraignment came during the Milk Products Show sponsored by the banks of Laurel. People attending the show had the opportunity of also attending the bull's "trial" and went away firmly convinced of the seriousness of lax and out-of-date methods in the pursuit of dairying. The purposes of both the Milk Products Show and the trial were threefold, namely: to develop public sentiment for more and better Jerseys; to foster a more cooperative spirit for dairying and livestock growing, and to promote tick eradication.

The banks of Laurel entered into a cooperative arrangement in their efforts for fostering agricultural development and successful farming in the community, offering $2,165 as premiums to the outstanding farm workers throughout the territory during 1929. An instructive booklet has been issued, showing the agricultural activity of the banks, together with announcements of contests for farmers, exhibits in the bank lobbies and prizes offered.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

>
> Capt. Lion Fellowes' American merchant ship is sunk by a British frigate off Portugal in the War of 1812. The crew surrenders, but Fellowes reaches shore exhausted. His life is saved by an English-speaking girl, who conceals her identity. She is about to set out for Lisbon. Fellowes goes to Lisbon where he meets an acquaintance, Capt. Chater of the American ship True Bounty.

—3—

Fellowes waved toward the British armada that surrounded the True Bounty. Chater cackled derisively.

"Ye see, I sail on license. I got me a dockyment, all signed and sealed, with Admiral Warren's name on it, licensin' the True Bounty for a v'yage to Portygal."

"You mean the British Admiral Warren? Who commands at Halifax?"

"That's him."

"But—but—you're trading with the enemy!"

"Oh, no, we ain't," Chater denied, cackling again. "Portygal's a neutral. And there's a better market for flour and naval stores right here in Lisbon than anywhere else these days."

"Flour for Wellington's army and naval stores for the British fleet," Fellowes commented grimly.

Chater's nutcracker features took on a bilious tinge.

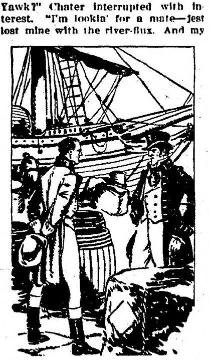
"What's that to me?" he whinnied. "Or a sight more folks to home? This dratted war's ruinin' trade, and 'taint so pop'lar as the Democrats could wish for."

"There are worse fates than loss of trade to befall a nation," Fellowes returned. "I owe the British for the destruction of my ship, and I can't forget I'm at war with them."

"A h—l of a fine war!" mocked Chater. "What can we do ag'n a hundred and twenty sail of the line?"

"We can fight. We did in '76. When I get home—"

"'Calc'latin' on a passage for Noo Yawk?" Chater interrupted with interest. "I'm lookin' for a mate—jest lost mine with the river-flux. And my second's too young to take his place. Got some of the owner's family aft. 'Make it wuth yer while, Cap'n Fellowes."



"But I Ain't Got Time to Stand Gormin' Here, With a New Mate to Find, and Sailin' Tomorrer."

"Thank you, but I'd prefer not," Fellowes declined. "Can you tell me where the American consul has his office?"

"A sight of good he'll do ye," jeered Chater. And with a touch of irritation: "Hornswoggle me, if I can see haow ye reason things out. If any feller oughter be Federalist, ye'd oughter be. Wasn't ye born in London? Didn't yer pa send ye to school in England?"

"That why I'm a Democrat, and a believer in American trade rights," Fellowes replied good naturedly. "It wasn't my fault my father happened to be consul in London, or that I was at Eton."

"Well, naow, I'd say ye ain't made the most of it," gloomed Chater. "But I ain't got time to stand gormin' here, with a new mate to find, and sailin' tomorrer."

More discouraged than he liked to admit, Fellowes watched the drab figure of the True Bounty's master slouch away through the gaudy throng of mariners on the quay.

Dispiritedly, without any conscious purpose, he suffered himself to drift in the tide of humanity that swirled along the quays, and presently emerged in Black Horse square, center of state and military activities. Over one of the palaces waved the Cross of St. George. A loquacious sergeant informed him Lord Wellington was down from the front in Spain, and for want of something else to do, Fellowes loitered, curious to see the Englishman who had bested Napoleon's bravest marshals.

A knot of officers emerged from the doorway, a flutter of feminine garments in their midst. Fellowes stood paralyzed with astonishment as he recognized a hulking black specter of a woman. The duenna! And behind two glittering aides, leaning on the arm of a lean-beaked officer in dress uniform, his rescuer, herself. She looked lovelier than ever, her oval face framed in the folds of the mantilla, her eyes upcast gravely to meet the gaze of her escort. No ordinary jackal of the Staff, this man, his voice, curt as a drillmaster's, carrying to where Fellowes stood.

"—get your people lined up, ma'am," he was saying. "Ministers are cordial, but they'll require a definite petition, d'ye see? No sense in this American war. We've got troubles enough without it. 'Sure there's nothing else we can do for you?"

"Oh, yes, my lord. 'Tis for us to do, now, though I fear 'twill take a year, at the least."

"'Can't be helped," he returned brusquely. "Worth waiting for, if you pull it off." He saluted mechanically. "'Servant, ma'am. Remember me to your father."

In the crowd Fellowes lost sight of the two women, and several minutes passed before he could elude the sentries and pursue them. He had forgotten his immediate troubles. His one concern was to speak to this mysterious girl.

Despite his efforts, he failed to overtake his quarry until they were entering Lahmeyer's hotel, in the Lago da Sao Paulo.

"Ma'am! oh, ma'am," he panted desperately. "May I speak with you?"

And he flushed at the inanity of his address, conscious of the travel-stains acquired in the long journey by diligence, and the abominable fit of the clothes he had bought in Beja to replace the shrunken garments in which he had been washed ashore.

The girl in the golden-yellow cloak stared at him blankly, then, as his identity dawned upon her, a slow smile spread across the smooth olive of her features.

"'Tis our American sailor! But, sir, you have no right to be here. I bade Padre Antonio keep you all of a week."

"I left against his urgence," Fellowes answered, the friendly reproof putting him at his ease. "But there was no need for me to linger—my carcass is a tough one."

"That we may allow, sir. Yet, still, you were rash to come to Lisbon. If the British Secret Service fail to arrest you, there are the press-gangs. We must take thought to this." Her brow puckered. "If you'd tell me who you are—"

A familiar nasal voice interrupted her.

"Well, well, naow! I didn't figger on ye fixin' to git me a new mate, Miss Cara. But 'taint no use—leastways he turned me daown."

Fellowes eyed Chater with a distaste as pronounced as his bewilderment at the discovery of a connection between his rescuer and the master of the True Bounty, but the girl cried eagerly:

"Do you know this gentleman, Captain Chater?"

"'Calc'late I do," drawled Chater. "'Make ye acquainted with Cap'n Lion Fellowes. 'Neighbor of mine, home to Babylon."

"How fortunate," she exclaimed. "This is the first time I've seen Captain Chater since we came north, so he hasn't heard of our meeting at Perenha, Captain Fellowes. And I didn't know, then, that Mr. Penner, his mate, had died. But if I had—" she hesitated—"I couldn't offer a strange American passage in the True Bounty."

"What have you to do with the True Bounty?" asked Fellowes. "I thought you English."

She laughed.

"I'm Cara Inglepin. You must know my father, if you are from New York, but I have been little in America—especially since my mother died, for my grandfather, the old Marques, was failing, and he would have me by him, wherever he went. And now that he is dead—" her voice sobered—"there are reasons I must fly home as fast as I may."

"Do you sail on the True Bounty?"

"By tomorrow's tide, nor may we wait. So if you'd pocket your pride, and step down a rank for the voyage, 'twould serve me beyond measure, sir."

Fish Armed With Knives

A "physician" fish, accoutered with razor-edged lances which are used to wound, however, instead of heal, has been listed with the Smithsonian institution's vast Philippine collection. It is known as the surgeon fish. On each side of its tail are sharp pieces of cartilage, so keen that they are veritable knives. In an instant they can be made to stand out from the body for a ripping blow. A slight slap from the tail is sufficient to cut a man's hand to the bone. Many of the lances are poisoned. The surgeon fish is confined to the tropical parts of the Indian and Pacific oceans.

Beauty Made by Dust

Dust and sand contribute to the beauty of the skies. The infinitesimally short waves of sunlight your pour down merely as white light but for the diminutive dust motes that get in the way and sift out the component colors, from violet to red. And even when the colors are brought into existence they would stream on through the atmosphere and into space if the all but invisible water droplets did not huddle together and hold them for the world to see.—National Geographic Society Bulletin.

Vandals Raid Cliff Homes in Arizona

Phoenix, Ariz.—Because no provision was made for protection of the Tonto cliff dwellings when they were set aside as a national monument by act of congress, vandals virtually are razing the prehistoric abode of a people of 500 to 5,000 years ago.

Among the 300 or more daily visitors there are so many souvenir hunters that a portion of one wall has been carried away and parts of the floor and ceiling have been torn out. The Tonto, tucked way high up on the side of a canyon wall, was found by a prospector 57 years ago. It was made of cypress poles, which the ancient builders had carried over the hills, probably from the vicinity of Miami or Globe.

105 POUND WOMAN BEATS AUTO THIEF

Moral: Don't Steal a Red Headed Lady's Car.

Cleveland, Ohio.—A red headed woman who weighs only 105 pounds recently walloped an automobile thief over the head with a club, and subsequently recovered her husband's automobile.

Eugene R. Chable left his car in front of his gasoline station. Ten minutes later it wasn't there. He called his home because he couldn't remember the license number, and he knew he'd have to give that to police.

In the midst of the conversation Mrs. Chable heard a familiar automobile horn on the street. She dashed out in time to see her husband's car speeding down the avenue.

She ran right after it and caught up when the car stopped several streets down for a red traffic light.

"What are you doing with my car?" she asked the driver.

"Aw, go on, this ain't your car," said the driver.

Providence had placed a club within easy reach. Mrs. Chable snatched it up, and the first blow landed on the auto thief's wrist. The second landed on his arm. And the third—as powerful blow as 105 pounds and red hair could develop—landed nicely on the head of the tough young man.

He jumped out of the car and fled, but not before some one who had been attracted by the commotion had recognized him. This witness gave his name to Mrs. Chable, who relayed it to police, who visited the man's home and brought him in.

Baby Born at Roadside During Motor Car Tour

Spanish Fork, Utah.—Pioneers of Utah who were born while the prairie schooners of their parents were en route to the golden west have accepted into their ranks a youngster born under similar conditions, but at the side of an automobile instead of in an old schooner.

Mr. and Mrs. Lorenzo Olsen of Ruth, Nev., were traveling across the desert from Delta to Eureka when the stork overtook them. A husky son was born by the side of the road without medical attention of any kind.

Brought to Spanish Fork as soon as they could be moved, the mother and baby were given medical care and both are "doing nicely."

Find Flaws in Metal With Use of X-Ray

Cleveland.—How to peek through ten inches of metal to determine if it has any flaws will be explained to delegates to the first national metal congress, to be held here September 9 to 13.

This explanation will be offered by R. S. Archer, metallurgist here for the Aluminum Company of America in charge of the X-ray department, who is to present a paper to the congress on radiography.

The congress, with its national metal exposition, is being sponsored by America's five leading metal technical societies, headed by the American Society for Steel Treating.

Old Castle With Ghost Tradition Is for Sale

London.—Hurstmonceux castle, famous as one of the most beautiful buildings in the south of England, has been offered for sale here. It is a mellow red brick stronghold, built by Sir Roger Fiennes in 1440.

The castle is part of the estate of Col. Claude Lowther, who spent $1,000,000 on its restoration. The majestic entrance, with towers 84 feet high on either side, has been much admired.

Tradition tells of a ghost who haunts the castle in the guise of a drummer.

Wire-Haired Terrier Still Londoners' Favorite Dog

London.—The fad for small and freak dogs is not eating into the popularity of the wire-haired terrier, which is still the most popular canine in England. Registration figures of the Kennel club show that in April the wire-haired terrier led his nearest competitor, the Cocker spaniel, by nearly 300. Alsatians rank third in number of registrations.

Bishop All Right, but Oh, You Cannibal King!

The late Avery Hopwood, the brilliant playwright, believed in the younger generation. He said one day at a luncheon in his New York apartment:

"The younger generation is innocent. It talks rough, but it is innocent at heart. It reminds me of the two little girls.

The first little girl was on her way to school when she met the old bishop.

"'Haven't you got a kiss for me, my child?' he said.

"So she pursed up her little mouth and stood on tiptoe and the old bishop kissed her.

"When she got to school she bragged to her schoolmates:

"'I just kissed a bishop.'

"'Oh, pshaw, that ain't nothin',' said a second little girl. 'Why, at the masquerade ball at the Ocean hotel I kissed a black cannibal king.'"

Rich From "Hot Dogs"

The making and selling of "hot dogs" is fast becoming one of America's big industries. This year, it is estimated, 400,000,000 pounds of these toothsome sausages will be fed to the American public in sandwiches. One stand at Coney Island last year averaged $15,000 every week-end through the season. Then the proprietor, known as "Hot Dog Joe," took his family to Italy, where they lived in affluence through the winter.

OLD DOCTOR'S IDEA IS BIG HELP TO ELDERLY PEOPLE

In 1885, Dr. Caldwell made a discovery for which elderly people the world over praise him today!

Years of practice convinced him that many people were endangering their health by a careless choice of laxatives. So he began a search for a harmless prescription which would be thoroughly effective, yet would neither gripe nor form any habit. At last he found it.

Over and over he wrote it, when he found people bilious, headachy, out of sorts, weak or feverish; with coated tongue, bad breath, no appetite or energy. It relieved the most obstinate cases, and yet was gentle with women, children and elderly people.

Today, this same famous, effective prescription, known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is the world's most popular laxative. It may be obtained from any drugstore

Sweet Lemons Promised

Sweet lemons may take their place beside oranges and plums as a table delicacy. A new variety, as large as grapefruit and sweet enough to eat without sugar, has been developed by growers in Porto Rico.

Another unusual quality of the fruit is a sweet, penetrating odor. The lemons are being used as perfume in linen closets on the island. Cultivators of the new fruit claim that the flavor lasts as long as two months.

First Poet Laureate

The first poet laureate of England was John Kay, who was appointed to that position by Edward IV, according to Arvine's Encyclopedia. The only composition that Kay left to posterity is a prose English translation of a Latin history of the siege of Rhodes. In the title, addressed to King Edward, Kay styled himself "hys humble poet laureate."—New York Times.

MANY LIVES DEPEND UPON OLD RECLUSE

He Guards the Big Bridge Over Pecos River.

Del Rio, Texas.—Far from civilization, unearthed and unsung, lives an aged man upon whose shoulders rests the responsibility for the safety of thousands of lives.

In the solitude of a gorge which rivals the Grand canyon in size and beauty, J. R. Hutchins daily performs his role of guardian of the third highest bridge in the world.

Flinging its arms of steel across the Pecos river, about four miles from its junction with the Rio Grande, the Pecos high bridge daily carries the weight of a dozen Southern Pacific trains with their loads of hundreds of human beings.

To "Old Bob" Hutchins is entrusted the task of seeing that this lofty highway of steel remains in perfect condition and that neither the ravages of time nor the vicissitudes of climate detract from the rigidity of the structure.

Hutchins' house is tucked away among the rocks on the side of the canyon. Below him is the Pecos, 150 feet wide, impetuous in its rushing flight toward the Rio Grande; above him stretches his "pet," 1,521 feet long and 321 feet above the river bed.

The bridge, one of the greatest engineering feats of the West, is inspected daily. With an ear trained to catch the slightest variation in sound that comes as a train rumbles over the structure and an eye that can discern the slightest deflection of the huge towers, Hutchins guards this expensive piece of property.

"Old Bob" has been at his post for five years. He has watched the Pecos rise until it lapped at the very doorstep of his humble dwelling. He has pulled elephantine 100-pound catfish from the water and caught alligator garfish weighing over 200 pounds.

Cistern Is Dried Up by Bolt of Lightning

Indianapolis, Ind.—Can a flash of lightning dry up a cistern containing 95 barrels of water?

Local weather bureau officials faced that question after Police Sergeant George R. Liese started to clean out his cistern and found that it was dry, although a test showed there were no leaks in it.

Lightning a few weeks ago struck Liese's house and witnesses said that there was a blinding flash, the whole back yard near the cistern appearing to be filled with a huge, hissing ball of fire.

Weather bureau officials said that cases of tornadoes sucking up open wells are on record, but that they never heard of lightning evaporating a cistern.

Big Porcelain Memorial Dedicated in Germany

Meissen, Germany.—The world's greatest porcelain monument, which has taken eight years to complete, has just been dedicated in the seven hundred-year-old Nicolai church in this city, where white porcelain was invented. The walls of the church are covered with 1,800 porcelain plates of citizens of Meissen killed during the World war. These plates are grouped around 30 over-life-sized porcelain figures of mourning mothers and eight giant porcelain figures holding the eternal death watch. Between altar and nave there is a large porcelain arch. In a special shrine, made also of porcelain, a golden book with records of the dead soldiers is kept.

Ring Long Lost Found in Nest of Magpie

Great Falls, Mont.—A ring lost five years ago was found securely imbedded in a magpie's nest here.

Roy Johnson lost the ring in 1924 while feeding cattle on a ranch 12 miles south of Belt. The ring was found the other day by Norman Johnson, ten, when the boy tore down a magpies' nest, built in the willow roof of an old cow shed. Twigs and grass were so closely woven around and through the ring that the lad had difficulty extricating the shining piece of gold.

Mountain Boy Never Heard of Lindbergh

Washington.—At least one of President Hoover's neighbors in the mountain tops of the Blue Ridge range has been busy finding out about one Charles A. Lindbergh, who visited the Rapidan camp over a week end.

"Lindy's in camp," a member of the President's party told a ten-year-old barefooted lad who trudged past them on the mountain trail.

"Who?" demanded the youngster.

"Lindbergh's back there," said the President's guest, pointing down the mountain in the direction of the camp.

"How old is your horse?" was the young mountaineer's response.

"Have you ever been up in an airplane?" the visitor asked.

"No; have you?"

"No."

"Has the President?"

"No."

"Has Lindbergh?" the youth demanded eagerly.

SUDBURY PLANS TO HONOR GEN. DAWES

Party for the Ambassador in Ancestral Home.

London.—In 1635 a stone mason named William Dawes left his home in Sudbury, Suffolk, and set sail for America. In 1929 one of his descendants, Gen. Charles Gates Dawes, left his home in America and set sail for England as American ambassador to the court of St. James.

Sudbury desires to recognize officially the fact that the Dawes family prospered in America, and that the most notable member of the family has come back to England as official representative of the United States government. So Sudbury is to give a party for General Dawes.

The ceremony is scheduled for early in October. The freedom of the borough will be bestowed upon the American ambassador. There will be a public luncheon, followed by a special meeting of the council. The charming little town will do full justice to the occasion. The achievements of the Dawes family will be fittingly honored.

To America in 1635.

William Dawes was a boy of fifteen when he boarded the ship Planter on April 6, 1635, and started West to found the American branch of the Dawes family. His father, William Dawes, Sr., had gone out to America in 1628 with Governor Winthrop, founder of Boston and Salem, but returned the following year. He and his wife returned on the Ambrose and a son was born on the voyage. The boy was christened Ambrose.

General Dawes would like to know more about the first William Dawes, for there is no trace of him in the family history except for the record of his round trip to the New world. A great deal more is known about young William, founder of the American family. "He settled first in Braintree, Mass.," General Dawes said in tracing the family history, "where he married Susanna Mills of that place. The marriage took place about 1641, when William was twenty-one years of age. A son, named in the records, Ambrose, after his ship-born uncle, was born in the same year.

Baronetcy Now Extinct.

"In the year 1652 we find William Dawes settled in Boston, where he built for himself a family mansion, on the east side of a lane afterwards called 'Sudbury street.' Five generations of our family lived in this house until it was pulled down in 1775. William Dawes died in the year 1703, at the good old age of eighty-three, leaving numerous descendants, from one of whom I am descended."

A privately printed record of the Dawes family, published in Boston in 1876, was compiled by Henry W. Holland for the New England Historical and Genealogical society. General Dawes owns this work, which contains portraits and a complete genealogical tree. The American branch of the Dawes family has always claimed the right to the arms of Abraham Dawes, of Putney, who suffered under Cromwell and was made a baronet by Charles II at the restoration. The baronetcy is now extinct. The shield bears three swans on a bend in a field of six battle axes. The crest is a dragon supported by a battle ax.

Effort at Hypnotism Cause of Pistol Fight

Paris.—Keep your parlor tricks for parties is the moral of a trial at the Seine Assizes.

Louis Duc, a market employee, was in company in a cafe one evening with two men friends and a woman. One of the friends, Barnlard by name, offered to hypnotize Duc, who seems to have agreed. The amateur hypnotist tried hard, but with no success. Then Duc grew angry. He rushed out of the cafe, ran all the way home, seized a revolver, returned to the cafe and bang, bang, bang! They took the would-be hypnotist, his friend and the other man to a hospital and Duc to jail.

But all's well that ends well, even in court. The wounded victims told judge and jury they were friends again, so the kind-hearted judge handed out two years' suspended sentence, Duc going free at once.

Devilfish Battle Ends With All but One Dead

Hamilton, Bermuda.—The age-old drama of the survival of the fittest is being enacted in the big octopi tank of the Bermuda aquarium. What Curator Louis L. Mowbray calls "the summer grouch" has caused the octopi to war upon each other. Only one battered devilfish remains out of what was said to be the finest collection in the world.

During the winter months the octopi live in peace and harmony, but as the water grows warmer the big octopi become quarrelsome and a submarine battle royal follows.

The specimen boat of the aquarium is scouring the reefs and coral bays for more examples of the fish.

Gophers Put Phone System Out of Business

Manteca, Calif. — An underground lead telephone cable was found to have been punctured allowing water to leak in and cause a "short" that put the system out of commission. It was determined that gophers had gnawed through the lead cable, the imprints of the rodents' teeth being clearly outlined.

PIRACY IN PACIFIC CURBED BY MEXICO

Gulf of California Folk Are Brought to Time.

Mexico City.—Piracy and other contraband activities in Mexican Pacific waters, principally in the Gulf of California, are decreasing, due to measures taken by the government, according to Jose Lorenzo Sepulveda, director of fisheries.

Fishermen in the border waters have long been engaged in such activities as smuggling and pilfering and have been a source of worry to authorities, whom they have in many cases openly defied. Their acts have at times resulted in violence. They were organized to combat all opposition to their operations.

One piracy ring was known to have its head in Los Angeles, according to "Excelsior." Leaders of the ring sent large groups of men to the border waters in quest of loot. They carried fishing nets, less for the purpose of catching fish than as blinds.

Affairs came to a head recently, however, when President Emilio Portes Gil ordered Senor Sepulveda to "clean up" the California gulf. As a result of the activities of the director of fisheries, piracy in the Mexican Pacific is now noticeably declining.

With the revocation of alleged discriminatory tariff regulations governing fisheries in the Mexican waters, legal enterprises are springing up in place of fisheries which heretofore have operated without license.

Shark and Sunfish Fight Off Jersey Ends in Net

Beach Haven, N. J.—A 200-pound sunfish and a shark five times its size, battled to a draw three miles off the coast here recently, before the struggle ended when both flopped into a net spread by the crew of a fishing boat.

The fishermen were out after their usual catch when they saw water spout high and the flash of great, silvery fins. When the fish were hauled in the shark had lost none of its belligerency and snapped its great jaws at the fishermen, while the sunfish still was full of fight, although badly mauled.

The shark was 12 feet long and its mouth measured 21 inches across. It was allowed to remain on the beach. Known as a basking shark, it is the second of its kind to be captured here in the last five years, and only two others of the species ever have been caught between Maine and Florida.

Schoolhouse Builders Must Spare Old Tree

Attica, N. Y.—A stately elm, known to be at least one hundred and fifty years old and possibly two hundred, has given the trustees of School District No. 9 in this township a problem.

The trustees recently acquired a parcel of land on which the old elm stands for the site of a modern schoolhouse. When the deed was conveyed to the school district, it was found to contain a clause stipulating that the old tree must not be cut down. Plans are being made to erect the new building so as not to harm the tree, which has seen Attica grow since its founding in 1806. The "Old Brick Schoolhouse" has served the district for 77 years.

Most Modern Harpoon Electrocutes Whales

London.—A new method of harpooning whales is more certain of the kill and less painless to the animal. A metal line is attached to the harpoon, and when it is imbedded in the victim a strong current is turned on, electrocuting the whale.

Swift Justice Here

Greenwood, Miss.—Mayor John Ashcraft claims the unusual record of sitting as judge in police court on 2,222 cases in the two years he has been mayor of Greenwood. There are no jail waits, as the mayor-judge hears the case immediately after the arrest and pronounces sentence. Most cases have been disposed of within an hour after the arrest, he claims.

Sees Humans With Short, Frail Legs

London.—Human beings of a thousand years hence may have very short, frail legs and tiny feet with only four toes, according to the belief of Dr. Howard Somervell, the explorer of Mount Everest.

Somervell, who was talking to Kendal school boys, declared that in this age of automobiles, air liners, trains and buses, human beings are actually forgetting to use their legs.

F. C. Jones, vice president of the Surrey Walking club, however, entirely disagrees with Doctor Somervell. He declares that there are thousands more people walking in Britain right now than ever before, and although thousands are going along on wheels there are just as many on foot.

"The point is this," said Jones: "there are fewer people who sit at home today than there were a few years ago. Besides walking in the ordinary sense, walking as a sport and recreation is increasingly popular."

Traffic cop gets summons

Even he can't get away with it

"DON'T try to put anything over on Nature," is the way a cop would express it. "Sooner or later she'll get you. Give you a ticket and lay you up in a place where you'd rather not be. Even cops can't get away with it. Like everyone else, if they don't pay attention to the warnings they get, a summons that lands them in the doctor's office.

"What the doctor advises is Nujol. Says Nujol will regulate you just like you regulate traffic. Keep things from getting in a jam. And the doctor is right. Just ask the healthiest men on the Force. If they need Nujol—with all the exercise they get—what about the fellows that roll by in their cars?

"Just take a tip from me. You may have the best intentions in the world. But everybody gets tied up at times. Nature can't always take care of things without help.

"Our Medical Chief tells me that Nujol isn't a medicine. It contains absolutely nothing in the way of medicine or drugs. It's simply a pure natural substance (perfected by the Nujol Laboratories, 2 Park Avenue, New York), that keeps things functioning at all times as Nature intends them to. Normally. Regularly. It not only keeps an excess of body poisons from forming (we all have them), but aids their removal.

"Start Nujol today. It won't cost you much—not more than the price of some smokes. Worth a try, isn't it?"

You'll find Nujol at all drugstores. Sold only in sealed packages. Get some on your way home today.

Over Their Heads

Editor Webster True of the Smithsonian Institution was talking about the failure of a novel.

"It was a good novel," he said—"too good for the critics and the people. It's failure reminds me of an anecdote.

"Kreisler, the great violinist, played one evening at a reception in New York. A new, rich oil speculator from Oklahoma talked rather loudly during the performance and his hostess, to shut the man up, whispered in his ear:

"'What do you think of Kreisler's playing? Isn't it superb?

"He sniffed and answered, louder than ever:

"'Oh, I've heard the fiddle afore.'"

Recent experiments in India demonstrate that white paper of good quality can be made from bamboo at reasonable cost.

Wishing to Be Unselfish

One of the faculty members of Indiana university entertained relatives recently with a chicken dinner. Mrs. Blank explained to her children that they must let their cousins have the liver that day and not be selfish. Returning to the kitchen after a brief absence, she met her five-year-old daughter coming out of the kitchen. Later she missed the liver and asking the child about it received the astonishing reply:

"Yes, mother, I ate it so I wouldn't be selfish."—Indianapolis News.

Sale of School and Other State Lands

State of Minnesota,
State Auditor's Office,
St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 21, 1929

Notice is hereby given that on October 18, 1929, at 10 o'clock a. m., in the office of the county auditor, at Warren, Marshall county, in the State of Minnesota, I will offer for sale certain unsold state lands and also those state lands which have reverted to the state by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Terms of Sale:

Fifteen per cent of the purchase price is payable to the County Treasurer at the time of sale. The unpaid balance is payable at any time in whole or in part within forty years from the date of sale, interest rate of four per cent per annum, due on June 1st, of each year; provided, that the interest can be paid at any time within the interest year without penalty. In effect, this means that the interest money may be paid any time between June first and May thirty-first without penalty.

The appraised value of timber when so stated, must be paid in full at the time of sale.

All mineral rights are reserved to the State by the laws of the State.

All lands are sold subject to any and all ditch taxes thereon.

Lands on which the interest has become delinquent may be redeemed at any time up to the hour of sale or before resale, to the actual purchaser. Such lands are listed under the caption:

"Delinquent Lands."

No person can purchase more than 320 acres of land, provided, however, that State lands purchased previous to 1905 are not charged against such purchaser.

Agents acting for purchasers must furnish affidavit of authority.

Appraisers' report showing quality and kind of soil are on file in this office.

Lists giving legal descriptions of lands to be offered may be obtained of the State Auditor at St. Paul, and of the County Auditor at the county seat.

Okra Emigrates

FORMERLY people who lived in the North could get okra only in its dried form. Now the canning of okra, whole or sliced, has virtually supplanted the older form, and the Northerner as well as the Southerner can get this distinctive vegetable in cans.

How to Cook Okra

The small pod of the okra is the part that is eaten, and its mild flavor is much liked by its devotees. Creole cooks whose flair for good cooking is too well known to need proclaiming are famous for their gumbo (or okra) soups. Okra is especially good in combinations with tomatoes. Or, for a more substantial dish, okra can be combined with cheese to make:

Okra au Gratin: Cut the okra from a No. 2 can in thin slices. Make a cheese sauce by melting three tablespoons butter, stirring in three tablespoons flour, one-half teaspoon salt and one-eighth teaspoon pepper, and adding one and one-half cups milk gradually, stirring constantly. Cook until smooth and thick, still stirring contantly. Then add three-fourths cup grated cheese and stir until melted. Combine with the okra, and pour into individual buttered ramekins or custard cups. Cover with crumbs and brown in a hot oven. This recipe will serve six people.

Canned okra may be well seasoned with salt and pepper and served by itself as a dinner vegetable. Sometime when you are feeling tired of all the ordinary vegetables, why not try this unusual vegetable? It will undoubtedly be a welcome addition to your food repertoire.*

LESSON 76

PRODUCTION: There is an old saying that "it is easy to figure out how to make money, but hard to make it." This saying is only half true, and that is that "it is hard to make money." It is not easy to figure out how to make money. There in not one man in a thousand who figures out how to make money in farming as carefully as is necessary to make money on a real paying basis. How few figure out a real profitable system, of marketing, which is certainly a part of making money in farming.

MANUFACTURING: It took years of debate before creamery men agreed that cream should be pasteurized for buttermaking, but now no creamery worthy of the name makes butter without pasteurizing. It took years of debate before creameries agreed to grade cream, pay for it on the basis of its quality,

The San Juan Islands

RISING out of the blue depths of Puget sound and snuggling closely to the northwest corner of our United States is a group of islands of varying sizes and shapes known as the San Juan islands.

There are about 171 islands in this group—not counting those less than ten feet across. About one-third are inhabited. The entire assemblage constitutes an archipelago of exceptional wildness and charm which has been described as "The most beautiful and bewitching group of islands from a scenic standpoint in all the world, with a climate so equable on account of the warm Japan current that outdoor life can be enjoyed the winter long."

For many years these islands were the subject of a grave dispute between England and this country. They were finally assigned to the United States—nature apparently having intended that it be so, there seemingly being a closer relation since de Haro strait which separates them from Vancouver island is from 100 to 300 fathoms deep, whereas Rosario strait which separates them from the state of Washington is but 50 fathoms deep.

Their combined area approximates 200 square miles. The state of Washington promptly dignified this new possession by declaring it a county unto itself and perpetrated the name by calling it San Juan county.

Cruising among these islands one finds the note of nature everywhere dominant. As the boat plows through the maze of passageways and the panorama of forested points, bold headlines, beach nooks and quiet coves unfolds, he readily concedes this to be both a unique and a fascinating region.

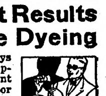
For Best Results in Home Dyeing



You can always give richer, deeper, more brilliant colors to faded or out-of-style dresses, hose, coats, draperies, etc., with Diamond Dyes. And the colors stay in through wear and washing!

Here's the reason. Diamond Dyes contain the highest quality anilines money can buy. And it's the anilines that count! They are the very life of dyes.

Plenty of pure anilines make Diamond Dyes easy to use. They go on evenly without spotting or streaking. Try them next time and see why authorities recommend them; why millions of women will use no other dyes.

You get Diamond Dyes for the same price as ordinary dyes; 15c, at any drug store.

STORY FROM THE START

Capt. Lion Fellowes' American merchant ship is sunk by a British frigate off Portugal in the War of 1812. The crew surrenders, but Fellowes reaches shore exhausted. His life is saved by an English-speaking girl, who conceals her identity. She is about to set out for Lisbon. Fellowes goes to Lisbon where he meets an acquaintance, Capt. Chater of the American ship True Bounty, who offers him a berth as a mate, but knowing Chater is disloyal in trading with the enemy, he refuses. He meets the girl who saved his life, Cara Inglepin, daughter of the owner of True Bounty.

The frankness of her appeal flattered him, but he looked uncomfortably at Chater, who snickered:

"Heh! Heh! He daon't hold with sailin' on license, Miss Cara. A rabid Democrat, and him brought up in England!"

"Sanctissima!" Miss Inglepin bit her lip. "I might have remembered you preferred shipwreck to yielding to an English frigate. But this is foolishness, sir. You are not like to reach home, save it be in a licensed ship. No privateer or letter-of-marque will touch at a Peninsula port."

"There's much in what you say," Fellowes owned. "I'm loath to disoblige you, ma'am. But 'tis wartime, and I'd not care to betray my sentiments."

Miss Inglepin blushed crimson; her slim body stiffened.

"And we have no wish to 'betray you, sir," she said coldly.

"You mistake my meaning, ma'am," protested Fellowes, much perturbed. "I merely tried to make it clear that in accepting your offer I was not abandoning my own opinions."

"Naow, naow, there ain't any call to be het up over a misunderstandin'! We want a mate, and we want Cap'n Fellowes for the job—and he won't need to complain over his treatment." Chater struck in.

"But Captain Fellowes must decide for himself," insisted Miss Inglepin. "And he must decide in light of the fact—"

"Daon't say nothin' ye'd be sorry for, Miss Cara," warned Chater.

"—in light of the fact," she continued, ignoring the interruption, "that we are Federalists, heart-and-soul, and utterly opposed to this wicked, senseless war, and its attempt to cripple Britain at a time when she is fighting for the freedom of mankind against the vilest tyrant in history."

The vehemence of her declaration took Fellowes' breath away, arousing in him a respect all the greater for the concern Chater displayed.

"If you feel so, ma'am, I can but applaud your honesty in admitting it," he said. "Shall we elect to forget politics? And will it please you that I accept Captain Chater's offer?"

She swallowed hard, a suspicion of tears in her eyes.

"It will not please me," she answered. "And yet—and yet—you had best come. Good afternoon, sir. Captain Chater will escort you aboard."

And she swept regally into the hotel, the monstrous attendant waddling at her heels. Chater whinnied placatingly:

"Naow, naow! You daon't want to set too much store by wimmin's talk 'Has a lot on her mind, Miss Cara has. Fust off, her ma died. And then the war came, and her pa sent for her. And when she come back here her grandpa, he up and died. Fine old feller. Markess da Perenha."

"But what did she mean by saying it didn't please her for me to ship with you? And then saying I must come?"

Chater performed a very creditable leer.

"'Easy to see ye ain't had much to do with young wimmin, friend. They talk all 'round the clock, I tell ye. And Miss Cara's sp'iled a mite. Her pa jest dotes on her, and her ma's family are grand folks. 'Heap o' money comin' to her." He cackled furtively. "Portygee money's as good as any, heh? Yes, sirree. Ben Inglepin, he knaowed what he was doin' when he married Donna Rosa."

"I don't care what she has," snapped Fellowes, "unless it's a better disposition. Shall we go off to the ship? I ought to learn something of my duties, if we sail tomorrow."

"That's what I call a proper spirit," fawned Chater. "We'll get on rust rate, Cap'n Fellowes."

* * * * * * *

A stout craft, and well-found, the True Bounty. The crew were of a piece with their captain, dour New Englanders and Long Islanders from "Daown East," arrant Federalists to a man. Without a word of politics being uttered in his hearing, Fellowes understood that he was alone in his opinion, spiritually isolated from the ship's company. Nor could all Chater's oily civility dispel his instinctive distrust of his skipper. A distrust which was accentuated—perhaps unfairly, he admitted secretly—by his uneasiness over Clara Inglepin's attitude.

She had as good as told him she was disloyal. But then, he argued with himself, the candor of her declaration was an earnest of essential honesty. As for her visit to Wellington, that might conceivably be dismissed as in connection with her grandfather's affairs—or to clear up some matter of business between her father and the British authorities in the past. Yet, on the other hand, if all this was so, why had she wavered with him at the last? Why had his careless use of the word "betray" aroused such a tempest?

The True Bounty slipped out over Tagus bar, and by sunset had sunk the Rock of Lisbon under the eastern horizon. The third day of the voyage Fellowes discovered the course had been altered to fetch the ship far north of the Western islands, which, he knew, were regular ports of call for all vessels plying to and from southern Europe. Inquiry informed him the neighborhood of the islands had become a regular cruising-ground for American privateers, as they provided a base within easy striking-distance of the converging routes of the British convoys from the West Indies and South America and the lordly East Indiamen of John Company's fleet. Evidently Chater was fighting shy of his own countrymen.

Barred, as he was, from any bond of sympathy with his brother officers, it was inevitable that Fellowes should be thrown more and more in Miss Inglepin's company. And she, on her part, made no secret of her preference for the Long Islander. She was like a child in her craving for entertainment, absorbing eagerly his hoard of experiences. He painted for her fever-ridden factories of the West African coast, jungle rivers where the tom-toms throbbed the night long and slavers anchored beside stinking bar-racoons, the icy tempests that beat about the Horn, and the languorous seas beyond. For her part, she gave him glimpses of a world equally exotic, spoke of evenings in the Pavilion at Brighton when the Prince Regent was condescending, narrated anecdotes, sad and humorous, of the stuffy Portuguese court.

There was inherent in her a fine and gracious reticence. And she impressed him more and more as unqualifiedly honest. She was a normal product of the background against which usually prevented them from dictory blend of the social forces of the Old world and the New.

She was, too, a keen politician and delighted to argue with him, although she was scrupulous to treat their differences with a lightness of touch which she had been reared, a contraquarreling.

"Aye de mi," she sighed one day toward the end of the voyage. "I cannot afford to quarrel with you, sir. I should die of ennui without your company."

"What will you say of me when I am a privateersman?"

"I'll say what I think," she retorted, blushing. "But you'll not go, if I can stay you."

"You'd have me bide at home with the cravens?"

"Why—" she hesitated—"I think all men of parts will find sufficient to occupy them before another year is out. We are on the verge of great events. 'Twill have had its use, perhaps, this war. But there! My tongue is runagate."

"Do you speak of rebellion?" he pressed. "'Tis an ugly thought."

"'Tis your word, not mine," she parried. "A true Democratic word."

"No, our watchword is loyalty," he declared with feeling.

"Loyalty to what?" she mocked him. "To a pack of buckskin politicians and tavern orators."

"To an ideal—independence," he exclaimed, irritated. "But what can you know of that, who are intimate with our enemies, and think as they do? I saw you with Lord Wellington in Lisbon, heard you talking with him."

Her face blanched; the fingers by which she hung to the rigging whitened under pressure.

Louisiana Purchase

In the treaty providing for the Louisiana Purchase there was no definition of the boundaries of the territory. When the American commissioners insisted upon a definition of the extent, they were informed that the boundaries were the same as they had been when the land was in the hands of the French, that is, according to Barthier's original treaty of retrocession. It included Louisiana west of the Mississippi, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota west of the Mississippi, the Dakotas, Nebraska, Wyoming, Montana, most of Kansas, Indian Territory and Colorado east of the Rocky mountains.

Famous Building

The Mormon tabernacle in Salt Lake City is 250 feet long by 150 feet wide and 80 feet high, and seats from 6,000 to 8,000 people. Its self-supporting roof rests on pillars or buttresses of red sandstone, which are from ten to twelve feet apart in the entire circumference of the building. No nails were used in making the roof, the timbers being tied in places with cowhide and held together with wooden pegs. It was begun in 1863. In its shape the Mormon tabernacle is a perfect ellipse.

The Engine "General"

IN THE Union station at Chattanooga, railed off from the passing throng, stands a much-prized relic of the Civil war—the wood-burning engine "General," the most war-famous iron horse in this nation, its tender heaped high with cord wood which served as locomotive fuel in its day, its old-fashioned "balloon type" smoke stack, long-nosed cowcatcher and hand brakes just as they were when it rolled out of the shops at Paterson, N. J., in 1855, save for a preserving coat of paint.

The "General," built for the Western & Atlantic railroad, was destined to lead an eventful life. In April, 1862, at Big Shanty, Ga., it unexpectedly took part in a dramatic exploit when a gang of men who claimed to be Yankee refugees en route to join the Confederates but, in reality, were soldiers of the United States army in disguise, ran away with it, with the intention of burning bridges behind them and interrupting the Confederate line of communication. Overtaken, after one of the wildest and most-thrilling races in history, the "General" was abandoned. It was again under fire in the battle of Kenesaw mountain in 1864—hauling ammunition to the front and carrying wounded back to Atlanta, while shells were exploding all around it—holes made in its tender by enemy bullets being plainly visible to this day.

The "General" continued to haul trains back and forth up and down the line for years and years after the war. When it could no longer "make the grade" on schedule time, it was honorably relieved from active service and placed on display.

The Largest Fish Market

FULTON MARKET is the largest wholesale fresh fish market in the United States. It was established more than one hundred years ago and has continuously and persistently conducted business at the same location—around the foot of Fulton street, on the East river water front, below the Brooklyn bridge, in New York city.

It is said that practically every important shipper of fish has at some time forwarded his products to this market which, the records show, handled approximately 394,000,000 pounds or 19,000 carloads of fresh and frozen fish products of 106 varieties, having an aggregate value of $30,000,000, during one recent year. Eighty-two per cent of this fish arrived by railroad, as freight or express, at 16 terminals, while the remaining 18 per cent arrived on fishing vessels and motor trucks.

Although the bulk of the salt water fish came from points on the Atlantic seaboard, between and including Florida and Newfoundland, large quantities also came from North Pacific coast points and some from the Gulf of Mexico and California points. The oysters came mainly from Long Island, the shrimp from South Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico points. Most of the clams came from points along the Atlantic coast. In the main, the fresh water fish received originated in the Canadian and Great Lakes regions, but large shipments also arrived from the Mississippi river and its tributaries and other fish-producing areas in the United States.

Historic Arlington Mansion

ARLINGTON mansion, overlooking the historic Potomac river and the National Capitol from the brow of a Virginia hill and surrounded by the graves of our heroic men who lie buried in the adjoining national cemetery, is one of the best preserved and grandest old Colonial mansions in the nation, with a history all its own.

It was built in 1802 by the grandson of the widow who became Mrs. George Washington, is fronted by a massive portico lined with monstrous Doric columns, said to have been modeled after those of the Temple of Theseus at Athens and stands on ground which is part of an original grant of 6,000 acres that was traded by the governor of Virginia in 1669 for six hogsheads of tobacco.

A member of Washington's family—George Washington Parke Custis, resided here for many years. His will passed "Arlington House Estate" on to his only child who was the wife of Robert E. Lee, and it thus became the home of the great leader of the Confederates. Here it was that he penned his resignation as an officer of the United States army to accept the command of the Army of Virginia. From here it was that he moved to Richmond. The Union army commandeered Arlington and a northern general took possession. A hospital, army camp and graveyard were established on the estate. The first burial in this Union army cemetery happened to be that of a Confederate soldier who died in the hospital. The property passed onto the permanent possession of Uncle Sam in 1883.

Fails to Buy Plane; Wife Gives Him Air

Los Angeles.—When Alfred L. Barnes built air castles for the girl he wanted to marry, she listened and married him when he promised her an airplane. For six days after the marriage, she waited for the airplane. Then she declares, she found out that her husband lacked even a job. Mrs. Barnes took her grievances into Superior court and wants either an annulment of her marriage or a divorce.

CHILD SEWS HIS THUMB TO MACHINE

Six-Year-Old Held for An Hour by Needle.

Winchester, Va.—William Miller, six-year-old son of Joseph Miller, city letter carrier, sewed his thumb to a sewing machine and appeared to be dying from pain and exhaustion when released an hour later. Doctors said though his condition was precarious he probably would recover.

The child had been left asleep by his mother while she went to make a call, but soon got up and started to operate the sewing machine. The needle pierced his thumb and the bone and held him a prisoner.

Distant neighbors, who heard the child's screams for help, called Howard Taylor, of the Winchester post office force, who broke down a door and released the boy and took him to a doctor, who administered anti-tetanus serum.

About the same time young Miller was sewing his thumb to the machine his cousin, James Bott, also six, collided with an automobile while riding a bicycle and was cut about the head.

Dials Replace Snippy French Telephone Girls

Paris.—French "hello girls" are to go. Automatic telephones are to replace the temperamental Parisian "central" as fast as they can be installed.

This new move to introduce American efficiency methods into Paris will do away with one of the most typical phases of Parisian life

The French telephone girls are permitted to "talk back" if they feel that the person on the other end of the wire is "getting sassy," and the French are notorious for their volubility.

The "big business man" is completely in the operator's power and if his own tones are not sufficiently honied to suit the young woman at the central station he finds himself in a barrage of language, and called some names that are far from flattering.

Public phone booths are to be established all over the city.

Burglar's Vanity Lands Him in the County Jail

Redwood City, Calif.—The vanity of Redwood City's most persistent burglar has landed him in the county jail.

Early last week, according to his own confession, John Perez, nineteen, broke into the local Montgomery Ward branch store, taking among other pieces of wearing apparel a pair of shoes.

Not satisfied with their quality Perez returned the next night and "exchanged" the shoes, taking a more expensive pair.

However, the shoes did not quite fit, so he again returned only to find Officer Harold Fitzgerald awaiting him.

Make Secret Tests of New Diving Apparatus

Loch Long, Scotland.—Secret tests with new diving apparatus are being carried on here from the ship, Tidworth. It is believed the apparatus will enable divers to descend to hitherto unknown depths.

Although access to the ship is forbidden, it is understood several new kinds of diving suits are being used. These suits are made largely of iron instead of rubber to provide greater resistance to water pressure.

The solid iron suit has never proved successful but the new type has joints for the arms and knees and a means of signaling by electric bells.

Faithful Dog Dies for War-Deafened Master

Buffalo.—Lady, a beautiful collie dog, is dead because she refused to leave her master, a war veteran deafened in France.

Mike Convey, owner of the dog, in crossing a drawbridge, managed to get past the middle of the span before it was raised to permit a ship to pass through. The dog, which had loitered some distance back of Convey, was left on the other side. The canine jumped in an effort to reach Convey but plunged to her death when she failed to negotiate successfully the distance between the two spans.

Auto Drops 20 Feet, Car and Occupants Unhurt

Burnsville, N. C.—An automobile plunged over a 20-foot embankment here recently, without injuring either of the two occupants or breaking even a glass in the machine. W. I. Brogar, of Asheville, was the driver, and P. A. Barr, of Greensboro, was riding with him at the time

Sulphur Found in Craters

Sulphur is being spouted by volcanoes of Chile, according to Don Juan M. Golkovic, a Montenegrin prospector, who claims to have found the richest deposit of pure sulphur in the world. Estimates have placed the quantity found at more than 2,000,000 tons. It is lodged in the slopes of six volcanoes. From the mouths of the craters, about 95 per cent pure sulphur continues to flow, according to the explorer. The find is the result of 30 years of exploration by Golkovic.

FAMILY DOCTOR MADE MILLIONS OF FRIENDS

Fifteen years after his graduation, Dr. Caldwell became famous for a single prescription, which now, after forty years, is still making friends.

Today Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the world's most popular laxative. Millions of people never think of using anything else when they're constipated, headachy, bilious, feverish or weak; when breath is bad, tongue coated, or they're suffering from nausea, gas, or lack of appetite or energy.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made today according to the original formula, from herbs and other pure ingredients. It is pleasant-tasting; thorough in the most obstinate cases; gently effective for women and children. Above all, it represents a doctor's choice of what is safe for the bowels.

Find New Composition Helps in Tree Surgery

A composition somewhat like putty in its consistency has been recently found of value in filling broken or splintered woodwork. It has several advantages over putty and other materials designed for this purpose in that the woody composition may be cut, carved and treated as wood, whereas this cannot be done with putty. By some modification the same idea has been successfully applied to tree surgery. Concrete has been used for the purpose of filling cavities in trees caused by rot, but because of the constant motion of the tree trunk this has a tendency to break away from the sides of the cavity and in order to hold it in place it is necessary to insert metal strips. The wood composition does not do this and really acts to a great degree like the wood of the tree trunk, contracting and expanding in the same manner, so that it is quite durable. The material was that used by a Philadelphia tree surgeon who gave the new filler a long and severe test before making any announcement of the discovery.

Overclothed for Tropics

When it is hot in Singapore it's hot without any maybe, and when a Chinaman appears on the streets all bundled up in torrid weather there must be a reason. So thought the police when they investigated and found that the Chinaman was wearing nine suits of clothes while the thermometer continued to climb. Displaying the best Chinese brand of stoicism the man was arrested and charged with "fraudulent possession of clothing."

"HAMSTERS" PUZZLE STEAMSHIP AGENTS

They Prove to Be Rodents Peculiar to China.

Shanghai.—A telegram forecasting the arrival of 300 hamsters for shipment to Penang recently disrupted the equanimity of the Dollar Line steamship offices in Shanghai.

The message gave no particulars except that the shipment would be accompanied by an attendant who would look after the welfare of the consignment. The official to whom the message was referred called for the freight tariff files. He searched in vain for a classification that would enlighten him. He called for a dictionary and an encyclopedia, but was unable to find any information relating to hamsters.

During the luncheon hour he inquired of every one he met, "What is a hamster?" Some said a young pig. Others defined the word as "a man who sells hams." Still another was sure it was a "container for soiled clothes."

Eventually the shipment arrived and with it a letter of explanation. The hamster is a rodent peculiar to China. It is larger than a mouse and smaller than a rat. Each of the animals was inclosed in a separate cage. The consignment was being shipped to Penang on a Dollar steamship and thence to be transshipped to Camp Gauhati, in Assam, India, to be used for experimental purposes in connection with the work of the Kala-Azar commission, which is investigating cures for tropical fever. The rodents were shipped by the Peking Union Medical college.

They were fed with cooked black beans and were accompanied from Peiping to Shanghai by a Chinese attendant, who saw that they received the best of care.

On board the Dollar liner President Johnson they were cared for by a doctor en route to Penang, who accepted the responsibility of seeing that his charges received the necessary quota of cooked black beans a day.

Potatoes Are Grown on Tomato Roots

Worcester, Mass.—Local wags are remarking that "the pomato vines are producing good topatos" this year and proving their point.

They refer to an experimental tomato-potato plant, grown successfully after 20 years experimenting by Oscar Soderholm, horticulturist. It produces potatoes underground and tomatoes above.

It is neither joke nor freak, Mr. Soderholm says, but an attempt to produce better tomatoes by giving them stronger roots. He says the potato roots are both larger and stronger than those of the tomato plant, and that under his theory the combination should produce more tomatoes.

He claims that the results prove the theory, for he has vines bearing more tomatoes than a normal plant, and growing ten feet high, when supported. The tomato plants are real, for they were grafted upon the potato vines.

Epidemic Is Killing Penguins by Thousands

Cape Town, South Africa.—Penguins are dying by the thousands along the South African coast as the result of a mysterious disease.

Superintendent Jackson, Guano islands inspector, received reports from Lambert Bay, stating that thousands of dead penguins were washed ashore. The beaches of False bay are also strewn with dead penguins.

Doctor Girl, curator of the South African museum, said that some epidemic unknown to science was responsible and he feared it would spread to Dassen island, the chief penguin sanctuary off the coast, from which 500,000 eggs are collected in a season.

Cat Walks Back Home After 210 Mile Ride

Kenilworth, N. J.—A Maltese cat owned by Carl Geores of Michigan avenue walked home from an automobile ride of 210 miles. The cat was taken to Mariaville, N. Y., on July 20, where the Geores family has a summer cottage.

The cat roamed about the cottage for two days and then disappeared. Thin, with sore feet and a look of determination in her eyes, the cat walked into the Geores home recently.

Paris Street Named After Famed Beauty

Paris.—Madam du Gast, once known as the most beautiful woman in Paris and certainly one of the most beneficent, has just been honored by having her name added to the Rue Crespin, which will thus henceforth be known as the Rue Crespin du Gast. It is one of the very few streets in Paris named for women, for, what with all the generals, marshals, presidents and city councilors and mayors ready for honors, the women come in for very few.

Madam du Gast was a splendid musician, an excellent horsewoman and one of the first of her sex to engage in motor car racing. She was also a good balloonist and once made a parachute descent of 13,000 feet. During the war she gave all of her time to hospital work.

HUNT FOR FORTUNE IN A PICKLE JAR

Texans Think Slayer Hid His $10,000.

Austin, Texas.—Hunt for $10,000 reputed to be buried in a pickle jar has begun in various parts of Texas and the northern part of Mexico.

The $10,000 is said to have been buried by Harry J. Leahy, who was electrocuted August 2 as the murderer of Dr. J. A. Ramsey of Mathis.

Ranger Captain Frank Hamer probably is the only man who knows whether there is such a buried treasure, and, if so, where it is. A few hours before the execution Leahy sent for Hamer. They had a long talk. "It was confidential" is Hamer's only answer to questions about what Leahy told him.

How the belief that Leahy buried $10,000 originated is as much a mystery as the buried treasure's location.

Widow Pressing Search.

Leahy was a ranchman, at one time wealthy. What became of all the money he received has not been known. Some believe he buried part of it. Mrs. J. A. Ramsey of Mathis, widow of the man Leahy was convicted of killing, is urging the search for the buried pickle jar—not because of the reported $10,000 but because she believes that there may also have been buried personal jewelry which Doctor Ramsey was wearing when he left his home in May, 1926.

Ramsey then was called by a Mexican to come to the aid of a Mexican woman who was said to be seriously ill. His body later was found buried in a shallow grave on a lonely ranch in Live Oak county. His jewelry was gone.

How Suspicion Was Aroused.

Suspicion first attached to Leahy when Mrs. Ramsey offered a reward for her husband, whom she believed to have been kidnaped. Leahy offered to conduct a search but insisted the reward be for his body, dead or alive. A motive was found in anger because Doctor Ramsey had come into possession of the Leahy ranch during a period of ill fortune for the family.

Leahy visited Laredo, on the Mexican border, between the time Doctor Ramsey disappeared and his arrest. This has led to belief that he may have concealed something across the Rio Grande.

Hamer, a noted figure in law enforcement along the border, had long been a friend of Leahy who frequently assisted the officers in the days of pitched battles with cattle raiders and marauders.

Famous Red Families United by Marriage

Washington.—Two direct descendants of Chief Powhatan and the Indian Princess Pochahontas left their homes in Virginia, came to the city of the Great White Father and while here sought out Judge Robert E. Mattingly to marry them. They left immediately after the ceremony for the groom's home in Sweet Hall, Va., where they will reside.

William Custalow, aged twenty-seven, a tall, straight, well built man, with the real red skin of the Indian, was the groom, and Elsie Nelson, rather pale, but referred to by Judge Mattingly as "very pretty," was the bride. She is from Indian Neck, Va.

The father of the groom is Chief George F. Custalow, of the Mattaponis, who are living on land granted them by the general assembly in 1658. The Mattaponis are tribal Indians and they neither pay taxes nor vote.

The bride's father, also living, is Chief Otho Nelson, of the Rappahannock tribe of Citizen Indians. These Indians pay taxes and are entitled to vote. They live on a reservation of 125 acres in King and Queen county, Virginia. Members of both families are direct descendants of Powhatan and Pocahontas, a cousin declared.

Courtship of the two who were married here was conducted over a 16-mile stretch between the two reservations with many visits by the young Indian man into the home of another tribe to win his bride.

This Dog Has Full Paid Gratitude Debt

Chippewa Falls, Wis.—A collie dog nursed back to health five years ago by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Cale, who had found him dying in the road, for the second time paid off his debt.

Mrs. Cale, working in the field, ran for the house when the dog rushed up, barking frantically and tugging at her skirts. She found the kitchen in flames and rescued her son, Robert, three.

Not long ago Robert crawled out on the highway. A motorist stopped his machine to see the dog lug the baby out of danger.

Woman's Trained Goose Foils Poultry Robbery

Chippewa Falls, Wis.—Mrs. Jeanette Wensell of Cadett is convinced that a pet goose can be useful as well as entertaining. She has such a pet and has trained it to come to her when she calls it by name. Recently a number of chickens, ducks and geese were stolen from the Wensell flocks.

Mrs. Wensell suspected a neighbor, Charles Anderson. Accompanied by the sheriff, she went to the Anderson farm. She called out a name. A goose waddled to Mrs. Wensell's automobile, climbed in and sat down beside her.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Vox Populi

Not long ago a newspaper polled its readers on the question whether New York should have Sunday theatrical performances. As it stands now, Sunday theaters are barred by law, but the movie stage presentations and vaudeville shows get by under the guise of sacred concerts. They prove they are sacred concerts and not commercial enterprises by not distributing programs. As I was saying, this newspaper printed ballots on which the readers could mark an X for yes or an X for no. There was a deluge of replies—but scores of supposedly intelligent New Yorkers were wide of the mark. They did not realize what the ballot was for, and they didn't seem to know that Sunday shows have always been banned in their own city.

Visiting Firemen

I wonder what was the origin of the phrase, visiting firemen—meaning hit-and-run tourists who must have the aid of permanent residents to see the town right. I first heard of visiting firemen in Paris, and many's the v. f. that I entertained there. They ask you to do the strangest things. But to a friend of mine has fallen the opportunity of doing what I consider the strangest of all tours with an outlander. This girl, who works in a publishing house and is a successful short story writer, was called upon to entertain a woman who might very well have been the little old lady from Dubuque. This little old lady comes from an illustrious family whose name has been prominent in New York ever since the days of the big rum deal for Manhattan Island. And what must she do but choose the hottest day of the summer to visit, with her friend's help, the graves of all her ancestors! She has a book of the family history, and the tour began at the old Trinity churchyard and ended, hours later, in the far reaches of the Bronx.

Our Sea Lion

The sea lion in the Central park zoo is a clever member of the fair sex, and I enjoy watching her outwit the crowds. She has, of course, much less privacy than a goldfish, for, being a happy creature with a sense of humor, she draws great throngs to the fence around her bath. Much of the time she disports herself for their benefit, swimming, snorting and yapping for joy. But occasionally she yearns for peace and quiet, and when she does, she lies on the cement bank of her pool for a sun bath. Her body catches all the healthful sun's rays; but she sticks her head, ostrich fashion, into the water, covering eyes and ears. That deadens the sound of the chatter about her.

Big Girls Wanted

Girls are simply out of luck here if they are not tall. Show girls, Florenz Ziegfeld informs me, are going to be bigger and taller than ever. Only he puts it this way: American girls are growing bigger and taller, so there is nothing else to do but use them in the show business. But even in business stature is a deciding factor. A restaurant chain advertises for, "Hostesses, age 20-30. Tall, attractive young women. Permanent, worth-while positions for those who qualify." Nothing is said about mental requirements. Be tall, and let those who will be intelligent. Clothes models get their jobs by their stature, rather than by beauty of face or experience.

School for Bums

Across the way from Cooper Union, Dan O'Brien, self-named king of hoboes, is conducting a school for teaching "the art of depending upon oneself when not supported by our economic system." King Dan stands ready to teach all he knows about being a weary Willie to scissorbills, working stiffs, shovel stiffs, scenery tramps and even hitch-hikers. The curriculum includes methods of traveling on freight and passenger trains, hitch-hiking, finding the most likely place to sleep, cooking mulligan and finding the ingredients, hobo language and the art of staying out of jail.

Faces Odd Charge

Milwaukee.—Driving a steam roller while intoxicated was the charge preferred against Robert Fotte, after his seven-ton steam roller had left its path of new asphalt, climbed a curbing and rolled relentlessly over sidewalks, flower beds and lawns.

Grizzly Grows Scarce in Pacific Forests

Olympia, Wash.—There are about five adult grizzly bears left for as many lucky hunters in this state, according to a recent census of forest rangers, and probably four or five more in other Pacific coast states. In the West, where the grizzlies once ruled the mountain forests, civilization has all but exterminated the creatures.

There is material in the life story of the dwindling species upon which to base an epic or to keep a writer of animal fiction supplied for years. Efforts are being made to interest congress in legislation to protect the few remaining specimens.

ATWATER KENT RADIO

HERE IT IS... from the LEADER OF RADIO

New Screen-Grid, Electro-Dynamic BATTERY SET of course it's an Atwater Kent!

Prices slightly higher west of the Rockies, and in Canada

YOU families who haven't electricity—who use batteries to run your radio—how you will relish the news that Atwater Kent has ready for you a completely new battery set with all the very latest proved improvements.

IN COMPACT TABLE MODELS—For batteries, Model 67 Screen-Grid receiver. Uses 7 tubes (3 Screen-Grid). Without tubes, $77. For house-current operation, Model 55 Screen-Grid receiver. Uses 8 A. C. tubes (2 Screen-Grid) and 1 rectifying tube. Without tubes, $88. Electro-Dynamic table-model speaker, $34.

It, too, is Screen-Grid. It, too, is Electro-Dynamic. It, too, has the power to leap across the map and bring in those far-off stations. It, too, has the depth and richness of tone, heretofore thought possible only in house-current sets.

It comes from the same 32-acre factory built by the good-will of 2,550,000 owners of Atwater Kent Radio. It's made with the same painstaking care that keeps an Atwater Kent working without time out for trouble. For months it's been tested—and tested—and tested again, on farm after farm, in state after state.

It's the modern battery set that you have been asking Atwater Kent to make. You can have it in the compact table model or your choice of fine cabinets designed and made by the leading furniture manufacturers of the country. And, best of all, you pay only a moderate price.

ON THE AIR—Atwater Kent Radio Hour, Sunday Evenings, 9:15 (Eastern Daylight Time). WEAF network of N. B. C. Atwater Kent Mid-Week Program. Thursday Evenings, 10:00 (Eastern Daylight Time), WJZ network of N. B. C.

Japanese Push Battle on Tubercular Plague

Concerned over the increase of tuberculosis in Japan, the authorities are planning an extensive campaign of publicity to educate the public on means of prevention.

April 25 has been used for many years by the Tokyo health bureau as a day for starting health campaigns, and activity this year was centered on tuberculosis. Last year deaths from tuberculosis totaled over 28,000 more than in any other recorded year. The average age of death was 23.6 years for men and 27.7 years for women.

The country was divided into two categories for the study. In cities of more than 100,000 inhabitants the total deaths for men were 9,150 and for women, 9,492. Taking as a whole the rural districts and villages and towns with a population of less than 100,000, deaths among men totaled 4,527 for men and 5,308 for women. The average age of death in the country was found to be slightly higher than in the cities.

Sale of School and Other State Lands

State of Minnesota,
State Auditor's Office,
St. Paul, Minn., Aug. 21, 1929

Notice is hereby given that on October 18, 1929, at 10 o'clock a. m., in the office of the county auditor, at Warren, Marshall county, in the State of Minnesota, I will offer for sale certain unsold state lands and also those state lands which have reverted to the state by reason of the non-payment of interest.

Terms of Sale:

Fifteen per cent of the purchase price is payable to the County Treasurer at the time of sale. The unpaid balance is payable at any time in whole or in part within forty years from the date of sale, interest rate of four per cent per annum, due on June 1st, of each year; provided, that the interest can be paid at any time within the interest year without penalty. In effect, this means that the interest money may be paid any time between June first and May thirty-first without penalty.

The appraised value of timber when so stated, must be paid in full at the time of sale.

All mineral rights are reserved to the State by the laws of the State.

All lands are sold subject to any and all ditch taxes thereon.

Lands on which the interest has become delinquent may be redeemed at any time up to the hour of sale or before resale, to the actual purchaser. Such lands are listed under the caption: "Delinquent Lands."

No person can purchase more than 320 acres of land, provided, however, that State lands purchased previous to 1905 are not charged against such purchaser.

Agents acting for purchasers must furnish affidavit of authority.

Appraisers' report showing quality and kind of soil are on file in this office.

Lists giving legal descriptions of lands to be offered may be obtained of the State Auditor at St. Paul, and of the County Auditor at the county seat.

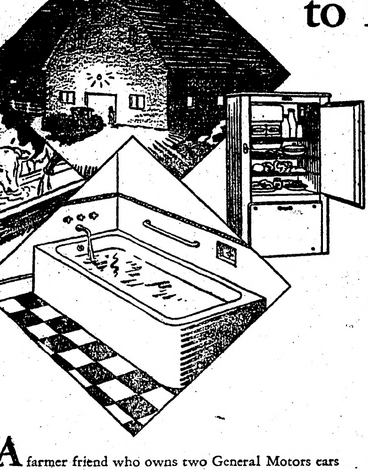
From BARN
to BATH TUB



A farmer friend who owns two General Motors cars went to the city the other day and stopped in to see some cousins. They showed him around their new roof garden apartment, eighteen floors above the street, and proudly pointed out their Frigidaire in the pantry.

"Well," chuckled our farmer friend, "Mother has a garden full of old-fashioned flowers that she'd never trade for theirs . . . and as for the refrigerator, we have a bigger Frigidaire than they have!"

He also mentioned his Delco-Light power system and his DL water pump, which give him every other city convenience. As he often says himself, his farm is "General Motorized from barn to bath tub!"

It is perfectly true that General Motors, through its various units, offers even more to the farm family than to the city family. By applying methods of automobile production to home electric lighting and power plants, water pumping systems, and automatic refrigerators, General Motors can make the reliable kind of product that a farmer wants, at a price he can afford.

"A car for every purse and purpose"

School or Work

Many young men are now confronted with the problem: "Shall I go to school, or should I go to work?"

After a person has completed his general education, he must take up vocational education or training which enables him to earn a living.

Many peaple get their training "on the job" where they "earn and learn" by doing.

There are available vocational schools in agriculture for the farmers; business colleges for those interested in commercial lines; and trade schools for those interested in mechanical and industrial lines.

Dunwoody Institute at Minneapolis was left as a gift to the residents of the state for training boys and men in industrial and mechanical lines.

The Institute is conducted without profit and charges only nominal fees for training in the many lines like automobile, baking, building, drafting, electrical, machine shop, printing, painting, paperhanging, bricklaying and sheet metal.

Students may enter at any date for any lenght of course in the industrial and mechanical courses available.

A big csew of men from the Bell Telephone company are rebuilding their line between here and Thief River Falls.

PRODUCTION: The chief advantage of a silo is that it saves feed. When 100 tons of corn are properly put in the silo, there will be practically 100 tons consumed. When corn is shocked up in the field and fed in the bundle, there is often as much as one-third that is not consumed.

MANUFACTURING: A fieldman writing an account of the opening of a new co-operative creamery stated, "The farmers hung around in the craeamery most of the day to see how the creamery was run." Fine---we would give these farmers who hung around a mark of 100. Farmers who know most about how their co-operative creamery is operated are always the best patrons.

MARKETING: Note the products you always buy, whether a binder, a pair of shoes, or coffee, or breakfast food, and you will see that the name of the product has a great deal to do with your buying it. You haue learned to know the name or brand of the product. and you connect the good qualities of the product, whatever it may be, with the name. There are names or brands that could not be purchased for a million dollars because they are favorably known nationally, and some world-wide.

Reception For The Teachers

The people of Holt and community gathered at the local school house Saturday evening to give the teachers a reception.

Mrs. George Fricker was the chairman of the entertainment committee whom had made arrangements for a very interesting program.

Rev. Redal spoke on the school and church as the two most outstanding institutions that one may see wherever you travel.

Mr. Vieths, Superintendent of our local school, outlined the educational work of the school and stressed the fact that with a little more cooperation between the students, parents and the teachers our school could still be elevated to a higher degree.

Mr. Fricker spoke on the duties of the school board. He explained as to how the funds are raised for running a consolidated school and, outlined the way in which the taxpayers dollar is invested in educating the children.

Dr. Jacobson of Thief River Falls gave a short talk on the ways and means of a parent-teachers association. Having been president of the parent-teachers association at Thief River Falls, he gave some very good reason why we should have one here and, he hoped that in the near future one would be organized.

Mrs. Lorentson gave an interesting talk on bettter understanding between the children, parents, and the teachers.

Mr. Lund of Thief River Falls sang several solos.

P. L. Anderson of Crookston spoke a few words in appreciation of the splendid program and congratulated the old teachers upon their return and the new ones upon coming here to take up their work in our school.

Rev. Redal gave a splendid piano solo which concluded the program.

After the program a very delicious lunch was served by the ladies after which an hour was spent in playing games and getting aquainted.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Helgeson of Ada, Minn., visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Hanson Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Peterson and daughter from Middle River visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Einer Loven Sunday.

Tuberculosis Area Test To Start In County Oct. 21

On Monday October 21st, 1929 the state startst testing of all cattle in Marshall County under the "County Area Law" Tuberculin Test. All cattle owners are kindly requested that when they have received notice of the date and the time the veterinarians will arrive at their farm to co-operate with the testing team; assist them and have their cattle in the barn.

Any delay on an individual farm will necessarily delay the veterinarian in arriving at the farm. This would result in added expense to the county for the cost of the test. After the test is started the state laws will not permit the sale of milk or milk products from cattle which react and cattle which are known to be deceased, and the law requires every owner to remove reacting animals within a thirthy day period and such cattle shall be shipped as soon as possible for slaughter.

After receiving the special permit from the veterinarian for such shipment, the owners shall make arrangements with their local shipper to ship the reactors as soon as possible after the test is completed. All reacting cattle will be shipped in carload lots in order to save on the freight charges.

The test is being made in the county at the request of a majority of the cattle owners of the county who sent in a petition to the county board requesting that the test be made as provided by law and the work is performed co-operatively by the County, State and Federal government, and the indemnety will be paid by the State and Federal government provided reacting cattle are shipped for slaughter within thirty days of the date on which reacted.

The county will be made into 31 districts and 31 team consisting of a veterinarian and one helper. The test will be made in 15 days starting October 21st and completed November 3rd.

More and complete information about the test will be given in a later issue.

A Sour Stomach

In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

Army of Hunters

Pity the poor, wild game of this country! Based on last year's figures, an army almost three times the size of the A. E. F. in the World war is about to move on the rabbits and deer, ducks, partridges and other game fowls and animals. Hunting licenses for the 1928 season were issued to 6,450,000 people, who paid in excess of $9,000,000 for the privileges of hunting. New York state led with 675,780 licenses and Pennsylvania was second with 517,729.

The Right Way to Redye Fine Silks

Textile makers always use special dyes for silk or wool. They know that is the best way. The makers of Diamond Dyes are the first to enable home dyers to follow this plan.

Next time you want to dye some of your more valuable articles of silk or wool, try the special Diamond Dyes in the Blue Package. They will give these materials clearer, more brilliant colors than any "all-purpose" dye. And they are just as easy to use as ordinary dyes. Like the white package Diamond Dyes, these dyes contain an abundance of the highest quality anilines. The blue package dyes silk or wool only; the white package dyes, or tints, any material. Either package; 15c, drugstores.

STORY FROM THE START

Capt. Lion Fellowes' American ship is sunk by the British off Portugal in the War of 1812. Fellowes' life is saved by Cara Inglepin, daughter of the owner of the American ship, True Bounty, Capt. Chater, in trade with the enemy. Because of love for Cara he consents to sail as mate.

"Sir," she said quietly, "you may think as you please of that. I shall say nothing."

And she quitted the deck before he could answer her, leaving him vexed by his own impetuosity and admiring the way in which she had taken it. He tasted humility as he trod the deck, keeping the early watch after dark, too downcast to notice her when she came from the cabin, a fluttering wraith in the golden yellow cloak she wore when the air was chill.

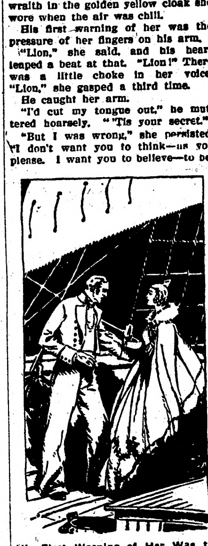
His first warning of her was the pressure of her fingers on his arm.

"Lion," she said, and his heart leaped a beat at that. "Lion!" There was a little choke in her voice. "Lion," she gasped a third time.

He caught her arm.

"I'd cut my tongue out," he muttered hoarsely. "'Tis your secret."

"But I was wrong," she persisted. "I don't want you to think—as you please. I want you to believe—to believe—that I wouldn't do—anything dishonorable. Truly, Lion!"



His First Warning of Her Was the Pressure of Her Fingers on His Arm.

His arms wound about her, as their lips met, suddenly. Then she was gone from him, a shadow in the darkness.

CHAPTER III

Crimpin' Collishawe

Fellowes was happier than he had been for months. Tramping the poop, he hummed a tune, thinking how lucky he had been: saved from the Sachem, and conversely, from months, maybe years, in Dartmoor; meeting Cara—and home just over the horizon's rim. Cara—and home! Her Federalist leanings he brushed aside. As his wife—

"Sail ho!"

He snatched a glass from the binnacle-rack and climbed into the mizzen-shrouds. The morning was clear; he had no difficulty in making out the stranger, a lofty pile of canvas, driving down toward the True Bounty.

"Call Captain Chater," he hailed the deck, and Chater promptly popped out of the cabin-companionway almost as if he had expected the summons.

"A man-o'-war, Captain," Fellowes reported.

Chater took the glass.

"Aye," he pronounced cheerfully, "she's the Badger sloop-of-war. Captain Collishawe."

"Collishawe," repeated Fellowes. "'Crimpin'' Collishawe!"

"That's him," Chater assented.

"He ought to be foul-bottomed," said Fellowes. "Most of these blockaders are. We'd have the wind of him if we ran south."

"Well, naow, why should we run for it?" drawled Chater.

"Why? Lord, man, Collishawe's pressed more Americans than any British officer on the station. 'Crimpin'' Collishawe they call him. If he has a full crew, himself, he'll press for any other blockader that's shorthanded."

Chater laughed in a peculiar noiseless way that always repelled Fellowes.

"I ain't consarned for him. We've got to pass the blockade to make Sandy Hook. And ye forget we run on license."

"I know," answered Fellowes, still perturbed; "but license or no, why risk your men—"

"All my crew carry press-protections," rejoined Chater. "What's the use of tradin' on license, if ye can't make your home-port, hey? We'll jest hold to the course. I wouldn't wonder but mebbe Collishawe'd be kind of grateful for Peninsula news. And he always shortened sail whenever he sighted Miss Cara. 'Used to come to old Ben's house a lot when he was in New York."

Everyone but the duenna hastened on deck to watch the Badger come foaming down from windward.

"Oh, brave," cried Cara Inglepin, clapping her hands delightedly.

She received Fellowes' eager greeting with a hint of embarrassment—almost as if she regretted last night's kiss, he thought—and continued quickly:

"We are fortunate 'tis the Badger. Sometimes the blockading captains are very severe. But Captain Collishawe is a gentleman, and my father's friend."

"'Crimpin'' Collishawe! Yes, many Americans have called him friend!"

"Why, Lion!" There was asperity in her tone. "'Tis vulgar, I vow! You must not speak so. You'll ill commend yourself to Captain Collishawe."

"I have no concern with Captain Collishawe," he returned, and walked away, heedless of her protest.

The Badger rounded to under the True Bounty's quarter. Collishawe hung in the sta'b'd mizzen-rigging, a tall, lean man, of about Fellowes' age, handsomely uniformed, his half-boots polished, his blue coat fitting trimly. His manner was haughty as he hailed:

"Ahoy! What ship's that?"

"True Bounty, Cap'n Chater, from Lisbon for New York, with wine and lemons," answered Chater.

"I'll send a boat aboard you," snapped Collishawe. "Have your papers ready."

He turned to give some order, and Miss Inglepin ran to the True Bounty's side, waving her mantilla.

"Oh, James," she cried. "Haven't you a word for me? 'Tis unmannerly, sir."

He swung around. The sternness melted from his features.

"Cara! What rare good fortune! I'll come aboard, myself."

The Badger's boat swung overside and rowed smartly across the gap of choppy water separating the vessels. Collishawe leaped from its gunwale to the rope-ladder Chater had ordered rigged for him, ascending its rungs as lightly as a monkey and vaulted to the merchantman's deck with hands outstretched to Cara. Their voices, friendly, excited, clamoring together, exasperated Fellowes unreasonably. He tried not to listen to them, but he couldn't very well help himself.

"—dispatches on the eve of our sailing," she was saying. "'Twas reported the Grand army evacuated Moscow in October, and was torn to pieces in the retreat. Napoleon, himself, barely escaped."

"Great news," applauded Collishawe. "And the Peninsula?"

"Lord Wellington carries all before him. Soult is on the defensive. Your people are certain they will drive him over the Pyrenees before autumn."

"Excellent! An uphill struggle, b'gad, but the French are nigh finished. With the Russians on their backs—"

"But have you news for us?" she interrupted eagerly. "Have you heard of my father?"

He laughed on a keen, boyish note that Fellowes found ingratiating.

"We hear from our friends. Your father does well, but is roundly abused. Your uncle diverts himself fitting out privateers against us." His face clouded. "The Yankees have tricked us once more with those razees of theirs. Our Java struck to the Constitution in a fight off the Brazils. 'Tis said the Constitution refused to close, and hammered the Java with her long guns. I hold we are but discovering captains grown soft from fighting the French."

Chater fawned assent; but Cara Inglepin replied spiritedly:

"No, James, you are wrong, and you do your own country no honor thereby, since we Americans are but Englishmen transplanted to another land and toying with another government."

He laughed once more at that.

Amber and Meerschaum

Amber can be made to burn when heated to a high temperature in the air. It is a fossil resin from trees of the pine family and is dug up from the shores of the Baltic sea and the North sea and a few other places. It is a compound of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen. Meerschaum is a compound of magnesium, silicon and oxygen and resembles a white clay. It is found chiefly in Asia Minor, where it occurs in masses of clay. Of course, the only connection between the two substances is the fact that they are both used in making pipes.

River Divides States

The north bank of the Ohio river is the northern boundary of the state of Kentucky, the exact boundary line being fixed by the low-water mark of the river. The jurisdiction of the state of Kentucky extends to the low-water mark on the Indiana side. The United States government has jurisdiction over the whole river, as far as commerce is concerned. According to the Constitution the federal government has a right to regulate commerce, and the Ohio river is the commercial highway.

Youngsters Drawn to Death by Alligator

Clearwater, Fla.—When golfers heard screams of a four-year-old boy on the course they investigated and found that two young boys, John Freddy and Norman Gold eight and nine years old, respectively, were done to death by an alligator in a water hazard on the course. The boys were playing with their toy boats in the water hole when the 'gator appeared and pulled John Freddy into the water. Norman leaped to his rescue and the three fought for several minutes before the boys succumbed. The baby of four watched the struggle until the fight was over, when he ran for help. The bodies of both drowned boys were scarred by the reptile's teeth.

GIANT ON RAMPAGE CALMED BY WOMAN

Sacramento School Teacher Displays Heroism.

Biggs, Calif.—Running amuck on a Western Pacific limited train on its way from Norton county, Kan., to this city, Conrad Carroll, giant farmer, kept the other passengers of the train terrorized, smashed up the furniture of a chair car and the diner, threw men who tried to subdue him around like tenpins, and finally was calmed by a Sacramento schoolma'am who talked him into submission like an unruly child.

It was about one o'clock in the morning that Carroll, for no apparent reason, started to wreck the chair car, chasing frightened and hysterical women and children before him.

A half dozen men passengers threw themselves on him and forced him to the vestibule between the chair car and the diner.

Here, however, Carroll, after shaking off his assailants, picked up a vestibule chair and battered through the door to the dining car, wrecking everything in sight.

While the men and the train crew were holding a council of war Madeline Lee of Sacramento, former Oak Grove school principal, walked determinedly directly up to Carroll and began to give him some school teacherly advice on his conduct.

Carroll wilted, and from that time until the train reach Portola remained submissive to the teacher. At that point officers who had been telegraphed for came aboard with a physician.

They decided to permit Carroll to continue to his destination after giving him an opiate, and at Biggs he was met by a nephew, Tim Sullivan, and taken to the hospital.

The doctors said he had not been drinking, but went temporarily insane from the strain of travel.

Identifies Dead Mate; and Then He Walks In

Brescia, Italy.—Having recognized the body of her husband killed in an automobile accident, and having buried and mourned over him three days, Signora Roverbello of Desanzano had the surprise of her life when she saw the supposed corpse walk into the house alive and well.

After the automobile accident, in which the body of the victim was mutilated under the wheels, Signora Roverbello "recognized" the corpse as that of her husband who she supposed had been taking a walking tour at the time. Her glance was a hasty one, because of her emotion.

The victim of the accident turned out to be an elderly man of about the age of her husband.

Mother Fights With Rat in Defense of Infant

Brooklyn.—Entering a bedroom of her home Mrs. Anna Turecyn of No. 123 Louisiana avenue found a huge rat attacking her two-month-old son, John. Mrs. Turecyn seized a broom and struck at the rodent, which bit the infant thrice on the legs, and then sprang at the frightened mother's throat. She flung it off and chased it into a corner, striking at it and calling for help. Neighbors joined her, and chased the rat for nearly ten minutes before it escaped.

The baby's wounds were cauterized by an ambulance surgeon. Residents of the neighborhood said they have seen rats as "big as cats" on the street.

Man Killed Saving Dog

Los Angeles.—For ten years Shirley L. Freeman, radio salesman, and his dog, a breed of terrier, were inseparable companions. The dog went blind from old age and Freeman guarded it devotedly.

Recently the dog wandered in front of an electric train and Freeman went to the rescue. He threw his pet to safety, but was struck down by the train and killed.

Bee's Sting Brings Death

Philadelphia.—The sting of a bee was instantly fatal to James Raute, fifty-nine, Chestnut Hill gardener. Whether some unknown virus in the sting was the actual cause of death, or whether it resulted from heart disease or shock occasioned by the pain, could not be explained by medical examiners. An autopsy was ordered.

NEARBY AND YONDER

By T. T. MAXEY

The First White House

ALTHOUGH George Washington selected the site for the present White House and every President since him has lived in it, fate denied him that privilege—he passed away before it was completed.

Prior to his inauguration in New York, congress requested the then postmaster general to fit up, for Presidential use, a suitable mansion. The house at No. 1 Cherry street, built in 1770, on what was known as Cherry hill, because a cherry orchard once stood there, was selected. It was "five windows wide," three stories high and not overly spacious or suitably located.

Every room was fitted up in the most lavish style of the day. The seeming extravagance startled the frugal folk of the times. An account, written by an eyewitness at the time, declared that "The whole of the first and second story is papered and the floors covered with the richest kind of Turkish and Wilton carpets." The first congratulatory visitors which the first President received here were the members of the New York Chamber of Commerce.

In after years this house was used as a music store and also as a bank. It was demolished in 1856 and the chair used by the president of the New York Historical society was built from material taken out of it.

The western approach to the Brooklyn bridge now passes over the site and one of the abutments carries a tablet which reads: "The first presidential mansion, No. 1 Cherry Street, occupied by George Washington from April 24, 1789, to February 23, 1790. Erected by Mary Washington Colonial Chapter, April 30, 1899."

"Home, Sweet Home"

"HOME, SWEET HOME," that most endearing song which has touched countless hearts, first sung in Covent Garden theater, London, in 1823, was written by an actor-playwriter-author, who, at the time, had neither home nor wife, apparently was homeless during most of his life, never married and thus attempted to instill into the minds of those fortunate folk who were privileged to enjoy that which fate had denied him a full appreciation of the blessing that was theirs. And while it earned a rather princely sum for its publishers, the author appears to have gained little financial reward for its production.

John Howard Payne, who was born in 1791, lived for a time during his early years, in a sturdy, simple, homey house in the little community of East Hampton on the southern shore of Long Island, the memory of which etched itself deeply into his sensitive being.

In later life, Payne was appointed consul of the United States at Tunis, Africa. He died on that far-off continent in 1852, in his sixtieth year. Many years later his remains were brought to this country and re-interred under broad-spreading trees in peaceful Oak Hill cemetery in Washington, D. C.

Meanwhile the quaint "home"—more than 200 years old—shingle-clad, weather-beaten, vine festooned, standing with one end facing the street, has been carefully preserved as a memorial to its author.

Lafayette Square

LAFAYETTE square, that seven-acre, park-like place just across "The Avenue" from the home of the President of the United States, was so named by the Father of His Country and first used as a parade ground for troops. Today it is an ideal spot in which to sit and dream on a summer day.

An assortment of trees mottle the sunshine on the lawn, winding walks invite, benches lure; trusting pigeons and squirrels beg; five noteworthy monuments bid for attention—one to General Lafayette, another to Kosciusko—the hero of Saratoga; a third to Rochambeau, who came to America with an army to assist Washington; a fourth to Von Steuben—who proffered his services to congress and became instructor general of the Continental army; the fifth—a huge bronze casting affair, said to be the first successfully made in America, to Andrew Jackson.

Much of the history of the past century was made in the mansions which have surrounded this plot. Among these—the home and office of our Chief Executive; a former social institution which includes the famous Dolly Madison house; the former British legation where the Ashburton treaty was framed; a venerable house of worship—the Presidents' church; homes of John Hay, secretary of state under Roosevelt, Daniel Webster, George Bancroft—the historian, Commander Stephen Decatur—hero of the Tripolitan war, where, subsequently, a Russian minister and three secretarys of state are said to have lived and another where three secretaries of the navy have resided. Truly, Lafayette square is a historic spot.

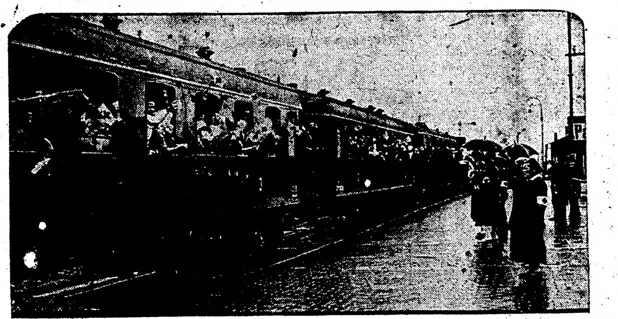
Swedes Return to Homeland From Russia



What is believed to be the largest wholesale return of "prodigal sons" ever recorded took place recently in Europe. About two hundred years ago a group of dissatisfied Swedes left their homeland and trekked to South Russia to make their future homes. Here the colony thrived and flourished to more than a thousand. However, since Russia turned Red the colonists, who had kept their identity without mixing a drop of Russian blood in their veins, began to get disgusted with the way things were going in their adopted land, so recently they decided in one huge train, whose arrival in Sweden is here shown to return to the land of their fathers and they went back with Red Cross nurses meeting it.

Speech Defects Are Neglected

Survey Shows 500,000 Children Are Afflicted With Stammering.

Washington.—Disorders in speech have been grossly neglected, according to the United States public health service. This is especially true in the case of school children, it was pointed out in a statement issued here.

Of 1,000,000 persons suffering from some defect in speech in this country today approximately 500,000 are children who stammer or stutter. Uncorrected imperfections in speech observed in childhood, the public health service said, become a serious economic and social handicap in later life because of their bearing on educational achievement and ability to secure preferential employment.

Defects Are Functional.

The majority of speech defects, fortunately, are functional in character, not dependent on definite organic lesions and can, therefore, be corrected. Most speech defects, it was said, develop in children between three and eight years old.

The public health service listed retarded speech, imperfect speech associated with partial deafness, imperfections caused by malformations of the organs of speech, and the nervous speech disorders namely stammering, stuttering and nervous hesitation as the most common defects in speech.

"The popular belief that children who do not learn to talk at the normal age are mentally defective is responsible for much unwarranted anxiety," the public health service declared. "While it is true that disordered speech may be an early symptom of mental defect, speech development may be delayed as late as nine years of age in children otherwise normal.

Partial deafness may also be the cause of speech defect, it continued. Most deaf mutes have perfectly normal speech organs, but do not exercise them because of their inability to hear spoken words. With them the underlying cause of their inability to talk is deafness. Since imitation is such a pronounced factor in the development of speech in children, careful tests should be made of all speech defectives for the discovery of partial deafness which may easily account for the imperfect speech. Such children should always be referred to an ear specialist for treatment; and if treatment is ineffective lip reading should be taught.

Look for Malformations.

"Imperfect speech also may be caused by malformation of speech-producing organs, such as harelip, very short upper lip, narrow palate, cleft palate, nasal obstruction, tongue-tie, and very irregular teeth. Careful search should be made for the presence of malformations in order that prompt corrective treatment may be administrated. The underlying cause of stammering is purely mental. It is essentially due to emotional disturbance, and implies lessened ability to meet a difficult situation. It is most frequently observed in the so-called nervous, highly strung children.

As these children grow older they subconsciously fear that their speech organs will refuse to work and have the horror of being the object of ridicule. A sense of inferiority develops, establishing a vicious circle—the greater the dread, the more imperfect their speech.

"Parents should not be deluded by any expectation that the child will outgrow the defect. Only the very mild cases developed through imitation may be said to be outgrown when the increasing mental development of the child enables him to recognize and correct his mistake. The wise parents will give close attention to the speech disorders of their children in order to remove the handicap in life which these disorders impose."

Everybody Is Jones in Boots Lawsuit

Llanfihangel Geneurglyn, Wales.—What is believed to be a unique court case occurred here.

Jones was the name of seven out of eight people implicated in the case.

A married woman named Jones was alleged to have stolen a pair of boots belonging to a Mr. Jones. A servant named Jones gave evidence; a police-sergeant Jones was mentioned; the two magistrates were named Jones, and so was the court clerk.

The accused Mrs. Jones said that she and her husband, Mr. Jones, had just secured work for another Mr. Jones.

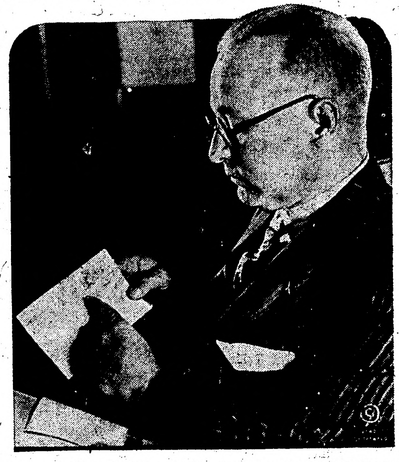
Letter From Germany Breaks Record



From Berlin to Washington, in less than seven days, was the time made by a letter received by W. Irving Glover, second assistant postmaster general. The letter was carried from Berlin to Cherbourg by plane, crossed the ocean on the Bremen, shot off by plane when 500 miles at sea, and rushed from New York to Washington again by air.

EX-BOY EMPEROR IS BROKE; COTTAGE HIS CASTLE NOW

Lives on Charity of His Friends; Last $250,000 Lost in Bank Crash.

Peiping, China.—The "boy emperor," once the ruler of all China, has moved into a small house in Tientsin with his wife, because he can no longer afford to live in a large house.

With his fortune almost gone, the former emperor now is dependent for support on the kindness of his old Manchu retainers. But they, too, are suffering from falling incomes, and are not able to spare him enough to keep up anything resembling an imperial menage.

The boy emperor, now approaching the age of thirty, is not prepared to do anything to earn his living. He is not ambitious, and his friends say he has no hope whatever of recovering his lost power. He is content to live quietly with his two women and a few Manchus who have remained with him since his abdication.

When the emperor abdicated an agreement was made to leave him possessor of his landed property and a large part of his jewels and curios. But succeeding so-called Republican governments have ruled against this agreement, and the ex-emperor's property gradually has been confiscated and sold. It is said that all of his income from property now has been cut off.

The young ex-emperor also made an unfortunate investment. He put $250,000, almost all of his ready money, into the Exchange Bank of China, a joint Japanese-Chinese institution. A few months ago this bank failed because of the deterioration in value of its investments in Chinese government bonds. The young emperor's money was lost together with that of thousands of other unfortunate Chinese depositors.

The ex-emperor has been living for the last two years in the Changyuan garden in Tientsin, located in the Japanese concession. Although the rent was given him free by the divisional commander in charge of Tientsin, the place was so large that he had to keep more than 100 servants

Seeing the young man's plight, an old Chinese, Lu Chungyu, offered him the use of one of his houses, also in the Japanese concession, and the ex-emperor decided at once to move with his household.

Much Wood Swallowed Up by Printing Press

Any large daily and Sunday newspaper with its many sections and supplements is one of the chief consumers of the forest resources of the nation, according to a survey of reforestation needs by Farm and Fireside.

One week's publication uses enough paper to represent the pulp from 400 acres of trees, or 20,000 acres of forest in a year. At least 10 square miles of forest go to the pulp mills every day in the year to keep the presses of the country running.

The United States uses more wood per capita than any nation in the world. More than two-thirds of the 822,000,000 acres contained in the country's original forests have been culled, cut over or destroyed by fire. About 20,000,000,000 cubic feet of material are taken out of the forests every year for all purposes, while only about 6,000,000,000 feet are growing anew in them. All kinds of trees are being consumed faster than they are being grown.

Since 1900 the United States has used more wood pulp than it has produced. Two-thirds of the present supply is being imported from Canada.

See End of Tsetse Fly

As the result of experiments being conducted in the tsetse belt of Natal, the South African government is hopeful that an effective means of combating the ravages of the deadly tsetse fly has been at last discovered. A special poison in powdered form has been sprayed over donkeys. The tsetse fly, when it alights on the animal, absorbs the poison through its feet and dies. Reports so far received show that the experiments have been successful, giving hope that one of the worst plagues with which the farmer of South Africa has to contend is doomed.

Seepage water from irrigation enters a large pear tree at Brass Valley, Calif., and issues under pressure four feet up the trunk. The trunk forks at that height and a crack in the fork forms the vent for a tree fountain that is attracting much notice.

New energy for work in this Wake-up Food
POST TOASTIES

START your breakfast with a heaping bowl of golden crisp Post Toasties in milk with fruit—and you've made a grand start on the day. Energy is what people need in the morning. Here in Post Toasties, the Wake-up Food, is the kind of energy that gets to work for you quickly. It's called the Wake-up Food just for that reason!

And it's so good for boys and girls and grown folks because it is so easy to digest. They all just naturally take to that wholesome, delicious corn flavor.

Tumble the crisp flakes right out of the package into the bowl—they're easy to serve. Don't forget—there's just one way to get the Wake-up Food. Ask your grocer for Post Toasties—in the red and yellow wax-wrapped package.

Among all the low-priced sixes there is not one with Pontiac's ability to perform its way into your favor. Its big, 200-cubic-inch L-head engine develops 60 horsepower at the moderate engine speed of 3000 r. p. m. It provides faster acceleration and higher top speed than any other low-priced six, as proved by the "fifth wheel," most accurate of all speed measuring devices. And it offers greater smoothness as well because of many important engineering advancements such as the G-M-R cylinder head which eliminates spark knock and roughness using ordinary gasoline—and the Harmonic Balancer which smooths out torsional vibration in the sturdy, fully counter-weighted crankshaft.

With 290 students enrolled as compared to 235 on the same date last year, a new all-time first term attendance record was established at the Northwest School of Agriculture, Crookston last week. According to Superintendent A. A. Dowell, this represents an increase of 23 per cent over the previous record established one year ago.

Though all dormitories are taxed to capacity, school authorities state that accomodations will be arrangee for the late arrivals who have been delayed due to the pressure of field work on the farms, Registrar J. W. Mlinar has had word that over twenty additional students will report during the next few days, which will bring the total fall term enrollment considerable above the 300 mark for the first time in the history of the institution.

Students from seventeen of Northwesten Minnesota counties are in attendance, in addition to a number from North Dakota, Wisconsin and Canada.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Swan arrived here this week from So. Dakota.

The sacred program given by the Monitou Duo at the Nazareth Lutheran church last Friday evening was well attended. The two young women that composed the duo gave the people of this community a very interesting program of songs, music and speech that was enjoyed by all present.

The Dorcas Society will meet in the church parlors Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock. All the girls are urged to get together to reorganize the society and cooperate more than last year.

The older girls should take a lot more interest in the Dorcas Society and not feel that it is for the younger and smaller girls.

Oscar Hagglund who has been employed at Hoople, N. Dakota, the past few months arrived on Tuesday to spend some time here with home folks.

H. M. Olson arrived here on Saturday from Calio, N. Dakota, where he has spent the season working thru harvest and threshing. After spending a few days here visiting with friends he departed for his home down by Bemidji.

Crookston is to have a sawmill again according to announcements made by backers of the institution. It will not be one like the old sawmill that some of the older pioneers saw there a few years ago, but it will be of quite an importance to the city as it will furnish employment for many men. The mill expects to get its supply of saw logs from native growth along Red Lake River.

Thief Lake, a great breeding place for ducks in the early days before drainage partly emptied it, is to be restored by having a dam built at its outlet.

The movement to have it restored has been going on for some time and has been fed along by activity of sportsmen and others who realized it was good for just a duck pond. It is expected that the lake will be restored by 1931 season. The lake was looked over recently by the State Engineer E. W. Youngdahl and by I. E. Quist, county engineer of Marshall county.

Lawrence Hagglund returned home Wednesday from Pontiac. Mich. He went down there about three weeks ago, but he said there was no work now.

For Best Results in Home Dyeing

You can always give richer, deeper, more brilliant colors to faded or out-of-style dresses, hose, coats, draperies, etc., with Diamond Dyes. And the colors stay in through wear and washing!

Here's the reason:—Diamond Dyes contain the highest quality anilines money can buy. And it's the anilines that count! They are the very life of dyes.

Plenty of pure anilines make Diamond Dyes easy to use. They go on evenly without spotting or streaking. Try them next time and see why authorities recommend them; why millions of women will use no other dyes.

You get Diamond Dyes for the same price as ordinary dyes; 15c, at any drug store.

Vacuum Cleaner Did Work

Not long ago Glen Edgerly of Hallowell, Maine, built a small porch over his front door and immediately a family of hornets made their home under the roof between the shingles and the ceiling. He couldn't burn them, so he borrowed his wife's vacuum cleaner and sucked them out, every one.

A FAMILY DOCTOR'S LAXATIVE IS BEST

Your health is too important! You cannot afford to experiment with your delicate bowels when coated tongue, bad breath, headache, gas, nausea, feverishness, lack of appetite, no energy, etc., warn of constipation. This applies not only to grown people, but more particularly to children. That's why a family doctor's laxative is always the safe choice.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is prepared today under strict laboratory supervision from fresh laxative herbs and other pure ingredients, and exactly according to Dr. Caldwell's original prescription.

Today, millions of families rely on Dr. Caldwell's judgment in the selection of their laxative. For Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in bottles ready for use, sold in all drugstores, is now the largest selling laxative in the world!

The First American Cathedral

THAT noble and celebrated edifice—the old cathedral in Baltimore, begun in 1800, has been referred to as the first cathedral to be erected in America—presumably because it has the distinction of being our first church to be presided over by an American cardinal. It crowns a hill on which the victorious troops of Rochambeau encamped on their return from Yorktown during the Revolutionary war in 1782.

This structure was built of gray granite, which was hauled in by ox teams from a quarry near the Patapsco river. It is 190 feet long, 177 feet wide at the arms of the cross, surmounted by a gilded dome, which is 231 feet in circumference, and carries two peculiarly shaped towers which are strangely suggestive of the Far East. One of these towers is the home of quite a sizable bell, cast in Lyons, France, which throughout all these years has looked out and down upon the varied activities of humanity. What a story of pathos and joy, strife and prosperity, change and progress, it could relate!

Unusual as well as remarkable for its pure simplicity of design and pleasing proportions, this historic building contains splendid and valuable paintings—one outstanding one having been presented by Louis XVIII, king of France, and an ancient organ which is said to have been the largest in all America at the time of its completion. Under the throne is a sacred mausoleum in which repose the remains of former dignitaries of the church, among them being that of the much-loved councilor, the former James Cardinal Gibbons, who served his church for almost half a century. Much of the Catholic history of America was made in this noted church and the adjoining home of the former prince of the church.

America's Longest Tunnel

THE recently opened, eight-mile-long tunnel through the granite backbone of the Cascade mountains—100 miles east of Seattle, is the longest tunnel in America. Built at a cost of about $14,000,000, by the Great Northern railway, this tunnel and its approaches clips nine miles from the old route, permits the railroad to penetrate the range at a reduced grade of about 500 feet and, of course, saves that amount of climb, eliminates curvature equivalent to approximately ten complete circles, displaces several miles of snow sheds, reduces the cost and work of keeping the road open during the winter season, does away with delays due to snow slides and brings the North Pacific coast closer to the balance of the country in point of time and is, therefore, a national asset of no mean importance.

This Cascade tunnel is a remarkable engineering achievement. So accurately were the calculations made that when the two ends met 3,000 feet under the crest of the range and four miles from the western entrance, the difference in elevation was but nine inches, while the difference between estimated and actual distance was only 12 inches. Work was pursued day, night and Sunday—not a single shift was lost. At one time, 1,793 men were employed. The entire job was completed within three years. The walls throughout are lined with concrete two feet thick. Enormous electric locomotives will be used to haul both freight and passenger trains through this bore.

A Super Power Plant on Wheels

THE largest steam locomotive on earth was built to haul all the freight cars the coupling pin would hold across the so-called "Bad Lands" in western North Dakota, by the American Locomotive company for the Northern Pacific railway.

It has 22 wheels and, including the tender which holds 21,000 gallons of water and 27 tons of coal, is 125 feet long and weighs 1,116,000 pounds. It is so monstrous that one is inclined to say, like the man in the zoo who saw a giraffe for the first time, "Shucks, there ain't no such animule!"

The details of this mastodon of the rails read somewhat like a fairy tale. The boiler, for instance, is almost 64 feet long, weighs 165 000 pounds, its inside diameter at the small or front end is 8½ feet and is intended to operate at 250 pounds steam pressure; 20,000 holes were drilled in it and 5,153 stay-bolts are used to hold its seams together. Its fire box is 22 feet long and 9½ feet wide—larger than an ordinary room.

Because of its tremendous size and power both the throttle and reversing mechanisms are operated by compressed air. Coal can be mechanically fed into its seething furnace at the rate of 45,000 pounds or 22½ tons an hour and twin centrifugal pumps are capable of forcing 100,000 pounds or 12,000 gallons of water into its boiler in the same time.

PHILLIPS FAMILY HAS MANY COPS

Members Are on Forces of Three Nations.

Columbus, Ohio.—Some families run to money; others take up golf. But the ancestral urge of three Columbus brothers spurs them to pursue crooks.

The three are this city's first family police trio. Their family tree took root in the British Isles and was nourished by Scotland Yard and the Royal Northwest Mounted police of neighboring Canada.

Leo Phillips, twenty-seven, youngest of the trio, was appointed patrolman only recently. John E. Phillips, thirty-one, is a plainclothes man on the vice squad. He has been a policeman five years. Otto W. Phillips, thirty-five, is a detective, having been with the department six years. Most recently he has been noted for his connection with the Dr. James H. Snook case here.

The three brothers reside on the same street. Each is married, and John and Leo are fathers.

Incidentally, their father, John A. Phillips of Pomeroy, Ohio, was not content to retire from business without his fling of adventure. On giving up his coal office he became a member of the Pomeroy merchant police.

Back of Pomeroy, where the brothers were born, is Old Tucking Mill, Pembrokeshire, Step-a-Side, South Wales, British Isles. That is the Phillips family seat.

From there the brothers' uncle, Tom A. Phillips, entered Scotland Yard. For 38 years he has been an inspector.

Three other relatives are members of the Canadian "mounties." One is an inspector, another a sergeant, and the third a corporal.

Leo, the youngest, had major league baseball possibilities. He had been in the Mississippi Valley league, the Western league, and with Salisbury, N. C., in a Southern circuit. The Pittsburgh Pirates held an option on him while in the latter berth.

"I like baseball, and I like the thought of police work," Leo said. "There wasn't much to choose between them, but I guess the old family itch won out."

Three Elephants Make Boardwalk Whoopee

Atlantic City.—A little man from Iowa was about to sit down at a front table in a restaurant on Atlantic avenue when an elephant leaped through the front window.

The little man and about 20 other patrons scurried back into the kitchen and shivered as they listened to cries from Atlantic avenue, indicating that two other elephants were prancing loose among the salt water taffy stands.

This elephant howdy-do presented a problem that was not solved until mahouts, as they call elephant experts in Atlantic City, had backed the restaurant elephant out and had subdued the salt-water-taffy stand elephants by banging their sensitive toenails with clubs kept handy for the purpose.

The elephants had been dancing all summer at the Million Dollar Pier under the direction of Maude Henry's elephant dancing instructors. Something snapped in the elephant's minds and they began to run about and to trumpet and dance. Pansy, the largest, went into the Globe restaurant. The other rummaged for taffy.

All was excitement for a quarter of an hour until they were subdued.

Dog Sports Gold Tooth; (Master Is a Dentist)

Belfast, Maine. — Lady Patricia, nineteen-month-old Boston terrier owned by Dr. Thomas W. Lothrop, Jr., is the most envied pup along the shores of Penobscot Bay, because she wears a crown of solid gold, not on her head but in her mouth, for her master is a dentist.

Lady Patricia comes from a very aristocratic old family, the daughter of Cappy Ricks and Lady Estella Peggy, both of whom frequently are exhibited at the shows and carry off many honors.

Italians Come Back

Rome.—Out of 98,927 Italians who repatriated themselves in 1928 with enough fortune to live here, 31,815 came from France, 25,220 from the United States, 10,876 from Switzerland, 18,276 from Argentina and 3,118 from Brazil.

Husband's 35-Cent Allowance Raised

Los Angeles.—Husbands, attention. If the circumstances are right and you have a "break," you only have to be sued by your wife for divorce in order to get a bigger cut of the old pay envelope for your personal spending money. "I make $24 a week," said Walter Oswold, a school gardener, to Judge Rey Schauer, "and I keep 35 cents of it." Mrs. Oswold was told that after 28 years of it she ought to stand married life a little longer, especially as the court could not see how she could be granted alimony out of such a wage. She insisted, however.

"After this, you keep $5 a week," the judge told the defendant.

SOL FAILS TO MAKE GOOD AT FORECASTS

Sunspot Phenomena Are Not Yet Explained.

Washington. — Old Sol recently staged his big parade of plain and fancy sunspots, but has not yet been able to establish himself as a reliable herald of mundane weather, in the opinion of official forecasters here.

The period when the sun exhibits the maximum number of spots, recurring at intervals of approximately 11 years, is now passing. Although the sunspot demonstrations in recent months have engrossed interest of scientists and public in all parts of the world, the United States weather bureau sees no new and dependable evidence that sunspots afford a reliable basis for weather forecasting, as pseudo-scientists have alleged from time immemorial.

"This bureau has given careful attention to studies of solar phenomena, but does not know of any study that has established a definite relation between weather conditions and sunspots," Dr. Charles F. Marvin, chief of the weather bureau, said.

Has Not Been Proved.

"It would be exceedingly difficult to establish such a relationship because of the rotation of earth and sun, and also because at any one time there are many kinds of weather occurring in different parts of the earth. How may one determine which particular kind of weather might theoretically be correlated with a sunspot which might at the time exist? We would welcome any rational demonstration that sunspots control the weather, but so far this has not been proved and some of the efforts to do so have been absurd.

"On the other hand, terrestrial magnetic and auroral phenomena have been closely co-ordinated with the sunspots."

Doctor Marvin said that the bureau possesses information concerning sunspots going back to the early Christian era, and that a complete detailed record of sunspots is available commencing in 1749. This record has been graphed by bureau scientists and shows that the number of sunspots goes through cycles of eleven years, this approximate period elapsing between the recurrence of the maximum number of spots. This maximum falls roughly in the latter part of 1928 and early in 1929.

Meteors May Cause Them.

The record shows that in some months as many as 250 spots have been visible, while in others there may be none at all. The longest period when the sun was unspotted was 23 months from 1809 to 1811.

"Some scientists hold the view that the eleven-year period is the result of gravitational action resulting from movements of the planets Jupiter and Saturn, but other authorities contend that the spots could be explained by internal action of the sun," Doctor Marvin said.

"Recently the bureau published, on its merits, a study of the planetary hypothesis of sunspots by Dinsmore Alter of the University of Kansas, which sought to show that short period fluctuations in the spottedness of the sun could be correlated with the movements of Venus, Mercury and the earth. Other scientists entertain the theory that the sunspots may be caused by meteors which strike the sun."

Regrets Fibbing, Rides 40 Miles to Confess It

Tafe, Calif.—One man's conscience caused him to drive 40 miles at an early hour to correct a trivial prevarication, according to State Traffic Officer Robert C. Dear, in charge of the West side detail of state traffic officers. The gray-haired man with foot-long whiskers drove into the local state traffic department office to obtain an operator's license.

He resides on a homestead about twenty miles above McKittrick, and has been driving an automobile for several years. He passed the examination and told Officer Dear that he had obtained an operator's license in 1927.

The next day about six o'clock the man arrived at the local office and waited until the department opened at eight o'clock, and then sidled up to Officer Dear and told him he had something very important to tell him. He hadn't obtained a license in 1927, and his conscience had bothered him so badly during the night that he couldn't sleep, so he just had to come in and straighten the matter out. Officer Dear says he'll get his license.

Hickman's Captors Lose Los Angeles Rewards

Los Angeles.—The city of Los Angeles is not authorized to offer or pay any rewards for the apprehension of criminals, and 12 claimants of the $10,000 reward offered by officials for the capture of William Edward Hickman are "out of luck," City Attorney Erwin P. Werner has advised the council.

Werner's ruling was given after the council had adopted an ordinance instructing the city clerk to deliver $10,000 to Los Angeles county for the purpose of bringing an inter-pleader action in the courts to determine the rights of claimants.

Among the claimants were Tom Gurdane and Buck Lleuallen, Oregon captors of Hickman, the slayer of little Marion Parker.

"TREASURE CAVE" IS FOUND EMPTY

Kansas Dreams of Wealth Prove Pipe Dream.

Marysville, Kan.—Dreams of gold nuggets, bags of gold dust and other valuables and relics which were thought to be in Marshall county's limestone cavern, about seven miles south of here, came to an end when the opening was explored by Everett Kraemer and Emil Peeks of Marysville.

Instead of hidden treasures the two young men found only pieces of jagged rock and several marks and carved initials. The cave has been known to exist for some time, but only a few persons knew the exact location of the spot until recently.

Considerable comment was made concerning the cave two weeks ago when John G. Ellenbecker of Marysville wrote a story in a local paper. The two men became interested and decided to explore it.

According to legends concerning the cavern it was previously the rendezvous of a pioneer, who secluded himself in a cave whenever Indians became warlike in that vicinity. It has also been told and retold by parents to their children in the community that the cave was the hiding place of treasures of persons who were returning from California on the Oregon trail after the gold rush.

Access to the cave was gained when Kraemer and Peeks supplied themselves with flashlights and disappeared into the opening, 30 by 30 inches, at the summit of a big hill. After crawling on their hands and knees for about four feet in a passageway no larger than the opening they came to a large chamber. The opening was large enough so that they could proceed while standing erect.

The opening then tapered down until the men came to a second small opening. By wedging themselves sidewise they were able to pass through. Upon crawling a short distance they were again able to stand up in another large chamber. The pair followed the passageway for about 15 feet, and it, too, tapered down like the first one encountered. They followed it on hands and knees and came to where they could proceed no further. They believe that the cavern ends at that spot, which is over 50 feet under ground.

Homing Pigeons Lose Way in Radio Waves

Boston.—Radio broadcasting on its present large scale has been responsible for the complete loss of homing pigeons and has delayed others from returning to their base, Godfrey Timmermans of Roxbury, who for the past twenty years made a hobby of studying and raising the birds, has discovered.

Timmermans, ever since he began his study, takes his birds, about twenty at a time, into the country where he releases them one by one to fly back home as training for races. Their trainer says he rarely lost a bird until the advent of radio broadcasting on a large scale, which has caused a few of the birds to lose their bearings and fail to return, he says. Others are delayed when they fly into radio waves and have to circle for some time to get their bearings again.

Backsliders Are Victims of "Morbus Sabbaticus"

London.—A churchman has discovered a new disease called "morbus sabbaticus," which is fatal to the soul.

This disease is peculiar to churchgoers, says Rev. A. V. Astin, vicar of Christ church, Chadderton. The popular name for the disease is "Sunday sickness."

"The attack," writes the vicar, "comes on suddenly every Sunday; no symptoms are felt Saturday night; the patient sleeps well, eats a hearty breakfast, but about church time the attack comes on and continues until the services are over for the morning. On Monday he wakes up refreshed and does not have the symptoms until the next Sunday."

400-Year-Old Vine Dies

Berlin.—The oldest grapevine in Germany is dead. For 400 years it grew on a private estate, producing its 75 gallons of wine each year. After the last severe winter no new shoots appeared.

New Yorkers Engage in 4,338 Occupations

New York.—New Yorkers engage in 4,338 separate occupations, according to the classifications in the new Donnelly's Red Book. Doctors lead with 13,000 in the entire city, 5,800 in Manhattan alone. Lawyers come next with 4,900 in Manhattan and a total of 6,900 in the city. The list runs alphabetically from "abattoirs" to "zinc." In between are such listings as magic tricks, deckling paper, dice, scavengers, back number newspaper dealers, noodles, nurserymen, pompons, powder puffs, beds concealed and pretzels. In keeping with the telephone books the classified list this year is split into boroughs. Staten Island is left out.

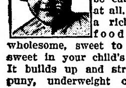
Children Cry for Fletcher's CASTORIA
A BABY REMEDY
APPROVED BY DOCTORS
FOR COLIC, CONSTIPATION, DIARRHEA

Dorothy's Mother Proves Claim



Children don't ordinarily take to medicines but here's one that all of them love. Perhaps it shouldn't be called a medicine at all. It's more like a rich, concentrated food. It's pure, wholesome, sweet to the taste and sweet in your child's little stomach. It builds up and strengthens weak, puny, underweight children, makes them eat heartily, brings the roses back to their cheeks, makes them playful, energetic, full of life. And no bilious, headachy, constipated, feverish, fretful baby or child ever failed to respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup on their little bowels. It starts lazy bowels quick, cleans them out thoroughly, tones and strengthens them so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

Millions of mothers know about California Fig Syrup from experience. A Western mother, Mrs. J. G. Moore, 119 Cliff Ave., San Antonio, Texas, says: "California Fig Syrup is certainly all that's claimed for it. I have proved that with my little Dorothy. She was a bottle baby and very delicate. Her bowels were weak. I started her on Fig Syrup when she was a few months old and it regulated her, quick. I have used it with her ever since for colds and every little set-back and her wonderful condition tells better than words how it helps."

Don't be imposed on. See that the Fig Syrup you buy bears the name, "California" so you'll get the genuine, famous for 50 years.

> STORY FROM THE START
>
> Capt. Lion Fellowes' American ship is sunk by the British off Portugal in the War of 1812. Fellowes' life is saved by Cara Inglepin, daughter of the owner of the American ship, True Bounty. Capt. Chater, in trade with the enemy. Because of love for Cara he consents to sail as mate. The True Bounty is stopped by the British frigate, Badger, Capt. Collishawe.

"'Toying with another government. You have a trick of language, Cara. 'Tis so. They are for re-electing this idiot President of theirs, while those of your father's opinion labor to supply our wants—and remedy the sores that run at home. But their eyes will be opened anon. Admiral Cockburn has proclaimed a blockade of their whole coast, and with Napoleon tottering we shall soon have sufficient troops in Canada to brush aside their militia levies, sweep down the Hudson and take New York."

"Aye, aye, Cap'n Collishawe, that's how it shall be," Chater cried servilely. "And if ye'll suffer me to attend ye to the cabin, we'll tell ye summut of interest along that line."

Cara seconded the invitation.

"Yes, yes, James, do let me give you a dish of tea. We've so much to discuss. I had vast success in Lisbon. There were friends bade me fetch messages to you, and my father will wish to know how the Admiral esteems our purposes. So come below, James, and meanwhile Captain Chater shall give orders to break out a barrel of port for you—yes, Captain Chater, and a tierce of lemons to ward against the scurvy."

Collishawe bowed his appreciation.

"Always thoughtful, Cara! Ah, I'll be grateful when this cursed war is ended, and I may call on you again in Broadway, and smoke my pipe in the garden under the tulip trees."

Her answering smile, as he ushered her into the cabin, was a dagger of jealousy in Fellowes' heart. Raging silently, the Long Islander didn't hear Chater's hail until it had been repeated.

"Fellowes! Ahoy, Mr. Fellowes! Ye heard Miss Cara's orders? Well, see to 'em. The port ye can take from the cabin stores—I'll send the key."

For the next quarter hour Fellowes was busy, slinging the keg of port overside, and breaking out the lemons from beneath the for'ard hatch. When the task had been concluded he walked aft, entering the cabin companionway without knocking, as was his custom. At the end of the passage was the main cabin, a spacious apartment, with a long table thwartwise of the ship, about which sat Miss Inglepin, Collishawe and Chater, their heads bent over a small heap of papers. Fellowes could distinguish several documents which bore official seals.

"The Admiral should be off the Delaware capes," Collishawe was saying. "But we'll pass on the word to him."

"We must have time to consult our New England friends," interposed Miss Inglepin.

"Aye, 'tis no matter to be hasted," agreed Chater. And raising his head, perceived Fellowes in the companionway. "Well, naow, what will it be, Mr. Fellowes?"

"The cabin stores key."

"Oh!" Chater cracked his finger-knuckles abstractedly, peering from his mate to the Badger's captain. "Well, jest hang it on the hook there. That'll be all, Mr. Fellowes."

Miss Inglepin looked away as Fellowes strode across the narrow floor, but Collishawe eyed him alertly.

"I've seen you in New York, haven't I?" Collishawe asked Fellowes, who replied, with a shrug:

"Very likely, Captain. I remember having seen you."

"Ah! Be so good as to shut the companionway door after you."

Fellowes tramped out. What were they up to in the cabin? He recalled Cara's conversation with Wellington. Was the True Bounty a medium for conveying intelligence of treasonable plots to the enemy?

Against the evidence accusatory he balanced his conviction of Cara's essential honesty, and not least, her fervid plea the night before. And he mustn't let jealousy of another man dye his opinions, he realized.

Perhaps half an hour passed, when the cabin door banged open, and Collishawe stepped out, Chater at his heels.

"Very good, Captain," the Englishman said in response to a remark Fellowes missed. "Please tell Miss Cara I'm sorry she was obliged to leave us. And I shall have to ask you to muster your crew. Very strict orders, y' know. 'Admiral instructs me to seize every British subject in enemy vessels."

"Well, naow, sir, jest ye cast your eye over the men," whinnied Chater. "Good, honest Federalists, every man jack of 'em, New Englanders, except a couple of lads out of Long Island."

"What about your officers?" Collishawe spun on his heel, and looked straight at Fellowes. "You, sirrah! I told you in the cabin I had seen you before. Your name is Fellowes, ain't it?"

"Yes, Captain," Fellowes answered quietly.

"Born in London, weren't you?"

"My father was—"

"Born in London?"

"My parents were in London because—"

"Went to Eton, eh?"

"Yes, but I don't see—"

Collishawe strode over to the gangway.

"A couple of you men up here," he called down to his boat's crew. And then, over his shoulder to Chater: "I'll have to press this man. British-born, and not of the type we can encourage in disloyalty."

"But I am an American citizen," Fellowes protested. "My father was consul—"

Collishawe ignored him.

"Bundle this feller overside," he directed the two bluejackets who had swarmed the gangway.

The bluejackets had seized Fellowes by either arm, and he tried to wrench out of their grip.

"Captain," he appealed to Chater, "you'll never submit to this! It's barefaced kidnaping."

Chater cracked his knuckles loudly, his sly twinkle belying the mournful droop assumed by his nut-cracker features.

"Doan't, for marcy's sake, go and fight, Fellowes," he begged. "'Twon't do ye no good." He addressed Collishawe direct: "I calc'late ye kind of misunderstand, Captain. I've knowed Fellowes for years. His father was in London—"

"Immaterial to me what fetched his father to London," snapped Collishawe. "He's British-born. Get on with him, men."

Fellowes began to struggle, but the two husky bluejackets pinioned his hands behind his back. One of them snatched a loose coil of rope from the deck, and slipped a loop around his waist.

"Over with ye, me 'earty," he said cheerfully, and gave Fellowes a shove.

The Long Islander tumbled out the gangway, and skillfully checked by his captors above, was lowered like a meal sack into the waiting quarter-boat, heaving on the swell under the True Bounty's lee.

A little stunned by his bumping descent Fellowes lay where he had fallen while Collishawe dropped nimbly into the sternsheets. The True Bounty had way on her, and was already sliding through the water; but Fellowes had a brief glimpse of the duenna's face, very white and worn. That is, he thought it was the duenna he saw, for the first time since putting out over Tagus bar, but he decided he must have lost his senses. For the face at the port said distinctly, with a thick tongue:

"Arrah, holy saints, they've stole the poor lad clane away!"

Fellowes was dumfounded, dazed by the suddenness of the injustice which had overtaken him. A whip was lowered from the yardarm of the Badger, and he was slung through the air as casually as so much merchandise. Collishawe, who followed him by way of the jacob's ladder, was equally casual in manner.

"Slack off this man's bonds. Mr. Curry—" to an officer, who held a spyglass under his arm—"have that quarterboat hauled aboard, and make sail for our station. Bosun! Clinch! Where's Clinch?"

"Aye, aye, sir!" A stalwart, battered sailor, with a jagged scar across one cheek, rolled up, tugging at his forelock.

"Have this man mustered in—able seaman—draw clothing for him."

But Fellowes turned desperately to Collishawe.

"Look here, Captain," he exclaimed, "you've made a mistake. I'm not a British subject—"

"Born in London, weren't you?"

"Yes, but my father and mother both were American citizens. My father was our consul."

"Humph! Don't think that lets you off. However—Humph! Got your press protection?"

"'Press protection?'" Fellowes repeated thickly. "No! Why should I carry one? I'm an American citizen, I tell you—and no common sailor, into the bargain. I hold master's papers."

Collishawe eyed him coldly.

Ireland's Famous Hill

Tara is the name of a hill in County Meath, Ireland. It was here that the triennial convention of the Irish kings was established by Ollam Fodlah, about 900 B. C. According to tradition the palace of Tara was 900 feet square, containing 150 apartments and 150 dormitories. The early kings of Ireland were said to be crowned here and tradition further states that Tara at the time of the advent of St. Patrick to Ireland was the principal seat of Druidism in Ireland. It is said to have been abandoned through the curse of St. Ruadan, 450, on account of its idolatry.

Radio Tends the Baby

An eastern mother whose husband is a radio expert, makes her radio set tend the baby. When she puts him in his crib upstairs she places the loud speaker near him. By turning the loud speaker into a microphone, by use of an adapter, when the baby wakes up and cries mother gets the signal by radio wherever her household duties may take her. This is done by reversing the radio set. No nursemaid was ever more watchful and unfailing.—Capper's Weekly.

Kills Father-in-Law in Desperate Battle

Paducah, Ky.—Lucien C. Turk, forty years old, and his father-in-law, W. S. McCloy, forty-nine, engaged in a pistol fight in the latter's hardware store at Bardwell in which McCloy was killed and Turk was seriously wounded. A quarrel over domestic affairs is said to have caused the shooting. The Turk and McCloy families are among the most prominent in this section of Kentucky. They reside in Bardwell.

In 1913, Turk and May Copeland, charged with the murder of Hugh Atchison, farmer, were acquitted in Carlisle Circuit court.

BOYS SHOW METTLE IN RESCUING GIRL

New York Youngsters in Role of Life Savers.

New York.—Two boys rescued a little girl and her father and mother when flames swept the third floor of a tenement house recently.

Four-year-old Mary Gannon was playing on the kitchen floor while her mother adjusted a kerosene lamp. The lamp slipped from Mrs. Mary Gannon's hands and a pool of blazing kerosene spread through the kitchen. The blaze was between Mrs. Gannon and her daughter and the mother was helpless. The girl stepped out to the fire escape but was afraid to come down the ladder. The mother was driven into a front room where John Gannon, her husband, was asleep.

Nicholas Barbarito, nineteen, was in the backyard of his home with Edward Scheiblin, fourteen. The boys saw the little girl on the fire escape.

They climbed to the roof of the burning building. Nicholas grasped Edward's feet and lowered him to the fire escape, where he was just able to catch Mary's dress and pull her over the coping. Crowds stood agape below and watched the struggle. The boys then descended to the top floor of an adjoining building where they broke down a door and aided the father and mother to safety.

Mr. and Mrs. Gannon were slightly burned. The little girl was unhurt.

Nervy Thief Gets Away With Stolen Dwelling

Butte, Mont.—Abduction of children, automobiles, accessories, cattle and other live stock is common enough in Montana, but until recently the abduction of a four-room house had never been reported.

Sheriff's deputies, armed with a warrant, are searching for William F. Sullivan, who is alleged to have stolen a four-room house, moved it a mile from its original site, and sold it for $200.

Sullivan, the complaint charges, put the vacant house on rollers, hauled it to an empty lot, and sold it to Mrs. Isabell Lloyd. The house was owned by Mrs. Anna Walch, Seattle, Wash., formerly of Butte.

Mrs. Lloyd, becoming suspicious, investigated. The abduction was disclosed and the hunt for Sullivan launched.

Indictment Refused for Girl Slayer of Father

Red Bank, N. J.—A twelve-year-old girl was exonerated for killing her father, whom she accused of criminal attacks.

Catherine Crawford, the youthful slayer, shot her father, George H. Crawford, recently, in their Keyport home after he had called her into his room. She was arrested on a charge of murder, which was changed to manslaughter, and was released under $25,000 bail. The grand jury failed to indict her, however, and her formal release was announced by Prosecutor John J. Quinn.

"This girl had a right under the laws of New Jersey to defend herself from a parent who was immoral and degenerate," Quinn said. "Our evidence indicates that she had in the past been attacked four times. I believe the shooting was justified."

Wales' Detective Has Miraculous Pockets

London, England.—The beaming-faced chap so often seen with the prince of Wales, and whose identity puzzles many persons, is Inspector Wirt, the prince's detective.

Inspector Wirt's schoolboy countenance hides a tremendous physical strength which is never taxed by the unceasing round of activities of his royal charge.

The inspector has miraculous pockets. He has been known to delve out biscuits for the prince's cairn puppy or a postage stamp for the prince without a minute's fumbling.

Hurt by Blasting Fuse

Staunton, Va.—Curious, in the manner of children, as to what would happen if a blasting fuse was struck with a hard object, Katherine Vest, twelve-year-old daughter of Mrs. Minnie Vest, experimented and was painfully injured.

Katherine, with other children of the neighborhood, found the fuse on nearby premises owned by a man who is said to use explosives in his work. The child was injured about the legs, arms and chest.

Needless Pain!

Some folks take pain for granted.

They let a cold "run its course."

They wait for their headaches to "wear off."

If suffering from neuralgia or from neuritis, they rely on feeling better in the morning.

Meantime, they suffer unnecessary pain. Unnecessary, because there is an antidote. Bayer Aspirin always offers immediate relief from various aches and pains we once had to endure. If pain persists, consult your doctor as to its cause.

Save yourself a lot of pain and discomfort through the many uses of Bayer Aspirin. Protect yourself by buying the genuine. Bayer is safe. Always the same. All drugstores.

Life looks rosy for him

Health worth more than fortune

THE baby to be envied is the one who is born with an inheritance of perfect health, to begin with. And who's lucky enough to have a mother who knows how to build up this fortune.

"Perhaps I'm old-fashioned," she'll say to the doctor who pronounces her child physically 100% at a baby show, "but this health certificate means more to me than all the stock certificates in the world. If my baby grows up strong and well, I'm willing to leave it to him to make a career and fortune for himself.

"Already I'm teaching him the value of regular habits. Regular sleep, regular meals, regular functions. He's never once been off schedule, not even when he was cutting teeth or traveling to the country. I make sure of that by giving him Nujol regularly."

Nujol works so easily and naturally that it won't upset a baby under any conditions. It keeps everything functioning properly. It not only prevents any excess of body poisons (we all have them) from forming but aids in their removal. It is safe and sure. Nujol was perfected by the Nujol Laboratories, 2 Park Avenue, New York.

Heir to millions

Just try Nujol for your baby. Give it to him regularly for the next three months. See if it doesn't make things much easier for both of you. Certainly it could do no harm—for Nujol contains no drugs or medicine. Your druggist carries it. Be sure you get the genuine. Sold only in sealed packages.

Beauty is only skin deep—and the same may be said of freckles.

Men like these are testing your car

ENGINEERING TESTS

Types of the engineers at General Motors Proving Ground who are working for you. Drawn from a photograph. They are shown examining a specially devised instrument for measuring clutch pedal pressure.

It used to be the custom for a man who wanted to buy a car to take a mechanic with him.

Today, General Motors itself employs skilled automotive engineers to make it easy for you to select your new car. These men are working for you at its Proving Ground—the 1268-acre outdoor laboratory in Michigan where every kind of car is tested.

Before any General Motors car goes into production, a fleet of advance models is constructed and sent to the Proving Ground. There these advance cars must meet every test—tests far harder than you would make. Sometimes they are rebuilt, redesigned, retested many times until they are pronounced right, and ready to be put into production.

The tests involve speed, power, endurance, braking, riding comfort, handling ease; fuel and oil economy; body strength and safety—every phase of car construction and performance.

Buying a car is easy today—because these men at the Proving Ground are working for you to assure you of value when you select a General Motors car.

PRODUCTION: The chief advantage of a silo is that it saves feed. When 100 tons of corn are properly put in the silo, there will be practically 100 tons consumed. When corn is shocked up in the field and fed in the bundle, there is often as much as one-third that is not consumed.

MANUFACTURING: A fieldman writing an account of the opening of a new co-operative creamery stated, "The farmers hung around in the craeamery most of the day to see how the creamery was run." Fine---we would give these farmers who hung around a mark of 100. Farmers who know most about how their co-operative creamery is operated are always the best patrons.

MARKETING: Note the products you always buy, whether a binder, a pair of shoes, or coffee, or breakfast food, and you will see that the name of the product has a great deal to do with your buying it. You haue learned to know the name or brand of the product. and you connect the good qualities of the product, whatever it may be, with the name. There are names or brands that could not be purchased for a million dollars because they are favorably known nationally, and some world-wide.

Big Crowd Attended Sale

A crowd that looked like one attending a small county fair, gathered at the H. E. Hanson place on Monday to attend his auction sale. The day was nice and warm and everybody had the bidding spirit. Everything on the place sold at a fair price, which seemed to satisfy both the buyers and the owner.

Mr. Hanson sold fifteen fine cows at his sale and we are glad to know that about half of them were bought by local men who will keep them in this community.

Mr. Hanson and family, who have farmed on the Barhals place for about six years, has not yet made any plans as to where he will move, but we hope he will make up his mind to remain near Holt.

Dr. Theodor Bratrud Buys Spaulding Farm at Warren

Dr. Theodor Bratrud of Warren was the successful bidder on the 1500 acre Spaulding farm adjoining Warren, which was sold at auction recently. The consideration is reported to have been approximately $33 an acre. The farm is in good condition and has extensive improvements. It is understood the new owner has made arrangements to rent the farm for a three year term.

NOTICE OF SALE
Of Remaining Assets of the Holt State Bank, Holt, Minnesota.

Up to and including Monday, November 4, bids will be received on the remaining assets of the Holt State Bank.

A list of these assets may be examined at the Marshall County State Bank, Holt, Minnesota, or at the office of the Commissioner of Banks.

A certified check of 10 per cent of bid should accompany same. The right to reject any or all bids is reserved.

PRODUCTION: It has been found that the best way to fill a silo is to have a short pipe attached to the top of the blower pipe in the silo and to run all the silage in the center of the silo. It is not necessary to have any one in the silo. The weight of the silage packs it. The chief thing is to be sure to run the silage straight down to the center. It forms a cone and distributes itself and packs.

MANUFACTURING: Wherever there is a cream station in a town with a co-operative creamery, is is a pretty sure sign that the farmers who patronize the cream station have never given much thought or study to the manufacture of butter through the co-operative creamery system. The co-operative creamery system of manufacturing butter makes butter at the lowest cost per pound, and pays the farmers the highest price for butterfat.

MARKETING: The value of a name or brand in marketing a product was recognized by the co-operate creameries when they selected the name "Land O' Lakes" for their highest quality butter. Creameries allows no one to use their brand for selling butter not made by them.

Tuberculosis Area Test To Start In County Oct. 21

On Monday October 21st, 1929, a modified cattle quarantine as required by sections 5369 and 5421, Chapter 30, General Statutes of 1923, wherein it becomes unlawful to bring cattle into Marshall County, unless a permit is obtained from the State Livestock Sanitary Board. See posted notices. About 300 will be posted in different parts of the county, as these rules are rather lengthy. Above mentioned notices will be posted about October 21st.

Indemnity, sections 5402—5403 of above mentioned law provides that grade cattle can be appraised as high as $100 and pure-breds as high as $200. I will try to explain how this works out, say when the veterinarian reads the test he finds a cow that reacts, it is then up to the owner and the veterinarian to agree upon a valuation, and if the animal is a good milker and consequently thin and a value of $90 is agreed on she can only be shipped and sold for slaughter say she weighs 1200 pounds and sell for 6 cents a pound that would bring $72.00 from the packer. The State pays all reasonable freight and handling expenses, so I will leave them out. She was valued at $90 and sold at $72, a difference of $18, of which the State pays two thirds or $12 and the owner stands a loss of one third or $6. This would net the owner $84, or about $1.20 more than if she had not reacted, as in that case the owner would have to pay freight and handling charges if we figure them at 60c per 100 pounds.

But if on arriving at the stockyards she was found in so bad condition that the packer could not use her meat, then the State would pay two thirds, or $60, and the owner would have to stand a loss of $30 or one third. In the case of young stock in good condition, they will in many cases sell above valuation that can be set on them. In such a case the owner would be ahead the freight.

The helpers for veterinarians or testers during the test period in Marshall Co. from Oct. 21 to Nov. 3, 1929:

Dist. 2 — John Loven, Gatzke; Veldt, Rollis
Dist. 5—Ole Tveit, Holt; Grand Plain, Mud Lake, & Whiteford
Dist. 6—John Sorum, Holt; Agdar East Valley & 8 in So. Cedar Dist. 10 — Harry Engen, Holt; Holt Twp. Holt Village
Dist. 11 — Willis Warring, T. R. Falls Route No. 2; Excell Twp.
Dist. 12 — Orris Halvorson, Viking; New Solum, Village of Viking & 8 in East Viking

These meet with the testers in the Court House in Warren Sunday Oct. 20 at 1.30 p. m. to get the cards and supplies from the county auditor and take tester along home. Testing will start Monday morning, Oct. 21, 1929.

I will in conclusion ask all cattle owner in Marshall County to please co-operate during the test period, give the tester and helper all the assistance, and thereby save the county expense and yourselves taxes.

Very truly yours,
G. A. SUSTAD, Sec.,
Marshall Co. T. B. Committee.

Schilling Finds Land O' Lakes Wrapper in Chesapeake Bay

From a letter just recently received from Mr. W. F. Schilling, member of the Federal Farm Bord, we take the following paragraph:

"Last Sunday I went as a guest of a number of people down to Chesapeake Bay to the southernmost point of Maryland where the first arrivals in this state built their church. While I was walking along the beach I found a very well preserved wrapper of a pound carton of Land O' Lakes Butter and I don't know as I ever found anything that made me more happy for a few moments than this. Just think, on the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay in the water of the Atlantic Ocean, finding this picturesque wrapper of a pound of butter from God's country.

Puzzled About Life Insurance?

Many thinking people are. Perhaps you are one of these.

Modern Life Insurance is just another form of diversifying your holdings and creating an income and an estate. This is much different from the old "lump sum at death" conception.

The variety of policies has become so confusing that men of affairs now go to their banker for suggestions in fitting a policy to their individual needs. Can we help you?

ONE PRESCRIPTION MADE FAMILY DOCTOR FAMOUS

Seldom has any single act been of greater benefit to mankind than that of Dr. Caldwell in 1885, when he wrote the prescription which has carried his fame to the four corners of the earth.

Over and over, Dr. Caldwell wrote the prescription as he found men, women and children suffering from those common symptoms of constipation, such as coated tongue, bad breath, headaches, gas, nausea, biliousness, no energy, lack of appetite, and similar things.

Demand for this prescription grew so fast, because of the pleasant, quick way it relieved such symptoms of constipation, that by 1888 Dr. Caldwell was forced to have it put up ready for use. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is always ready at any drugstore.

COULD NOT SLEEP NIGHTS

Helped By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Fairhaven, Mass.—"I am taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound during the Change of Life and I think it is a wonderful tonic. When I feel nervous and run-down my husband gets me a bottle right away. It is a great help to me and I think that if other people would only take it when they feel all run-down and take it as the directions say, they would find it a great benefit. My worst symptoms were nervousness and tired feelings. I could not sleep nights and I did not care about my work. I was so nervous I would cry if anyone looked at me."—Mrs. Ada Besse, 196 Washington Street, Fairhaven, Mass.

STORY FROM THE START

Capt. Lion Fellowes', American ship is sunk by the British off Portugal in the War of 1812 Fellowes' life is saved by Cara Inglepin, daughter of the owner of the American ship, True Bounty, Capt. Chater, in trade with the enemy. Because of love for Cara he consents to sail as mate. The True Bounty is stopped by the British frigate, Badger, Capt. Collishawe. Despite his American citizenship, Fellowes is taken aboard the Badger a "pressed" man He scents treachery.

—7—

"'Makes it worse for you. A native-born Englishman shipping with the enemy! 'Might be excusable if you were an ignorant feller, 'didn't know any better. Humph! Some captains would flog you on general principles."

A red mist swirled in front of Fellowes' eyes.

"If I'd had a weapon, you wouldn't have taken me," he snarled. "You trapped me, didn't you? That cur Chater put you up to it—he was afraid I understood his plotting."

"That will do. Another word, and you'll go in irons."

Something exploded in Fellowes' brain. It wasn't only Chater who had betrayed him. Cara— He choked.

"If you don't like words, try this." he gasped, and his fist shot up to Collishawe's jaw.

The Englishman pitched backward, long limbs asprawl, as Clinch and half a dozen more bluejackets closed in on Fellowes. Something like a grunt went up from the awestruck crew of the Badger. Collishawe lurched on to his feet. There was a puzzled look in the eyes of the Badger's captain, an expression almost of uncertainty.

"Easy with him," he directed Clinch. "Don't maul him. Here! Stand him up." And as Fellowes was dragged erect, cursing and fighting with all his strength: "Why on earth did you do that, man? 'Tis mutiny to strike your officer."

"You know why! 'Crimpin'' Collishawe, that's what they call you! You didn't even press me like an honest Englishman. No, you crimped me like any lick-spittle, pot-house shipping-agent. To clear the road for yourself!"

Collishawe met Fellowes' glance squarely, and so they fronted one another for several breaths.

"I should have liked to ignore your offense," Collishawe said finally. "You seem to labor under a misapprehension—"

"Oh, no," mocked Fellowes. "I know what you're up to—trying to cover the tracks of a pair of traitors."

Collishawe's hands clinched tightly

"You misapprehend me," he repeated. "I regret I cannot— But discipline must be maintained. Clinch, this man is to have fifty lashes—at once."

Fellowes went limp in his captors grasp. A clammy sweat dewed his face, sweat brewed by a volcanic gust of hate that rocked him to the soul His eyes glittered insanely. His voice came hoarsely:

"I'll kill you. Wherever you go, however long it takes to run you down, I'll kill you, Collishawe."

"Give him an hundred lashes, Clinch," Collishawe answered blenkly. He turned and strode aft, ignoring Fellowes' silent resumption of the struggle with Clinch's assistants.

"Easy all, lad," admonished the bosun. "If the cap'n doubles your ration again ye ain't likely to worrit much over your troubles. A 'undred lashes is fair nasty. But call yerself lucky, at that. Yer the first man I ever seed strike an orf'cer, and live."

"The dog," croaked Fellowes. "I'll kill him—"

"Oh, no ye won't, me lad! Not arfter a 'undred lashes. Now, then, what's the use o' fightin' us? We're only adoin' of our djooty. 'Ere, strip 'im, a couple of ye."

It occurred to Fellowes, as the rough hands of the sailors pawed his garments, that to continue resistance must only add further to his indignities. Whatever he did, his punishment would be administered. He must suffer. Very well, he'd suffer silently Better so. He'd not squander in idle resistance the energy which should feed the fires of hatred burning now in his heart with a high, relentless flame. Hate! He'd hate so long as life pulsed in him. He'd hate unswervingly, consumingly, with all the power of his spirit, each one of the group who had brought him to this pass—Collishawe, Chater, Cara Inglepin and the father who had begotten her. He'd spend his life, his money, his strength, in revenging himself upon them, one and all. But most of all upon her!

Something welled up in his throat, and he felt a stinging in his eyes.

"Cryin,' eh?" Clinch rumbled in his ear. "All right, lad. Let 'er drip. I've seen stouter men aweepin' like babies under the cat."

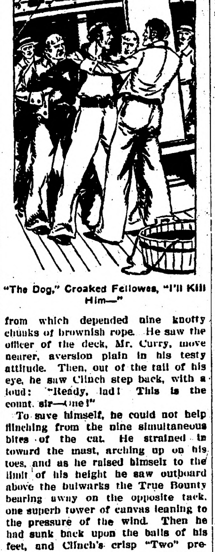
Fellowes shook the tears from his eyelids.

"The Englishman doesn't live can make me cry," he answered grimly. "Get on with your—duty, you called it? I shan't resist you."

"That's the proper spirit! 'Ere ye are, now—'ands over yer 'ead—and a turn 'round the wrists. 'Urt ye? It hadn't oughter be tight—ye'll wiggle main 'ard when Kitty starts to kiss ye, lad."

The red mist, with the salty moisture, had cleared from Fellowes' eyes. He was conscious of weariness, mental and physical; yet his body had acquired a peculiar lightness. Around him on the deck were grouped scores of sailors, an inhuman similarity in the ring of tanned faces and muscular bodies, all wearing the identical blue uniform. His watchers might have been hewed from a single pattern—except for two, who stood together a short distance for'ard of the mast. He observed this pair particularly because one of them was a negro, a giant of a man. The negro's companion was equally ugly, very short, monstrously broad, with comical, bowed legs and long, apelike arms.

Of all those on the Badger's deck this pair were the most brutal in appearance, ostensibly the most debased; but in some unexplainable way they imparted to him a message of sympathy. Their eyes signaled encouragement in his ordeal, and he felt mysteriously heartened. He saw, without trembling, Clinch striding aft, stripped to the waist like himself, in one gnarled fist a short stock of wood from which depended nine knotty chunks of brownish rope. He saw the officer of the deck, Mr. Curry, move nearer, aversion plain in his testy attitude. Then, out of the tail of his eye, he saw Clinch step back, with a loud: "Ready, lad! This is the count, sir—One!"



"The Dog," Croaked Fellowes, "I'll Kill Him—"

To save himself, he could not help flinching from the nine simultaneous bites of the cat. He strained in toward the mast, arching up on his toes, and as he raised himself to the limit of his height he saw outboard above the bulwarks the True Bounty bearing away on the opposite tack, one superb tower of canvas leaning to the pressure of the wind. Then he had sunk back upon the balls of his feet, and Clinch's crisp "Two" preceded the whistle of the lashes cutting into welts the first blow had raised, but this time he managed to keep from flinching. God, how he hated her!

"Three!" he lashes coiled lovingly around his flanks, criss-crossing the welts, drumming on his ribs, flicking the hair out by the roots. "Four!" Fire burned all over his back and sides, and reached to his belly. His body quivered under the agony of it. But inside him burned a fiercer fire. He raised his head indomitably, and rasped over one shoulder at Clinch:

"Why don't you hit hard, man?"

Clinch paused in the midst of a blow, almost abashed.

"'Ard?" he echoed. "Don't be 'asty, lad. 'Ere's five—and ninety-five to come."

"No talking," called Mr. Curry.

Cold Baths

A friend, in the hospital last winter, found his recovery hastened by fresh air which was admitted to his room despite zero temperature. If the window remained closed long he felt "wilted." The fresh air was a tonic. Fortunately, he had been prepared to stand cold temperatures by daily cold plunges. The frequent bath is something which the Western world learned from the Far East. India taught the British conquerors the value of the daily bath. Oriental peoples had been taking daily baths for a thousand years before Perry visited Japan.—Grove Patterson, in the Mobile Register.

Friends

We must, in great measure, take our friends as they are, if we are to have them at all. We cannot remodel any of them at will. When once we have accepted this fact, and the kindred fact that our friends are probably longing quite as fervently to improve us, we shall get a great deal more pleasure out of our companionships, and escape much mental friction.—Great Thoughts (London).

NEARBY AND YONDER

The Carnival of the Cowboy

NUMEROUS local and regional celebrations are held annually in this broad land, each springing from some historic or other background and calculated to apprize the universe that its particular locality offers something worthwhile, which fate denied to all the others. It remained, however, for Wyomingites to throw their hats in the ring, let out a few whoops and produce a "going on," which is unusual in the extreme, daring and thrilling in execution—action plus, held annually in their historic capital city of Cheyenne. Started some 30 years ago, as a purely Wyoming affair, it has become a western institution.

This "Frontier Day" celebration, as it is frequently termed, has for its major motif a long program—usually requiring from three to five days to complete—of exciting contests between human skill and courage on one hand, and cunning ferocity and brute strength on the other, which run the full gamut of cowboy activities in old-time, wild-west days, from races peculiar to the open range to riding bucking bronchos, roping and riding wild steers, bull-dogging, trick and fancy riding for cowboys and cowgirls and what not.

An outstanding and attractive feature of this big time in Wyoming is a dramatic Frontier parade which, in reality, is a history of transportation, to which come the Sioux and other Indians, in their colorful costumes ornamented with elk's teeth, shells, feathers and beads, from the days of the buffalo, the prairie schooner and the stage coach to the palatial transcontinental limited of today.

"The Singing Tower"

AT SO-CALLED iron mountain, the highest land elevation in all Florida, sacred ground of former Indian tribes, Edward W. Bok has seen his dream transformed into a reality, created a sanctuary "for humans and for birds" and crowned it with a masterpiece in towers which was dedicated and presented, for visitation, to the American people, by the President of the United States.

On a 48-acre tract great numbers of splendid palms, magnolias, live oaks, azaleas, primrose, jasmine, and other rare and beautiful plants and trees have been set out, accommodations arranged to fit the varying needs of various species of the feathered tribe, with the calculation that it will become a free-for-all stopping place for both native and migratory birds, a protectorate and a sanctuary, and thereby save the lives of thousands which are lost annually in course of migration.

Rising heavenward out of this sanctuary is a 205-foot tower, 51 feet square at the base, tapering to 37 feet at the top, done in gray, pink and white stone, which promises to be "a thing of beauty and a joy forever." Within this tower are great tanks for watering the sanctuary and the largest carillon of bells on earth—71 bells, ranging in weight from 12 to 24,000 pounds. In the hands of an experienced carillonneur, their music is positively divine. As the sound waves roll away from the structure the impression leads one to imagine that the tower itself had broken out into song, hence "The Singing Tower."

The Storm King Highway

"STORM KING" — a mountain which rises 1,389 feet out of the western edge of the Hudson near West Point, was so named "because of the clouds which gather about its summit in stormy weather." Early Dutch skippers called it Bóter Berg or Butter Hill, because its rounded outline resembled a huge hunk of butter.

To overcome the necessity of going around the mountain on the west and shorten the north-and-south highway along the west shore of the Hudson by many miles, it was decided to try the daring experiment of carving a highway in the rocky face of the eastern side of the mountain.

The first surveys were made by shooting cans of paint against the steepest points along the mountain's side. The marks thus made were located indirectly without being actually reached by the surveyors. In many places the slope was less than 30 degrees from vertical, and in the beginning the rock drillers were suspended from ropes tied to trees above the site of operations. Far below ran a railroad track which greatly complicated the job, lest rocks should fall upon the track and delay the trains.

The highway was opened to traffic in 1922, is four miles long, 24 feet wide and at the turn around the point of the mountain is almost exactly 400 feet directly above the water in the river. Its cost, aside from the right-of-way, was $900,000. Its construction made available to the public hitherto unreachable scenic views of rare charm. The panorama up and down the river must be seen to be fully appreciated. It is a scenic drive which, in many respects, is unequaled.

Knotty Legal Point Involved in Charge

Martinsburg, W. Va.—A technical point has arisen in the scheduled trial of John Hess, mountaineer, here on a charge of "driving while intoxicated" involving the finding of Hess, allegedly intoxicated, draped over the dashboard of his mule-drawn wagon near his home.

Officials say the "driving-while-intoxicated" charge is as proper, under the prohibition statute, as though Hess had been found at the steering wheel of his car. Friends of Hess, however, say this is stretching the law too far and they have come to his defense.

BOY THUGS ROUTED BY DETROIT GIRL

Wouldn't Allow Scamps of That Age to Rob Her.

Detroit, Mich.—Ellnore Bauman, just a year out of Switzerland, has strong ideas about the age qualifications of holdup men.

Therefore, when three youths of sufficiently tender age to be lain over a father's knee for a good, old-fashioned rebuke, attempted to hold up Ellnore and her escort, Carl Welladtt, the girl refused to be impressed.

Two of the youths jumped out of an automobile and, approaching Welladtt's car, ordered the occupants to get out. The lads were armed.

Ellnore, who is twenty-one, got out in a hurry and greeted the callow bandit on her side of the car with a resounding smack alongside the nose. Then she seized his pistol hand and grappled with him.

The second youth was busy watching Welladtt. The youth who remained in the car, seeing the battle going strongly against his companion, jumped out to help. Ellnore, seeing the odds against her, set up such a screaming that the youths scrambled back into the car and drove hastily away, after clubbing Welladtt over the head with the butt of a pistol.

The youth who had battled with Ellnore carried with him her purse, with a few cents in it, and the marks of her fingernails, executed in fanciful arabesques all over his face.

"I wasn't going to let kids like that rob me," Ellnore explained. "They should have been spanked."

Free, He Tries to Get Back in Jail Again

Rochester, N. Y.—Tony Marcono, twenty-seven, was released from jail here recently, a most disappointed individual. Disappointed because he could not stay there, he explained.

Tony had been locked up for beating his wife. The wife, be it known, had forgiven his cave-man tactics (as women do), and insured his release by withdrawing the charges against him. As she left the courtroom she smiled at Tony and urged him to follow her home.

Instead, her belligerent spouse turned to an officer and asked to be locked up again. The judge told him jails are for those who don't want to be locked up.

"All right," said Tony. "Just you wait, I go home. I take a good sock at her. Then you will bring me back, just the same."

Shifting Branch Brings Death to Snake Hunter

Franklin, W. Va.—Virgil M. Calhoun, thirty-eight, of Thornwood, near here, was fatally shot when a .22-caliber revolver which he had drawn to kill a large rattlesnake was accidentally discharged.

A sapling broke as he stepped on it to get in position for the shot, unbalancing him and the weapon was discharged, the bullet lodging in his neck.

Two young sons were with him at the time. One ran for aid, but the father was dead before assistance came. He was formerly a merchant at Thornwood, but recently had begun duties as salesman for a Baltimore house. His widow, two sons, two brothers and one sister survive.

Bear Chastises Cows for Bothering Cubs

Saranac Lake, N. Y.—Guests in South Bouquet Valley report witnessing a mother bear cuffing some cows because they came too near her cubs, which were playing in a pasture. The mother had remained in the shelter of the woods, while the cubs played about in the open.

The cows, at first afraid, later began to group about the bear babies. The mother rushed into the open, and, rising on her hind feet, cuffed the cows right and left. One cow, in particular, she followed so closely that it jumped a fence to escape the blows.

Lightning "Bobbed" Hair

Kristinehamn, Sweden.—How lightning performed an involuntary hair bobbing on a woman in Bonneberg, near here, has just been told by the victim, Mrs. Signe Paulstroem.

A heavy thunderstorm passed recently over her house. Lightning struck it and Mrs. Paulstroem was rendered unconscious. When she awoke she found part of her hair burned off by the lightning and her hair pins melted.

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

The Lamp and the Book

The Viscountess Astor, about to sail for her English home, talked to a reporter about a book that had failed.

"It was such a good book, too," she said. "Its failure makes you almost think that the American reading public is like Mrs. Smith.

"'I'm going to buy a book,' Mrs. Smith said.

"'A book!' said the astonished Mrs. Jones.

"'Yes,' Mrs. Smith explained. 'John has given me a jim dandy reading-lamp, and now I simply must have a book.'"

Los Angeles Boy Needed Help

Leroy Young, 1116 Georgia St., Los Angeles, is a "regular fellow," active in sports, and at the top in his classes at school. To look at him now, you'd think he never had a day's sickness but his mother says: "When Leroy was just a little fellow, we found his stomach and bowels were weak. He kept suffering from constipation. Nothing he ate agreed with him. He was fretful, feverish and puny.

"When we started giving him California Fig Syrup his condition improved quickly. His constipation and biliousness stopped and he has had no more trouble of that kind. I have since used California Fig Syrup with him for colds and upset spells. He likes it because it tastes so good and I like it because it helps him so wonderfully!"

California Fig Syrup has been the trusted standby of mothers for over 50 years. Leading physicians recommend it. It is purely vegetable and works with Nature to regulate, tone and strengthen the stomach and bowels of children so they get full nourishment from their food and waste is eliminated in a normal way. Four million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it. Always look for the word "California" on the carton to be sure of getting the genuine.

The Right Way to Redye Fine Silks

Textile makers always use special dyes for silk or wool. They know that is the best way. The makers of Diamond Dyes are the first to enable home dyers to follow this plan.

Next time you want to dye some of your more valuable articles of silk or wool, try the special Diamond Dyes in the Blue Package. They will give these materials clearer, more brilliant colors than any "all-purpose" dye. And they are just as easy to use as ordinary dyes. Like the white package Diamond Dyes, these dyes contain an abundance of the highest quality anilines. The blue package dyes silk or wool only; the white package dyes, or tints, any material. Either package; 15c, drugstores.

Is rattlesnake meat good to eat? Of course the uninitiated will at once answer in the negative, says the Pathfinder Magazine. But not so with the fair students of the nature study camp of the Pennsylvania State college summer session.

Some 200 students at the camp in the valley of the Seven Sisters mountains sampled fried rattlesnake and all declare "it tastes just like chicken or frogs' legs, and once you try it you're sure to come back for more."

PEPER'S TRUE SMOKE

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

Human Dynamos

In discussing the head of a big New York bank, a man, who is himself important in the financial world, criticized him as follows:

"He's a guy who exercises every morning."

I don't know whether this can be called a complete characterizer in view of the large amount of propaganda that there is now for matutinal exercising, but it certainly fitted the subject under discussion. What the author of the statement meant to say was that the bank president had accomplished the success he had made in life through brute strength and energy rather than through superior thinking and unusual mental adroitness. He is the type of executive who is always driving and pushing, and, when one stops to consider it, a great deal can be accomplished by application and brute strength without an unusual quantity of talent.

Luncheons Get Complicated

A young society woman gave a luncheon for twenty junior leaguers the other day, and her menu looked like one of these buffets. Her friends were on the eighteen day diet, and she had telephoned each of them to ask what day of the diet she was on. Proper meals were served at all times, and the hostess was obliged to provide twelve of the eighteen "days" on the diet.

The Resourceful Dramatist

Louis Weitzenkorn, editor of a New York paper, has written a play which has been accepted for production. One of the scenes is at a Long Island house party, and it shows the week-end guests who are complaining bitterly about the service and the dull time they are having. The owner is trying to think of a name for this country place, and he has heard his guests crabbing. Instantly he has an inspiration, and he calls it BELLYACRES.

Carbon Copies

Irvin Cobb was talking about the son of a great man the other day. To prove his point that the sons of great men do not usually measure up to the standards of their fathers, the name of this man is not necessary for the ancedote, and therefore will be omitted. Cobb's comment on the son was that he was a faint carbon copy of his father about eight times removed from the original made on purple carbon paper.

It's the Upkeep

I am informed that a banker has moved into the most expensive apartment in the city. It is on Park avenue, and occupies three floors. The living room is three stories high. The apartment was built to the banker's order, and cost $400,000. The cost of maintaining co-operative apartments is at least 10 per cent, so the banker's "rent," on top of the purchase price, is $40,000 a year. And that doesn't include the interest he might be getting from a $400,000 investment.

Church With 3 Members Opens Once Each Year

Middletown, N. Y.—Although the congregation numbers only three members, the Old School Baptist church at Slate hill, near here, is opened once a year for the annual meeting.

The church, which was founded in 1783, once was a flourishing religious community, but for a score of years has been used for only one purpose, the annual meeting.

Mrs. Charles Stickney of Sussex, N. J., clerk of the church, is the sole officer of the congregation. She and Mrs. Charles Wood of Slate Hill were the only ones at the meeting, which took place recently, the third member of the congregation, Mrs. Francis Stickney of Middletown, being ill.

Find Bull Lost in Heart of Huge Stack

Frankfort, Ind.—The prize bull story of the year if not of all time came from Postmaster Edward Spray.

For eight days a prize bull was missing on the Spray farm near Simpson Stop, south of here.

Jess Lucas, tenant on the farm, notified Spray that all search for the bull had proved fruitless.

Spray had about given up hope of finding the animal.

On the eighth day Lucas noticed a new tunnel in a large straw stack that was approximately 40 by 60 feet.

He investigated and found the bull clear in the center of the straw stack, slowly eating his way through to the other side!

The bull appeared to be in fairly good physical shape except that he was thirsty, not having had a drop to drink for eight days.

WOULD SAVE DEWEY FLAGSHIP AS RELIC

Congress to Give Question Deep Consideration.

Washington.—The final disposition of the U. S. S. Olympia, flagship of Admiral George Dewey at the battle of Manila bay, is likely to be considered at the next regular session of congress, as a strong sentiment has developed among veterans and patriotic organizations for preservation of the vessel as a historic relic.

The vessel, having outlived its usefulness as a fighting craft, might in the ordinary course of events be slated for scrapping, but the tradition of its prowess as a fighting machine, gained at Manila, still lingers in the public consciousness.

Heeding telegrams from all chapters of the Veterans of the Spanish War, the Navy department has officially announced that the disposal of the Olympia has not yet been decided upon, and that its preservation will be fully considered before disposal is approved.

Flagship in 1898.

After service as the flagship of Rear Admiral F. V. McNair from 1895 to 1898, cruising in waters of Japan, China, and the Sandwich (now Hawaiian) islands, the Olympia became the flagship of Admiral George Dewey in command of the Asiatic squadron on January 3, 1898, Capt. G. W. Gridley, U. S. N., commanding, according to information furnished by the Navy department.

On May 1, 1898, at the battle of Manila bay, the Olympia led the attack on the ships of the Spanish squadron.

The Olympia has seen service in many parts of the world since the time of the war with Spain. It continued for a few months with the Asiatic squadron, but went out of commission on November 8, 1898. After recommissioning in January, 1902, it joined the North Atlantic squadron as flagship. During the period from 1903 to 1905 it went on errands of protection for American interests and lives in Panama, Smyrna, and the Dominican republic.

When the United States entered the World war, the Olympia was designated flagship of the United States patrol force. She was employed in patrol duty off the coast of Nova Scotia and ocean escort for British merchantmen en route to and from New York and the war zone.

Carried Unknown Soldier.

In December, 1918, the Olympia became the flagship of the commander of United States naval forces in the eastern Mediterranean, and cruised the Adriatic and Black seas. After several important missions of post war transport and relief in eastern European waters, the Olympia returned May, 1921, to Philadelphia.

In September, 1921, she was assigned the distinguished duty of bringing home for burial in Arlington cemetery the Unknown Soldier representative of the heroes of the American forces of the World war. She left the Philadelphia navy yard on this mission October 3, 1921, reaching Plymouth, October 16. She arrived at the Washington navy yard on November 9, 1921, with the Unknown Soldier, and was met by representatives of the army and navy and other services.

Bird Paradise Set Up on West Indian Island

Tobago, West Indies.—The island of Little Tobago, 11 miles from this port, has become a bird paradise. This small island of less than 500 acres attracted the attention some years ago of Sir William Ingham, former proprietor of "The London Illustrated News." He conceived the idea of making it a refuge for birds of every size and description. He imported a large number of birds of paradise which have thrived and multiplied in their new surroundings.

On the death of Sir William the island went to Lady Ingham for life. On her death in October, 1925, Sir Herbert Ingham and Mr. Bruce Ingham came into the property. Later they expressed the wish to convey the island to the king and to rename it Ingham island. The government of Tobago and Trinidad arranged to care for the birds. Food and water have since been carried regularly to the island. The birds are increasing in numbers rapidly.

Russia Transplants U. S. Clock Factories

New York.—Soviet Russia is rushing plants to manufacture for the first time the American dollar watch and the alarm clock. To manufacture inexpensive watches and clocks of those and other types, the Soviet Precision Machinery trust, it was learned recently, has bought, through the Amtorg Trading corporation here, the entire equipment and machinery of two American clock and watch factories.

The factories purchased are those of the Ansonia Clock company, Brooklyn, and the Dueder Hampden Watch company, Canton, Ohio. They will be reconstructed in Moscow, and will be ready for production in 1931, according to an Amtorg Trading corporation representative.

Naumagen.—This small city on the Moselle, which still retains much of its ancient Roman appearance, has just unveiled a monument to Decimus Magnus Ausonius, the first man known to write a poem about this beautiful German river.

BIRD SANCTUARIES DRAW THOUSANDS

Sea Fowl Cover Ledges on St. Lawrence Gulf.

Ottawa.—Thousands of sea birds—gannets, elder ducks, puffins, cormorants, terns, and many others—wheeling and screaming or covering the nesting ledges like banks of snow, is the scene which presents itself to the visitor to the big sanctuaries of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, says the Canadian bureau of natural resources.

Since the earliest times the bird rocks of the Magdelen islands, Perce Rock and Bonaventure island off the Gaspe coast and the islands along the north shore of the gulf have been the breeding grounds for countless numbers of sea birds, and the protection their bird inhabitants received because of the Migratory Birds Convention act has resulted in greatly increasing their numbers.

Each year the sanctuaries are visited by a migratory bird officer from the department of the interior and careful note is made of the increase among the birds.

The fame of the bird sanctuaries of the St. Lawrence, which number 13, has spread and growing throngs of tourists make the trip by rail or steamer each year. The Gaspe coast rookeries were set aside in 1919 and those along the northern shore of the gulf were established in 1925. All are under the joint control of the Dominion government and the Quebec provincial authorities.

The bird sanctuaries off the Gaspe coast, which are reached with ease by rail to the quaint little town of Perce, are better known than those of the north shore and consequently the thrilling picture of the great throngs of gannets which inhabit the Bird Rocks, Perce Rock and Bonaventure island are known to many.

Skeletons Ages Old Unearthed in England

London.—Five human skeletons and ten funeral urns containing ashes have been unearthed at Manea, Cambridgeshire. They have probably been buried for thousands of years, and may belong to the neolithic or bronze ages.

Excavations are still in progress. The site was marked only by a slight symmetrical rise in the center of a field, which has for some time past been suspected of being an ancient barrow or tumulus.

All the skeletons were in the same attitude. The bodies had been buried in a contracted position with the knees bent and the feet drawn up to the body. The hands were placed either under the head or supporting the chin. Each skeleton was lying on its side, and the general posture was that of a person sleeping.

The urns are broken, but it may be possible to piece the fragments together.

A number of good specimens of flints and other objects of antiquarian interest have also been found, and it is expected that further discoveries will be made on the site.

Bird Mistakes Window for Space, Breaks Neck

Malone, N. Y.—A belted kingfisher crashed into the show window of an automobile dealer and broke its neck. The firemen at the station next door turned it over to Raymond Patnode, taxidermist.

Patnode said the bird undoubtedly became confused and thought the window was clear sailing. He said these birds are very fast on the wing and that contrary to popular belief, there are many of them nearby. Some of them have poached goldfish from back yard aquariums.

Just to Please Wife

Amarillo, Texas.—Love knows no bounds—"nor haircuts," according to a local beauty parlor operator. A young man recently had a permanent wave "because my wife loves curly hair."

Eskimo Belles Strip Off Furs for Silks

Halifax, N. S.—Baffin Land is a long way from Paris, much closer to the North pole, but the smiling, dusky-skinned belles of this island within the Arctic circle and west of Greenland are beginning to use talcum powder and wear silk undies.

This was learned here from members of the Canadian government expedition to the Arctic on board the Beothic which docked at North Sydney.

In summer time when the thermometer begins to mount from 60 or 70 below zero to warmer figures, the Eskimo flappers strip off their fur garments which tickle terribly and don imported chemises, step-ins, petticoats and dresses, often bearing the name of some French designer.

But the cheery, chubby Arctic maidens still scorn make-up, they like talcum powder because it smells nice and they use it lavishly, but not on their faces. Their noses will remain shiny, lips unrouged, until some daring feminine pioneer buys a puff and a lipstick.

When Babies CRY

Babies will cry, often for no apparent reason. You may not know what's wrong, but you can always give Castoria. This soon has your little one comforted; if not, you should call a doctor. Don't experiment with medicines intended for the stronger systems of adults! Most of those little upsets are soon soothed away by a little of this pleasant-tasting, gentle-acting children's remedy that children like.

It may be the stomach, or may be the little bowels. Or in the case of older children, a sluggish, constipated condition. Castoria is still the thing to give. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment, and could by no possibility do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue; won't play, can't sleep, is fretful or out of sorts. Get the genuine; it always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

Cat Sounded Alarm

"Murder! Murder!" was the message an excited man telephoned to House Sergeant Butler, of the Philadelphia police. Sergeant Butler sent Sergeant Dever in a bandit chase to investigate. In a vacant house Dever found a big black cat with its head trapped in a coffee can and producing a good imitation of a terrified woman's screams. Fifteen minutes with a hack saw freed the cat.

Liquids Without Water

There are many liquids which do not contain water. For example, oils and gasoline in their pure state.

Of the persons reported as centenarians in the 1920 United States census, 1,561 were men and 2,706 were women.

Normans Should Speak Up

Normans with William the Conqueror and his comrades at the battle of Hastings have many descendants and two French professors have been commissioned to trace them so that their names may be placed on a tablet which soon is to be erected in the castle of Falaise, where the duke of Normandy was born.

Time Does Fly

Bayer-Tablets of Aspirin Genuine

To Identify Genuine Aspirin

THE increasing use of Bayer Aspirin every year is proof that it has no ill effects. It is the accepted antidote for pain. It always helps; it never harms. Quick relief when you've a headache, or cold; or are suffering from neuralgia or neuritis. Rheumatic pains yield, too, if you'll only give these tablets a chance. But you want genuine Aspirin, so look for the Bayer Cross on every tablet. The box always bears the name Bayer and the word "genuine" printed in red. Proven directions inside.

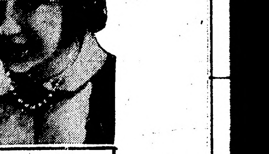
Here's one granddaughter who takes advice from elders

Schoolgirl learns simple health measure

WITH all the talk there is nowadays about the independence of the sub-deb generation, your reporter got a great kick out of hearing a grandmother describe how her granddaughter was following a good old tried and true method of improving her general health.

"My granddaughter, Margaret," says Mrs. Zell of 6231 Catherine Street, Philadelphia, "read about Nujol, was interested in it, so sent for a sample." It seems she has been taking a tablespoon of Nujol once a day since and expects to continue this treatment. Already she has found an improvement in her general health, her system functioning normally where other remedies had failed.

That's one of the best things about Nujol. It is just as harmless for young girls, or babies even, as it is for adults. For Nujol contains no medicines or drugs. It can't upset you because it works so easily and regularly, in a normal fashion.



Starting right

Nujol was perfected by the Nujol Laboratories, 2 Park Avenue, New York City. It can be bought anywhere for about the price of a ticket to a good movie. Get a bottle of Nujol today and try it, won't you? In sealed packages.

The one medium-priced car in the world that combines these Safety Features

Today's Oakland All-American Six is remarkably safe under any condition principally because of its exceptionally fine system of brakes and its sturdy Fisher body construction. Only one other medium-priced automobile uses the type of non-squeak, internal-expanding brakes which Oakland employs. And that car does not enjoy the Oakland advantage of Fisher bodies.

Prices, $1145 to $1375, f. o. b. Pontiac, Michigan, plus delivery charges. Spring covers and Lovejoy Shock Absorbers included in list prices. Bumpers and rear fender guards extra. General Motors Time Payment Plan available at minimum rate.

$1145 AND UP

Turkey Thieves Visit Farmer

Turkey thieves visited the farm place of C.O. Saastad about 2:30 a. m. last Friday morning, according to a report made by Mr. Saastad to a News reporter. Seven nice big turkeys were missing when Mr. Saastad made a count of them the next day. He heard the thieves but was unable to catch them, but he says that they risk their own life in the next visit, as he keeps a loaded gun for such prowlers now.

Freshman Initiation

One by one, the noisy hobos stumbled in, one seeming to look more ragged and outlandish than the one before him. Soon about forty were all enrolled in a small "northwest" room.

"Sh-h-h. be seated! (but where were the chairs?) Now all the green hobos line up against that wall." A scramble, and a bunch of hobos were seated upon the floor, almost encircling these fourteen freshmen. Green ribbons and papers were pinned on these frightened victims. But what was worse, they were lead into a dark room, blind-folded. A harsh voice beckoned them to beware of the future. This same voice asked who would be first to venture on the narrow rugged path which lay before him.

"I," said one. Taken quickly by the arm, he was made to march up the narrow, shaky path. At the end he was allowed to touch the liver and brain of some poor freshman who had gone on before him. He also drank of the cup of "Knowledge." Next he ascended a chute, and just as he reached a place where the air was cool and refreshing, he felt some awful blows! With this same treatment the other thirteen must contend. When the last poor freshman had received his blows, they were all driven back to the "northwest" room.

To each of the fourteen hobos, was appointed certain hateful duties which he must perform in front of a group of laughing onlookers.

This punishment gradually ceased. First, the swung swiftly in a boat; then played some other games.

While all the hobos were trampling in a circle, two judges spied the perfect hobo, who wore trousers and a cap with many patches.

However, the fourteen freshmen—nor the rest of the hobos—had no come only to be treated roughly, nor to see so many queer things, but also to devour an expected morsel.

Became Authorized Dealer

The Holt Farmers Elevator Company just become an authorized local dealer for Purina Mill, famous mixed feeds sold in the checkerboard bag, according to an announcement by Olaf Ness, manager of the company.

Everyone connected with the local concern are farm trained and will be able, thru the handling of the Purina account, to render invaluable service to farmers in this territory. Purina dealers in every section of the country have become noted for the use of outstanding merchandising ideas. The local dealer will put into effect at once the same successful business plans as is endorsed and used by other Purina dealers in the United States and Canada.

The local company will handld the full line of Purina Chows which includes mixed feeds for cows, horses, hogs, sheep, and dogs. The service of Purina specialist and service men will be available to farmers in this territory since the establishing of a dealer here to handle the accounts. Purina Mills is one of the oldest feed manufacturing concerns in the whole United States. It has nineteen plants in the United States and Canada. It has long been noted for its careful policy of selecting representatives to handle their account.

"It will be our aim to give the very best service possible to our customers and to actually help them with their feeding problems through specialists that will be at our command thru the Purina organization," Ness said in making the announcement this week that his company had been named to handle the checkerboad account.

PRODUCTION: It has been found that the best way to fill a silo is to have a short pipe attached to the top of the blower pipe in the silo and to run all the silage in the center of the silo. It is not necessary to have any one in the silo. The weight of the silage packs it. The chief thing is to be sure to run the silage straight down to the center. It forms a cone and distributes itself and packs.

MANUFACTURING: Wherever there is a cream station in a town with a co-operative creamery, is is a pretty sure sign that the farmers who patronize the cream station have never given much thought or study to the manufacture of butter through the co-operative creamery system. The co-operative creamery system of manufacturing butter makes butter at the lowest cost per pound, and pays the farmers the highest price for butterfat.

MARKETING: The value of a name or brand in marketing a product was recognized by the co-operate creameries when they selected the name "Land O' Lakes" for their highest quality butter. Creameries allows no one to use their brand for selling butter not made by them.

HAS THE LAXATIVE IN YOUR HOME A DOCTOR'S APPROVAL?

Some things people do to help the bowels whenever any bad breath, feverishness, biliousness, or a lack of appetite warn of constipation, really weaken these organs. Only a doctor knows what will cleanse the system without harm. That is why the laxative in your home should have the approval of a family doctor.

The wonderful product, known to millions as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a family doctor's prescription for sluggish bowels. It never varies from the original prescription which Dr. Caldwell wrote thousands of times in many years of practice, and proved safe and reliable for men, women and children. It is made from herbs and other pure ingredients, so it is pleasant-tasting, and can form no habit. You can buy this popular laxative from all drugstores.

WHEAT ESTIMATE SOMEWHAT LARGER

Boost of Million Bushels Made in October 15 Government Figure

North Dakota's total wheat production figure is placed at 87,792,000 bushels as of October 15 as compared to 86,709,000 bushels as of September 1, in the federal government's monthly crop report made public in Washington. This is a net gain of 1,083,000 bushels over the estimate of a month ago.

Durum wheat is decreased by 1,186,000 bushels, but the more valuable hard spring wheat is increased 2,269,000 bushels, the October estimate on durum being 36,744,000 bushels compared to an estimate of 37,930,000 as of September 10. Spring wheat is placed at 51,048,000 bushels compared to the September 1 estimate of 48,779,000.

There is also a slight increase in potatoes, flax, barley and oats with a slight decrease in corn.

Potatoes Raised.

North Dakota October 15 potato figures are placed at 6,762,000 bushels compared to the September 1 estimate of 6,376,000 bushels, an increase of 386,000 bushels.

Barley is placed at 38,681,000 bushels on October 1, compared to 37,319,000 bushels September 1, an increase of 1,362,000 bushels.

Oats production on October 15 is placed at 34,110,000 bushels compared to 32,215,000 on September 1, an increase of 1,895,000 bushels.

The October 15 flax figure is placed at 6,944,000 bushels compared to a September 1 estimate of 6,899,000 bushels, an increase of 55,000 bushels.

The corn crop was estimated at 16,912,000 bushels on October 15, compared to 17,440,000 bushels as of September 1, a decrease of 528,000 bushels.

Favorable weather during September led the department of agriculture to announce that general crop prospects had improved about 2 per cent above expectations of September, with higher yields indicated in corn, spring wheat, oats, barley, cotton, tobacco, and many other crops.

On the basis of October 15 condition, corn production was indicated at 2,528,077,000 bushels, 2.9 per cent above September, but still 8 per cent below the five-year average production.

DOES BIG BUSINESS.

Van Hook.—The Van Hook Co-operative creamery had shipped 7,016 pounds of butter when it was open only 13 days, a report at the end of the month of September showed.

MOREFISH PLANTED.

New England.—About 50,000 fish from a hatchery at Lemmon, S. D., have been planted in the Cannon Ball river, above the new dam here. Thirty per cent of the fish are black bass.

COUNTIES GET MONEY.

Bismarck.—Checks totaling $260,000 were mailed to North Dakota counties by State Treasurer Berta E. Baker. The amounts represent their share in the state gasoline tax collected during July, August, and September.

FRAZIER ATTACKS LEGGE.

Washington.—Open attack on the federal farm board for its failure to give any relief whatever to the wheat farmer this year was made by Senator Lynn J. Frazier of North Dakota following the investigation of the board and its activities by the agriculture committee of the senate.

WATERWORKS PAYING.

Mandan.—In two years the Mandan city water department has taken an obsolete plant, rebuilt and re-equipped it, has removed a serious fire threat in increasing the supply of available water, and has managed to pay for the improvements through the earnings of the department.

GIVE SCHOOL PRIZES.

New Rockford.—The American Legion Auxiliary unit here has dedicated itself to the furtherance of good citizenship among local high students and annually will give two awards of $25 each to the highest ranking girl and the highest ranking boy, who during the year excels in character, scholarship, and leadership, each point to be considered of equal value by a selection committee.

NATURAL GAS PIPED.

Williston. — Far-reaching developments in Montana's natural gas industry and in the gas district service of the Minnesota Northern Power company, in western North Dakota, are foreshadowed in the announcement by the company of plans to build a 90-mile gas pipe line from the Baker gas field to Williston and another of 220 miles to Bismarck and Mandan.

FARGO BRIDGE STARTED.

Fargo.—Ground was broken Wednesday for the piers for the bridge that is being constructed across the Red river between here and Moorhead.

WHEAT, POTATO INCREASE.

Fargo.—Increases in the spring wheat crop of the nation amounting to more than 5,000,000 bushels, and another big decrease in the nation's potato production, are important features for the northwest in the announcement on crop conditions as of October 1 made public in Washington.

PRAIRIE FIRE.

Davenport.—A prairie fire, blown by a strong wind, swept over five sections of land on the Silver prairie, near here, last week. The blaze started from a hunter's campfire.

MUCH STOCK SHIPPED.

Killdeer.—More than 60 cars of stock have been shipped from this community during the last week, according to a survey made by the local newspaper.

NEW SALEM CREAMERY.

New Salem.—Preliminary steps toward organization of a new co-operative creamery at New salem were taken at a meeting sponsored by the New Salem Lions club.

WAHPETON HARVEST FATE.

Wahpeton.—This city will sponsor a harvest festival and livestock show October 23 and 24 in connection with 4-H achievement program. Entertainment features will be provided.

LIGINITE MINING INCREASED.

Columbus.—Working both day and night, the Truax-Traer lignite coal strip mines near here are expected to have an output of 340,000 tons this year, according to Superintendent Fred Truax.

HURT WHILE HUNTING.

Ambrose.—Oscar Gubrud of Ambrose is in a hospital here being treated for a wound in one side sustained when a shotgun with which he was hunting was accidentally discharged.

TO COMPLETE PAVING.

Fargo.—Fargo-Moorhead and Detroit Lakes will be joined by a continuous strip of paving in 1930. Official announcement to this effect was received here from the Minnesota highway commissioner.

UNION MEETS SOON.

Bismarck.—The annual state meeting of the Farmers Union will be held at Bismarck, November 7, 8, and 9, it was decided at a meeting of presidents and secretaries of the organization here.

WANTS NEW FIRE HALL.

Lansford.—Residents of Lansford are being asked to sign a petition requesting a special election to vote on a bond issue for the purpose of building a new fire hall and obtaining better fighting equipment.

N. D. ON RADIO.

Hillsboro.—Radio listeners from Maine to California heard what diversified farming has done and is doing for North Dakota last Monday night when a North Dakota romance was broadcast over the N.B.C. network as one of the Great Northern's series.

DEVILS LAKE CHOSEN.

Grand Forks.—Devils Lake was chosen as the 1930 meeting place of the North Dakota State Bar association at a meeting of the executive committee here. Dates for the session were not set.

18,000 MILES ON HORSE.

Amidon.—Mrs. Fred Atkinson, who for 23 years has resided on a farm near Amidon, taught school in North Dakota and Minnesota for 30 years, and during that time, according to her calculations, rode more than 18,000 miles on horseback.

COLLEGE HAS RECORD.

Mayville.—All 19 members of the Mayville high school graduating class of 1929 have enrolled in the Mayville State Teachers college here. Wholesale enrollment of a graduating class in one institution of higher learning is believed by local college officials to be a record of some sort.

BANDIT ARREST NEAR.

Devils Lake.—Apprehension of the two men still sought in connection with the robbery of the Garske State bank is merely a matter of time, Ramsey county authorities believe. They are working on definite clues that should lead to the capture of the men within a short time, they said.

TRAFFIC LAW BOOK.

Bismarck.—W. S. Graham, state registrar of motor vehicles, wants to assist all motorists to obey the state motor vehicle and traffic laws. If they have the will he will help them find a way. His department is now sending out a 49-page booklet containing the motor vehicle and traffic laws.

FORMER SOLON DIES.

Fargo.—When death came to Edward L. Yager last week it found the one-time senator from Benson county a clerk in the Salvation Army hotel in Fargo. Once a senator, once treasurer of Benson county, ofice president of the First National bank at Maddock, Mr. Yager, who came to Dakota territory in 1883, died following a stroke.

DEBATE TERMS SETTLED.

Goodrich.—A. C. Townley and former Congressman William D. Upshaw of Georgia have come to definite terms for their series of debates. By mutual consent the question to be argued has been worked out as follows: "Resolved, that the cause of personal sobriety, public morality and economic prosperity is better promoted by prohibition than it would be by government control and distribution of intoxicating liquors."

FIRST SNOW.

Devils Lake.—The first snow of the year fell here last week, melting as it fell. The fall covered a territory from Leeds to Lakota.

BUTCHERED PIGS FOUND.

Dickinson.—Officials here believe a pig thief was interrupted in this vicinity and gained nothing. The destruction of three fine porkers found with their throats cut in true butcher style by Sheriff Wanner a short distance east of here, indicated to him, he says, that the pigs were killed in some farmyard, loaded into a truck and hauled to the point found.

Trend to Beautification of National Highways

The highways have become America's playground, where millions of motorists spend their leisure hours in search of restfulness, beauty and charm. The necessity and demand for combining beauty with utility has become more pronounced with the growth of tourist traffic in recent years.

The application of purely utilitarian standards in highways construction meets engineering and economic requirements, but the motorist who seeks recreation in his automobile is cheated out of the natural beauty which belongs to him, the American Motorists' association declares.

There is a growing and insistent demand for beautification of national highways. California, Massachusetts and Connecticut have demonstrated how much can be done, at small cost, to beautify the roadsides by judicious planting of native trees, shrubs and perennial flowers.

Congress already has recognized the need for highway beautification by authorizing expenditure of federal funds, in co-operation with the states, for roadside tree planting. This law was approved May 21, 1928, more than a year ago, but to date the bureau of public roads, which has charge of the fund, has not been asked to authorize an expenditure or to co-operate in a single roadside planting project.

No Need to Sacrifice All Beauty for Utility

When our ancestors came to this continent they found it covered with the forest primeval, a spectacle whose beauty will never again be looked upon by human eyes. Civilization leveled the forests to make way for homes. That was unavoidable. Cities sprang up. They kept their trees until traffic congestion necessitated their removal. The greater part of the natural beauty one finds en route today is along the waysides beyond corporate limits. The preservation of this beauty from the blight of commercialization is essential to the preservation of the love of the beautiful in the nation, with its refining and humanizing influences. Gas stations and hot-dog stands may be necessary to feed motors and motorists on the highway; but even they can be made attractive externally.—Detroit Free Press.

Appearance Important

Regardless of how attractive the interior of a house may be, it is generally judged by the prospective buyer from its exterior appearance, and very often well-constructed houses, containing every imaginable feature as an inducement, are drugs on the market, simply because the builder gave little thought to the outside. Generally speaking, the builder gives a great deal of attention to exterior details. With the keen competition in the dwelling field, the operative builder must be on his toes constantly, lest he wake up some morning and find that his operation which he thought was just right is not appealing to the buying public, which is not the same type that was so common ten years ago.

Proper Care of Lawn

Begin to mow the lawn when the new grass is about three to four inches high. From then on, mow the lawn regularly, keeping it mowed to a height of two inches.

Mow frequently enough so that the clippings are short and may be left on the lawn. They dry up and settle around the root where they decay and form humus. If they are long they must be raked off, as heavy clippings left on the lawn smother the grass. Particular care must be taken not to leave long clippings on the lawn in wet weather.

Citizens Asked to Help

The park commission, named by the town council of Federalsburg, Md., to develop and beautify the municipal park grounds, donated to the town by Mayor T. H. Chambers, issued a general call for men with axes, saws, wagons and a willingness to work in an effort to have the 18 acres of ground, part of which is woodland, cleared ready for further beautifying and future use. The commission has planned for a roofed space for community gatherings and a swimming pool, with space for tennis courts and possibly a baseball field.

Aims to Clean Streets

A non-partisan organization, called the Clean Streets by Clean Methods clubs, has been formed in New York city to keep the streets clear of the litter of papers, etc., that the public throws about. About 500 citizens have joined, including Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Mrs. Arthur Claflin, Mrs. Kent Cooper, Mrs. Charles Austin Bryant, and Miss Adelaide Stedman.

Build Home Wisely

One home in a lifetime is about all the average man builds. For that reason he should be certain that it is well built and of materials that will last. For reasons of economy he should be equally certain that his home is assured all the qualities of permanence that make for saving in maintenance costs and delay in deterioration.

Restless Children

Children will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always one sure way to comfort a restless, fretful child. Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than some powerful medicine that is meant for the stronger systems of adults.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is any need. In cases of colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. But it has everyday uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed to set everything to rights. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

Doctor Gives Hint to Lucky Salesman

IT'S a wise man that knows when he is slipping. Mr. R. F. Myers of 711 Rosedale Street, Baltimore, had the good fortune to get his tip straight from one of his doctor customers (he was selling for a pharmaceutical house) and since that lucky visit he has increased his business 50 per cent.

For two years he had been driving from town to town, and naturally this threw his elimination out of shape. He felt himself slipping. Cathartics only made him worse. Then one day he was calling on a wise old physician, and asked his advice. "What you need, my boy," said the doctor, "is a simple, easy, normal way to clean the poisons out of your system—we all have them—and with your kind of work they certainly cut down efficiency. Why don't you try Nujol?"

"Well, believe it or not," says Mr. Myers, "in a few days I felt like a new man. 'What's got into you?' asked the home office, 'your business has increased 50 per cent!'"

That's the great thing about Nujol. As soon as it begins to clean the poisons out of your system it makes you feel so well that you can almost always do a much better job.

Nujol is not a medicine and contains no drugs. It is perfectly harmless, forms no habit. It is simply bodily lubrication, which everybody needs. You, like everybody else!

Why put off good health any longer? Go into any good drug store and get a bottle of Nujol in a sealed package. Costs so little and means so much! Maybe you can increase your efficiency 50 per cent too

STORY FROM THE START

Capt. Lion Fellowes' American ship is sunk by the British off Portugal in the War of 1812. Fellowes' life is saved by Cara Inglepin, daughter of the owner of the American ship, True Bounty, Capt. Chater, in trade with the enemy. Because of love for Cara he consents to sail as mate. The True Bounty is stopped by the British frigate, Badger, Capt. Collishawe. Despite his American citizenship, Fellowes, is taken aboard the Badger a "pressed" man. He scents treachery.

—8—

Fellowes huddled closer to the mast, bracing himself to the shock of the lashes. Presently he tasted the salty moisture again on his lips, and licked them with his tongue. He mustn't cry. Mustn't give this d—n Britisher the satisfaction of it. But the moistu wasn't tears. It was blood. At the next blow he saw it spurting over his shoulders. The red paint of the mast was flecked with it. He glanced down, and saw specks of blood on the clean, white deck.

He laughed.

"Butcher Collishawe they'll call him after this," he said in a tired voice that was distinct in the oppressive silence. . . .

"Thirty-five," counted Clinch, "thirty-six, thirty-seven, thirty-eight."

Fellowes was one broil of agony from his loins to his shoulders. He lay along the butt of the mast, hanging limp from his fettered wrists. For a while the strain on his arms had hurt him. Now, it was simply one part of the complicated torment that was his being. His hearing had gone with his sense of sight. He didn't know when it was that the count of "Fifty!" tolled, and Clinch's voice boomed at his ear:

"D'ye 'ear me, lad? Ye can take yer other fifty later. We'll 'ave the surgeon up for ye. Yer back's cut to pieces."

"Go on," croaked Fellowes, forcing open bloodshot eyes. "Kill me, if you can. That's what he wants."

Mr. Curry's voice was fretful.

"If the man insists, you'll have to go ahead, Clinch. Here, fetch him a pan of grog, one of you."

A new voice pierced Fellowes' dwindling consciousness, a soft, plaintive voice, almost womanish in its husky musical quality:

"Yah, mars'r! Cuffee got him rum."

Fellowes felt the rim of a pannikin at his swollen lips, and sucked thirstily. The raw stuff burned his swollen throat, and he coughed—and every muscle in his torso throbbed and stabbed. He throttled a groan.

"More," he pleaded.

"Ye'll git it, friend," promised another new voice. "This here's Tom Grogan, of Philydelphy, P. A. I'm astandin' by, along of my nigger. Cuffee, here. Easy does it! That's 'nuff."

Gradually, Fellowes rallied under the stimulant. "Thanks," he managed to say.

Mr. Curry shouted testily:

"If he won't have his punishment postponed you'll have to resume. Clinch."

"Aye, aye, sir," Clinch acknowledged reluctantly. "Ready, lad."

Fellowes tried to smile, but all that he could contrive was a crooked little grin.

"Ready," he assented. "And I want you to finish the hundred. Understand? Finish!"

"Fifty-one!" counted the bosun.

Fellowes groaned as the dripping cat slashed into the pulp of his back, but he straightened by a mighty effort of will, and the following blows drew no sound from him. At the seventy-sixth he sagged limp, hanging from his tortured wrists. He revived with salt water sluicing over his head, smarting in the wounds that furrowed him. He felt as if he were dying under the reiteration of the lash, and before long a numbness assailed him. A rather pleasant numbness. He was aware distinctly of another deluge of water, of voices arguing, of a recurrent nervous shock. And at last oblivion relieved him.

CHAPTER IV

Tom Grogan and Cuffee Cockroach

In his delirium Fellowes was plagued by a weird spector—the head of Collishawe on the sinewy torso of Bob Clinch—that brandished a dripping cat over his lacerated back. But always as the lashes were about to fall a gigantic black figure intervened, and a soft, crooning voice quieted his frenzied defiance:

"Hush yo'se'f, mars'r, Cuffee hol' yo han'. Dar, yo' don' need holler—ain't only Cuffee 'n' Tom wid yo'."

Fellowes raised his head as the negro spoke, and his lips parted in a groan. He was lying on his stomach on a pile of hammocks; the yellow glare of a battle-lanthorn, suspended above him, revealed the confined space of the Badger's berth-deck. From his neck to his loins his back was a blaze of agony.

"How long have I been here?" he whispered.

"Dis two night'. Yo' hab much bobbery, mars'r. Yo' holler, an' yo' yell, an' yo' wan' fo' kill him cap'n. Oh, my aunt, yo' plenty sick!"

Fellowes moved again, tentatively, to ease a stiffness in his legs, and with the stab of pain which shot through him he felt an oily moisture percolating down his flanks.

"What have you got on me?" he asked, between gritted teeth.

"Plenty slush. Dat best fo' yo'. Bob Clinch fotch him from cookee. Yo' go fo' sleep." The negro settled back on his heels. "Sleep mo' better fo' yo'."

"But why do you do this for me?" exclaimed Fellowes.

"Cuffee help yo' fo' dat yo' strike him cap'n bad face. An' Cuffee t'ink yo' plenty juju fo' take floggin' widout holler. Cuffee like yo' fine."

"I'm very grateful," said Fellowes weakly. "You—it's the last thing I expected. What did you say your name was?"

"Cuffee, mars'r—Cuffee Cockroach. Now yo' go fo' sleep."

The crooning voice hummed a slow, monotonous tune, and despite himself, despite the pain that racked and burned, Fellowes drifted off into a drowsing slumber. When he awakened sunshine was pouring down an open hatch. He turned his head with difficulty, and at once a gruff voice spoke beside him.

"Easy all, shipmate. That back's purty tender."

The speaker was the short, bow-legged sailor, of the bristling black beard and mahogany-tanned hide.

"There was a negro here," Fellowes answered feeebly. "In the night—"

"Cuffee, messmate. He's on watch—leastways, he's at gun-drill. Ye wouldn't skeercely suspect it, now, would ye, but that nigger's a master hand with Long Tom? Holystone me, if he ain't the smartest gunner I ever seed."

"Your name is Tom, isn't it?"

"Tom Grogan of Philydelphy, P. A.—likewise, A. B. Pressed off the schooner Martha out o' Baltimore. But mebbe ye could eat a morsel? All ye had was a sup o' rum since ye came below."

He dropped on his knees by Fellowes' head, and offered him a spoonful of steamy liquid from a pannikin.

"Cuffee cooked this for ye," he pursued. "For an ign'rant nigger he's got a surprisin' lot o' knowhow."

Fellowes was amazed at the tastiness and savor of the mess.

"What is it?" he asked.

"Salt-horse 'n' hardtack 'n' whatever Cuffee could steal out o' the galley," Grogan replied, grinning. "He's a master-cook, too—that's how we shipped him on the Martha."

"You were pressed together?"

"For sartain. Collishawe was only for takin' me, but Cuffee, he up and says as how he's allus shipped with me, 'n' if I'm transferin' to the r'yal navy, why, he'll come, too."

"Then Cuffee isn't a slave?"

Grogan set down the pannikin, and scratched his ear doubtfully.

"Well, mate, that's a question I've often asked myself. Y'see, the Martha took him off the wreck of a slaver—San Jago, of Havana—dismasted in the Middle passage. He was the only livin' critter aboard. I guess he wouldn't have lasted more'n a day, if we hadn't happened by. Cap'n, he didn't want to take Cuffee off—but I was a cur'ous young feller, and thar was a chance the slavers had left treasure behind 'em, so the cap'n. he hems 'n' haws and 'lows I can go, if so be I go alone, which same I did."

Fellowes found the narrative amusing. It removed his thoughts from his tortured back.

Grogan went on: "Cuffee come, 'n he kissed my hand, and kneeled down on the deck in front of me. And after I took him back to the Martha, 'n' we'd fatted him a piece, why, ye jest couldn't pry him away from me. Cap'n, he called him 'Tom Grogan's nigger,' and nex' time we made Baltimore that's how the customs orf'cers entered him. 'Cuffee Cockroach, property o' Tom Grogan, A. B., of Philydelphy, P. A.'"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Excommunication Only Way

When Nathaniel Parker Willis wished to withdraw from membership in the Park Street Congregational church in Boston he found there was no place in the ecclesiastical scheme for honorable withdrawal, and so "by the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ," he was "excommunicated from this church," writes Granville Hicks in the American Mercury.

His attempted withdrawal was not a result of disagreement with church doctrine, but of rebellion against church discipline; he liked to go to the theater and he found church attendance a bore.

Several years later he wrote to his fiancee: "I should never have wished to marry you if you had not been religious, for I have confidence in no woman who is not so."

In 1839 Henry Barnard, then secretary of the state board of education of Connecticut, organized a teachers' class or institute at Hartford, Conn., the first held in this country.

Tune in, sit back and listen—2,500,000 have done it!

No time out for trouble . . . no lost programs . . . in the millions of homes that boast Atwater Kent Radio. Atwater Kent owners don't worry about service because they so seldom need it. And they banished costly repair bills the day they decided to treat themselves to the world's leader in radio.

All you want in radio . . . without a bit of bother

WHY will you find more Atwater Kents on farms than any other set? Why will an Atwater Kent owner tell you that the only set he would swap for it is another Atwater Kent? Because it brings in everything on the air as it ought to sound—with trouble-free operation.

And what a thrill you get every time you tune in, sit back, and listen to the mellow tone of the new Screen-Grid, Electro-Dynamic Atwater Kent Radio—the greatest in Atwater Kent's years of leadership. What a thrill when you sense its giant power, its fabulous reach, its needle-point selectivity.

See it, hear it, the next time you're shopping in town. Designed for central station current or battery operation.

No Harm

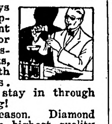
"Doctor, I dream constantly of golf."

"How did you make out?"

"Fine."

"Well, there's no harm in a man playing a little good golf in his sleep."

History seems to be mostly a chronicle of bad behavior.



For Best Results in Home Dyeing

You can always give richer, deeper, more brilliant colors to faded or out-of-style dresses, hose, coats, draperies, etc., with Diamond Dyes. And the colors stay in through wear and washing!

Here's the reason. Diamond Dyes contain the highest quality anilines money can buy. And it's the anilines that count! They are the very life of dyes.

Plenty of pure anilines make Diamond Dyes easy to use. They go on evenly without spotting or streaking. Try them next time and see why authorities recommend them; why millions of women will use no other dyes.

You get Diamond Dyes for the same price as ordinary dyes; 15c, at any drug store.

Record Gain in Butter Profits

Dairymen Who Use "Dandelion Butter Color" Say It's the Best Investment of All.

The biggest creameries in the country, who are most careful to cater to the whims of the public, are earning record profits by keeping their butter that appetizing June color everyone likes. Ninety per cent of them are doing it with "Dandelion Butter Color." It's the most economical and satisfactory butter color made. Half a teaspoonful colors a gallon of cream! It doesn't color the buttermilk. It's purely vegetable and tasteless. Approved by all State and National Food Laws. Large bottles, only 35¢ at all drug and grocery stores or write Wells and Richardson Co., Inc., Burlington, Vt., for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

Important to BUYERS OF NEW CARS

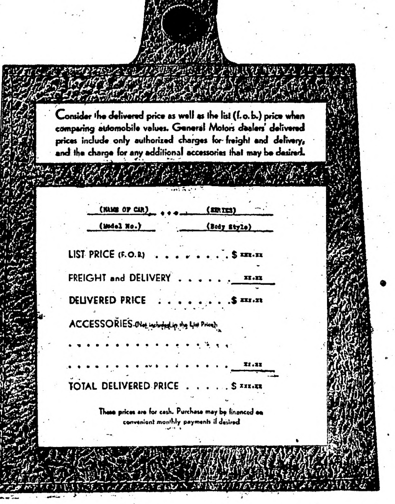
FROM time to time General Motors has devoted its messages in this paper to giving facts which help the car-buyer get full value for his automobile dollar. In keeping with that policy of frankness, this message gives facts about the prices of new cars which every one should know.

This is the standard price tag used by General Motors dealers to show what makes up the delivered prices of their new cars.

List Price. The f. o. b. price advertised by the factory.

Freight and Delivery. An authorized amount to cover the freight charges paid by the dealer and the cost of unloading, inspecting, supplying fuel and oil — preparing the car for delivery to you.

Accessories. A charge for any additional accessories that may be purchased.



Consider the delivered price as well as the list (f. o. b.) price when comparing automobile values. General Motors dealers' delivered prices include only authorized charges for freight and delivery, and the charge for any additional accessories that may be desired.

(NAME OF CAR) . . . (SERIES)

(Model No.) (Body Style)

LIST PRICE (F.O.B.) . . . . $ xxx.xx

FREIGHT and DELIVERY . . . . . . xx.xx

DELIVERED PRICE . . . . $ xxx.xx

ACCESSORIES (Not included in the List Price)

. . . .

. . . . xx.xx

TOTAL DELIVERED PRICE . . . . . $ xxx.xx

These prices are for cash. Purchase may be financed on convenient monthly payments if desired

WHEN you buy a new automobile, it is the delivered price that you actually pay.

The delivered price consists of the list price of the car—the f. o. b. price advertised by the manufacturers—plus certain other charges which the dealer makes.

You should know exactly what those charges are and what each one is for.

There is no mystery about the charges added by General Motors dealers. They have adopted this standard price tag, which tells you everything. Nothing is hidden. There is no extra charge to permit a seemingly better trade-in offer. No extra charge to cover advertising or any other item. You know exactly what makes up the difference between the list price and the delivered price. Each charge made by the dealer is fair and reasonable.

Use this tag for reference. Make it your guide in comparing automobile values. For the delivered price is the price you really pay.

Below is given the range of list prices for each General Motors car. They are just as low as General Motors' vast production, centralized purchasing and reasonable profit per car can make them. General Motors dealers maintain this value in their delivered prices of these cars and show you every item on the standard price tag. Look over the General Motors line. Then clip the coupon.

The Biggest Little Paper In Marshall County

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, November 1~~26,~~ 1929. Volume 19; Number 27.

Skating Rink Now Ready

What we term as one of the best co-operative spirits to fly around here for some time, was shown the publisher of the local paper on Friday and Saturday of last week when he called upon the local business men for a donation to restore and rebuild the local skating rink.

Almost to a man they responded, when asked to contribute: We are now proud to state that the rink is ready for the water flooding as soon as it freezes up. We have a very fine rink laid out one on which a lot of good times will be had by both young and old.

Oh, yes! The benefit dance which we also gave on Saturday night to raise money sure was a whooper. A record crowd of nice people from everywhere came to have fun and help us along. We also don't want to forget those who donated the use of the Hall, the musicians who furnished free music, the man who policed the dance, the floor manager, and others who took an active part in the work of making the dance a success, for the purpose of raising funds to maintain the rink this winter. We thank them one and all for their free services and courtesy.

We will have a nice little sum left over after a few dollars of expenses are paid out.

A report of the committee will be published soon so all citizens of the village can see what the proceeds and expenses were.

BROKEN HEART SOCIAL

There will be a broken heart social at the Riverside School, District 158, Friday evening, November 8. Girls bring a broken heart and lunch for two.

Elli Tuura, Teacher.

Arvid Carlson and family of Middle River spent Sunday at at the A. L. Carlson home.

The first snow of the season fell here on Monday and Tuesday. The weather turned warmer on Wednesday and melted it all. Yesterday we had a swell rain all day.

Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Hanson and family, Mrs. Chas. Hagglund and daughter Orlene and Oscar Hagglund visited at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ole Hagglund and family at St. Hilaire on Sunday evening.

According to an item in the Times at Thief River Falls, the new road to the Red Lake Narrows is now finished. Andrew Ness of that city drove the distance from Thief River to the big Sand Ridge in one hour and twenty minutes.

Guy Anderson has had some improvements done to his farm buildings. He has reshingled his barn, put in a concrete floor and otherwise put it in a first-class condition.

Anton Rodahl done most of work for Mr. Anderson.

Several pedlers were in town on Monday trying to induce the people to buy their wares. We asked one how much tax he paid to do business here in Holt and, he got sore about it and left.—Next time one calls tell him that you trade with the home merchants, who, not only has better merchandise to offer, but also pays the biggest share of the taxes here each year.

People are thrilled when they listen to the amazing reception of the new Screen Grid Coronado -- How smoothly it glides from Radio Reception into the Electrically reproduced Phonograph music.

Short Lessons in Dairying
LESSON 79

PRODUCTION: When the silo has been filled, it is very important to tramp down the top every day for a week. The top does not settle otherwise, and spoils to a depht of a foot or two. When thoroughly tramped on top, only a few inches spoils. When there is a delay in filling the silo, the top should be leveled off and tramped down. The all important thing is to keep out the air. Silage that is cut fine settles best.

MANUFACTURING: Co-operative creameries are run not to pay dividends on capital invested, or to stockholders, but to pay the highest price possible for butterfat. They are run for the patrons. They deduct the cost of manufacturing the butter from the price they receive for butter, and then distribute the balance to the cream producer in proportion to the amount and quality of cream delivered by each producer. The system can't be beat.

MARKETING: The first thing undertaken by Land O' Lakes Creameris was to assist its member creameries in making the highest quality butter, and the next thing was the selection of a brand name for its high quality butter. The name—"Land O' Lakes Sweet Cream Butter."

Farmers' Co-Operative Creamery Co.

School Notes

First and Second Grade

The first and second graders have made health rules and posters which will be used during the entire year by the pupils.

Hallowe'en is certainly well represented by looking at the decorations of of the primary room. Black cats, owls, witches, and pumpkins adorn the room.

The Hallowe'en sand-table has just been completed.

The second grade has completed all preparations for a Hallowe'en party to be given on Thursday.

Third and Fourth Grade

The Third and Fourth grade have been looking forward to Hallowe'en. They have spent many an enjoyable day planning and making decorations and various other Hallowe'en things to decorate their room.

It has been whispered about that ghosts, goblins, witches, bats and owls will visit the Third and Fourth grades on Hallowe'en day.

The Fourth Grade have been working on a Hallowe'en movie.

They expect to have it ready so that it may be given at the Hallowe'en Party.

The Fourth grade have been trying their luck on original poetry in their Language classes. Each of the pupils was anxious to know who the poet or poetess would be.

The poems are all written about Hallowe'en and Fall. Those written by Opal Sanoden, Beatrice Larson, Evelyn Larson, and Florence Bottem were to be issued in the paper.

HALLOWE'EN

Hallowe'en is near,
And we are full of cheer,
For the witches and the cats,
And the Hallowe'en bats
Are all ready for us to come,
So we will all have our fun.
—Beatrice Larson.

HALLOWE'EN

The Jack-O'-Lantern yellow,
He is a funny fellow.
He shines in our window
So bright and yellow,
He is a funny fellow.
—Opal Sanoden.

HALLOWE'EN

When Hallowe'en comes
I can have lots of fun.
I can dress up some funny ways,
I can have lots of fun
When Hallowe'en comes.
—Florence Bottem.

SUNSHINE

The sun is shining bright today,
I am going out to play.
O Sun, you shine so bright,
I wish you would shine both day and night.
—Evelyn Larson.

FALL

Fall has come.
I am glad,
But some of them are very sad.
But I'm as glad as anyone
Because the fall has really come.
—Beatrice Larson.

HALLOWE'EN

The witches, the bats and the Hallowe'en cats
Are all ready for their fun
On Hallowe'en Night you'll hear the plight,
And you certainly will hear them run.
—Beatrice Larson.

The Third and Fourth Grade Reading Club met Friday Oct. 25. Lowell Sovde and Clara Hoffman were admitted into our Reading Club.

The members of the Club are: Third Grade, Lorna Peterson, Adeloyd Larson, Lucille Horien, Omer Hanson, and Clara Hoffman. Fourth Grade, Opal Sanoden, Lowell Sovde, and Beatrice Larson. A very fine time was spent. —Opal Sanoden

The Third and Fourth Grade Little Citizens League will meet for the second time, Thursday afternoon, October thirty-first.

We are going to make our program as much a Hallowe'en program as is possible. We hope we will have much fun giving this program and playing games at the Hallowe'en party.

Glenn Carlson, Melvin Larson, and Lucille Horien are planning the program. We think they have a surprise for us. —Beatrice Larson, Fourth Grade.

The Third and Fourth Grade had two little visitors Monday morning. Two little kittens insisted on coming through the window.

The children showed how big they were by not paying any attention to them.

STORY FROM THE START

Capt. Lion Fellowes' American ship is sunk by the British off Portugal in the War of 1812. Fellowes' life is saved by Cara Inglepin, daughter of the owner of the American ship, True Bounty, Capt. Chater, in trade with the enemy. Because of love for Cara he consents to sail as mate. The True Bounty is stopped by the British frigate, Badger, Capt. Collishawe. Despite his American citizenship, Fellowes is taken aboard the Badger a "pressed" man. He scents treachery and fosters a hatred for Collishawe, Cara and Chater.

—9—

A shadow fell across Fellowes face, and Clinch squatted opposite Grogan.

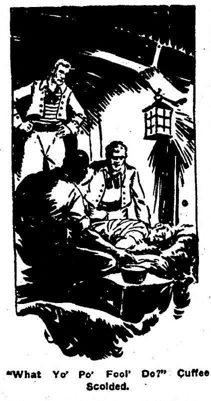
"Feelin' a mite more peckish, lad?" inquired the bosun. "Rot my guts, but yer a game bantam." He paused awkwardly. "No aneemoseetees, I 'ope?"

Fellowes thrust out a hand, regardless of the pain the movement caused him.

"I haven't anything against you bosun," he answered. "I'm sore, but I'll be up and about soon. And then I'll attend to the cur who used you."

Clinch darted a worried look over his shoulder.

"Belay that talk, lad," he ordered, gruffly. "'Twon't get ye nowhere. Ye can't reach the cap'n. Ain't it so Tom Grogan? Yer a pressed man. Tell the lad I'm talkin' for 'is own good."



"What Yo' Po' Fool' Do?" Cuffee Scolded.

"Sartain, sartain," Grogan corroborated soothingly. "Ye got to use plain sense. Yer jest a pressed seaman like me 'n' Cuffee, only ye hit the cap'n in the jaw—and lived to reck'lect it."

"Aye, aye," agreed Clinch. "Don't forget that. Cripes, lad, a cap'n can't let one o' 'is men strike 'm." 'E was as easy as 'e could be."

"Easy!" Fellowes snapped scornfully. "I'd rather have been killed than flogged."

Clinch rose uncomfortably.

"See 'ere," he said, "I don't like the way ye talk. The capn', 'e's fair, but 'e's 'ard. All for discipline. 'e 'is."

Fellowes experienced a profound sensation of weakness. "It doesn't matter," he mumbled, fighting back the tears of rage that pricked his eyelids. "But if I live—G—d, how I hate the cur! And her! and her!"

His voice became a wail. There was a sudden patter of feet on the deck.

"What yo' po' fool' do?" Cuffee scolded. "Buckra mars'r, him slick, like lil chile. Yo' wan' fo' make him mo' bobbery?"

"We ain't done nothin' to him, nigger," Clinch protested. "'E was atalkin' ag'in the cap'n—"

"Yo' let him talk! Capn' bad man. Someday him die. Dis buckra mars'r plenty juju. Yah, him good man, him juju-man."

The big, calloused hand slid caressingly on to Fellowes' head. "Dar, now, mars'r, yo' go fo' sleep. Cuffee here."

And the crooning, monotonous hum of liquid polysyllables fell like an anodyne on Fellowes' aching nerves.

* * * * * * *

The Long Islander improved steadily. His back, which, fortunately, he could not see, remained a horrid spectacle; but gradually the shredded flesh commenced to scab over, and, what meant most to him, his nerves eased off from the terrific tension imposed upon them. And now he was morbidly anxious lest the mitigation of his pain should quench the fire of hatred burning in his heart. But he need not have concerned himself. The first time he was assisted to the spar-deck, and saw, aloof in the sacred precincts aft, Collishawe's straight, trim figure, his eyes were clouded by the same red mist which had blinded him the day he boarded the Badger.

With nothing else to think of, Fellowes found diversion in whetting the edge of his hatred, scheming plans of vengeance. And slowly, as his mind became normal, he relinquished the fantastic dreams which had occupied him in his earlier convalescence. No ordinary retribution for him! No blow in the dark, no shot across a smoke-filled deck, no yielding to suicidal hysteria.

They'd stand face to face, aye, ship to ship, when the time came. Watching Collishawe, he discovered the Englishman's heart was bound up in the Badger. Smash her, take her from him, and Collishawe would suffer infinitely more than the pangs of death. But to take or trap the Badger Fellowes must first escape from her, and this posed an apparently insoluble problem. He cudgeled his wits over it, and finally called on Tom and Cuffee for advice.

"Mebbe a man can escape when he's ashore," commented Tom; "but how ye goin' to escape anywhere in all this water?"

"There's always a way, if we can find it," Fellowes answered doggedly. "We must hope, and keep a watch. And if we do get ashore I'll buy a ship that can run the Badger into her hole in Davy Jones' locker—and you shall be with me."

Cuffee was all smiles. "Yo' hab Long Tom, Mars'r Fellowe? Oh, my aunt, I mos' please to deal wid him!"

"Ye'll be dead afore yer pleased, nigger," Tom sighed dolefully.

But Fellowes refused to despair.

"Nonsense, Tom," he exclaimed. "You shall be bosun. Think! A sharp, Yankee privateer that'll carry royals in an ordinary blow. You wait and see."

A few days later the sloop-of-war spoke the Shannon frigate, which made signal she was bound south with dispatches for Admiral Cookburn cruising off the capes of the Chesapeake, and Fellowes heard the signalman's report to Collishawe, and Collishawe's prompt rejoinder.

"My compliments, and ask em to heave to. Tell 'em Captain Collishawe has important documents for the admiral's attention. Mr. Curry, have a boat lowered. I'll see Captain Broke, myself."

Fellowes remembered the papers Collishawe had discussed with Cara Inglepin and Chater in the True Bounty's cabin. This could be no trival plot, which was referred direct to the admiral commanding the blockading squadrons, having previously been indorsed by British authorities across the Atlantic.

Another reason for escape. Here should be a weapon with which to humble the Inglepins and Chater. For he mustn't waste all his hatred on Collishawe. No no! It was Cara Inglepin who had betrayed him in the first place. And sneaking Saul Chater If he might only escape! With any luck, he'd see them hung in chains for the traitors they were

For several hours the two vessels tossed on the waves, then Collishawe's boat put off from the Shannon, and the frigate scurried away south while the Badger tacked inshore to resume her patrol.

Dripping wet in his boat-cloak, Collishawe climbed the Badger's side as adroitly as though it was a garden path. His eye lit on Fellowes, and the Long Islander, perceiving it, made a derisive tug at his forelock.

"You are the pressed man who was flogged?" Collishawe asked abruptly.

"I'm Captain Fellowes of New York, whom you crimped out of the True Bounty."

"How's your back?" snapped Collishawe. "Why aren't you on duty?"

Fellowes slipped out of the loose pea-jacket he wore, dropping a mass of bandages with the garment, and turned to expose his stripes to the Englishman's inspection.

"You ought to see it," he said. "You might like to describe it to Miss Inglepin, when you go to smoke your pipe in her father's garden."

Collishawe's cheeks whitened.

Inspiration for Saws

The earliest prehistoric saws, so it seems, were not made as are our ordinary hand saws, with teeth notched out in the material of the blade. The original type seems to have been a wooden blade with inserted teeth copying almost exactly those in a jaw bone, and these ancient devices varied mainly in the substances of the teeth For example, one type of early saws used flint teeth, another obsidian or volcanic glass, still others broken shell, while in some of the Pacific islands wooden saws were found with the actual teeth of sharks inserted along the edge of the blade. It therefore seems likely that the jawbone was the inspiration for saws.

A Little Delayed

Nancy, who was only five, was much impressed when a large bunch of roses arrived for her mother.

"Why did you get them, mother?' she asked.

"You see, Nancy, seven years ago today daddy and mother were married," explained the mother.

"Goodness! He was a long time sending them, wasn't he? You'd think he'd have sent them seven years ago."

Early Weather Records

The first attempt of the government in this country to keep organized weather records goes back to 1814, when surgeons in the United States army were ordered to keep diaries of the weather

Injured Miner Is Saved by Terrier

Salt Lake City, Utah.—"Doc" Buhl of Saltese, Idaho, was prospecting recently when his foot was crushed by a rolling stone. "Doc" tied a note on the neck of his diminutive fox terrier and sent her out for aid. She failed at first to grasp what was expected of her and returned at noon with the note still intact.

"Doc" fed her and sent her out again, but she returned in a few hours. This time the prospector gave her a good scolding instead of food, and ordered her out of camp for the third time.

The dog reached the home of a friend in Saltese in the evening and aid was immediately dispatched.

KIDNAPED CHILD FORGETS PARENTS

Taken to Europe Months Ago by Former Boarder.

New York.—Johnnie Cap., Jr., four-year-old New Haven boy who had been kidnaped last April and taken to Europe by a boarder in the home of his parents who had developed a deep attachment for the youngster, came home recently.

In the months of his absence little Johnnie had seemingly lost all account of his mother and father, had even taken to speaking in German and was tearfully disinclined to have anything to do with them when the ship which brought him home—the Estonia, of the Baltic-American line—docked at her pier in Brooklyn. The only interest the boy appeared to have was in the ship's nurse, Stefania Werchowodko, who had the care of him during his home voyage from Danzig.

The boy was taken from his home last April by Joseph Urban, the lodger, and when his disappearance was announced an appeal was made to Governor Trumbull of Connecticut, who was told that Urban had taken the boy to Danzig.

After arrangements had been made for the return of little John on the Estonia, he was placed in the care of Nurse Werchowodko. His plight being known, he became the especial pet of the commander and of the chief steward, and was permitted practically the run of the vessel. He could go on the bridge, into the captain's cabin, wherever he wished.

Word of his homecoming had been sent to his parents and they were at the pier. The instant Mrs. Cap reached her son he tried to draw away from her despite her cries that she was his mother. "No, no, nurse," he exclaimed, and clung to Miss Werchowodko.

"Oh, my son doesn't know me," the mother wailed, as John turned and spoke in German to the nurse. "He doesn't speak Polish, he doesn't speak English, he doesn't know his mother!" Mrs. Cap cried, tears streaming down her cheeks.

It was some time before the small boy came to understand that he was in the hands of his dearest friends and that no harm was to come to him. Mr. and Mrs. Cap said that they were starting for New Haven with him at once.

Man Who Threatened Suicide Is Found Dead

Staunton, Va.—After telling another patient at the Western State hospital that he was going to kill himself, N. R. Harris, forty-seven, of Loudoun county, disappeared. Some hours later his body was found hanging from a limb of a tree in an orchard of the hospital. He had been dead several hours when found, according to Dr. J. B. Catlett, Augusta county coroner, who declared it a case of suicide.

Harris had been subject to spells of melancholia, with suicidal intent. He had tied the rope around his neck while in a standing position and had then dropped to his knees.

Host Is Too Gracious; Sheriff Arrests Him

Monte Rio, Calif.—"I want you to see my new dining room," proudly said E. E. LaFranchi, resort manager, to Deputy Sheriff W. A. Shulte.

Shulte saw the dining room—also two illegal coin paying slot machines in the corner.

"And to think I took him in there myself," mourned LaFranchi as the deputy seized the machines after placing LaFranchi under arrest.

Farmer Loses Money; Cow Chokes to Death

St. Joe, Ark.—A roll of bills choked a cow in a pasture belonging to U. Y. Jones, Newton county farmer.

The currency, wrapped about a small cob to give it shape, was found in the throat of a dead two-year-old heifer. Jones had lost the money a day or two before.

Too Much for Her

Indianapolis.—Mrs. W. E. Hinkle was dealt a perfect bridge hand, all spades; an event that should happen only once in 168,888,000,000 deals, according to bridge statisticians. Mrs. Hinkle was too excited to redouble her seven-spade bid. The scorekeeper gave her 501 when the excitement subsided

Called Her the Wallflower

By CLARISSA MACKIE

(Copyright.)

"WHO is the girl in the corner?" asked Mark Wynne of his young hostess.

"Oh, that is Millie Parker—pretty, isn't she? But she can't dance, or doesn't want to—they call her the 'wallflower'—they are a thoughtless bunch!"

Doctor Wynne could not dance very well and Elsie was glad to lose him for one of her own set, a graceful, black-eyed youth who sparkled as the town wit.

"Who is that sitting with Millie Parker?" asked Elsie suddenly.

"The medicine man is sitting in the shadow of the wallflower," sighed George.

"Where is Alfred Brown?" asked Elsie, changing the subject.

"Sh-h-h. Whisper it—the fever!"

"No! That makes thirty cases in town."

Elsie was silent after that. The epidemic had started, as such things usually do, in an unhealthy slum near the river's edge.

Mark Wynne, passing through the little town from a hunting trip in the North, had stopped to see his old friend, the father of Elsie Lee, so his appearance at the little party was a happy accident.

Long after he had retired that night he thought of the dread disease which was sweeping through Laneboro, and he thought of something Millie Parker had said to him that evening.

"We need nurses," said Millie thoughtfully. "We have thirty here now—one for each case—and now we shall need more. Doctor Wynne, do you think I could help in some case—I have taken care of six people, my own, until they went—and there is no reason why I could not help save a life—I am alone except for some cousins with whom I live." She watched him expectantly.

"Then you might do—you could help a regular trained nurse—relieve her. I will see what I can do."

But when two days later he tried to get word to Millie Parker he learned that she had gone away to nurse an old man.

"Poor as poverty herself, and gone to nurse a man who hasn't money enough to pay for his own medicine," complained Millie's cousin.

"Cannot pay for his own medicine?" repeated the doctor. "I'll take that case myself. I came down to help out, and Miss Millie's case sounds like a desperate one."

Millie did not question Mark's unexpected arrival at the plain little house on the rocky hillside. Old Peter Jenkins was very sick—It was impossible to find any one to stay with him.

"She's a pretty little girl," piped Peter in one of his lucid moments, "reminds me of my Susie."

Millie flitted into the room with a cup and spoon. "Just a little bit of this, Uncle Peter," she coaxed. "See, I'll take a taste myself first to keep you company." The old man smiled, then took the medicine, his dim eyes following the young form around the room. "She's as sweet and wholesome as them wallflowers my wife planted along the stone wall," he murmured.

Millie blushed as she met the young doctor's eyes, for she knew that he had heard her nickname of wallflower.

One day Peter had a visitor, a grave-looking man, who stayed for awhile and talked in a lowly tone to the sick man. The next day he came again and brought some other people with him. Doctor Wynne frowned on this, but Mr. Jenkins had his own way.

It was Millie who sat through the long night alone with the dying man.

"And you, little wallflower," he whispered, "what of you, all alone in the world?"

"I shall find a way," said Millie bravely, trying not to cry over his going, for he did not want to stay. "I am learning to nurse sick people. Taking care of you has helped me, and some day I shall go to a large hospital training school for nurses and—"

"No, no, you will do nothing of the sort; you shall marry Doctor Wynne. He loves you, little wallflower, and you love him. My eyes are dim, but I could see that!" He smiled cheerfully at her, and she hid her blushing face in her white apron and received his blessing on her bent head. Mark Wynne crept away from the room and Millie did not know that he had heard those words until afterward. Before morning dawned again Peter Jenkins had died.

A few days afterward, when the house was empty of its tenant and Millie was preparing to leave, the strange lawyer came to see her.

"Peter Jenkins left a will," he said tersely. "He died a rich man. You are his sole heir."

The little wallflower, who thought she had nursed a poor man, broke down and cried miserably. The lawyer took himself off and sent for Mark Wynne.

"You remember Mr. Jenkins' prophesy, don't you, Millie?" he asked.

"You heard?" flashed Millie.

"Yes, and it is coming true, little Wallflower, isn't it?" he whispered.

"Millie Parker married?" shrieked Elsie Lee incredulously when she heard the news. "That little wallflower?"

Norway Celebrates in 1930

In 1930 Norway will celebrate the ninth centenary of the coming of Christianity, together with the anniversary of the death of King Olav II, who died in the struggle against the opponents of the new faith. Celebrations will take place in all parts of the country but the principal ceremony will be held at Trondjhem, an old royal residence and the seat of an archbishopric before the Lutheran reformation. The work of restoring the cathedral has been proceeding for a long time. It was built on Olav's tomb. The completion of the work will coincide with the celebration of nine centuries of Christianity in Norway.—Translated for the Kansas City Star From the Journal de Geneve.

Classifies 256,000 Stars

About 32,000 observations of variable stars were sent to the Harvard observatory in a single year by 100 observers. One of the monumental pieces of work there, says Nature Magazine, has been Miss Annie J. Cannon's classification of over 256,000 stars, according to their various types, by means of their spectral lines. This work requires expert ability of the highest order and Miss Cannon has been the recipient of many honors.

Spruce Best for Rayon

The spruce of northern Canada is considered the most suitable raw material for the manufacture of rayon by the viscose process. Cellulose, in the form of sulphite pulp, derived from this wood, is now being shipped from Canada to all parts of the world for the manufacture of artificial silk.

When a White Collar Man "Goes Army"

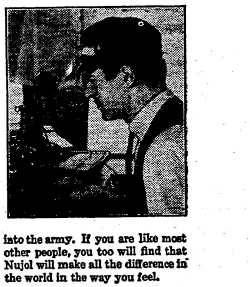
Perhaps he doesn't learn a few things!

DON'T envy a man who "only has to work a typewriter."

So we were told by Mr. Solon S. Bloom of 3503 Woodbrook Avenue, Baltimore, Md., whose health began to give way because his work gave him no bodily exercise.

"I decided to get away to a military training camp," says Mr. Bloom, "thinking the rough and tumble with the army would do me good for a month. I asked the doctor what to do about my condition. 'I've seen men, I've known men,' he said. 'I know what they eat, drink, and how they live. I know cathartics, physics, and all the ways men try to keep themselves regular—and the only two that go together well are men and Nujol. Nujol soothes and heals the membranes and expels bodily poisons normally, naturally, easily, so that you are regular as clock-work.'"

That was what Mr. Bloom learned when he left his typewriter and went into the army. If you are like most other people, you too will find that Nujol will make all the difference in the world in the way you feel.



Remember Nujol is not a medicine, for it contains no drugs of any kind. It is simply bodily lubrication that everybody needs.

You can get a bottle of Nujol at any good drug store, in a sealed package, for the price of a couple of good cigars. If you will start today and try it for two weeks you will agree that Nujol is the easy normal way to keep well and make a success out of your life. You will be astonished at the results!

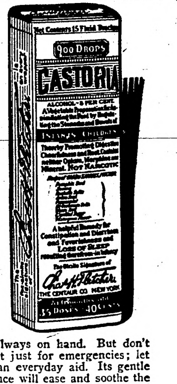
When BABIES are upset



Baby ills and ailments seem twice as serious at night. A sudden cry may mean colic. Or a sudden attack of diarrhea—a condition it is always important to check quickly. How would you meet this emergency—tonight? Have you a bottle of Castoria ready? There is nothing that can take the place of this harmless but effective remedy for children; nothing that acts quite the same, or has quite the same comforting effect on them.

For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old, reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an everyday aid. Its gentle influence will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. Its mild regulation will help an older child whose tongue is coated because of sluggish bowels. All druggists have Castoria; the genuine bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

Some Fine Forest Land

The outstanding forest in New England is the White Mountain National forest. During 17 years, since 1911, the federal government has purchased forest land in the White mountains. It has acquired now 514,000 acres, or 803 square miles. Much of it is in virgin forest, says Nature Magazine. There are 61,000 acres in which an ax was never used.

HAD TO WORK TOO HARD

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Gave Her Strength

Mt. Carmel, Pa.—"After my second baby was born I had to work too hard and be on my feet too soon because my husband was ill. After his death I was in such a weakened and run-down condition that nothing seemed to help me. I am starting the fourth bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and feel a great deal better. I am much stronger and don't get so tired out when I wash or work hard. I do housekeeping and dressmaking and I highly recommend the Vegetable Compound as a tonic. I am willing to answer any letters I receive asking about it."—MRS. GERTRUDE BUTTS, 414 S. Market, Mt. Carmel, Pa.

GIRL, 8 YEARS OLD, IS MUSIC PRODIGY

English Maid Has Composition Published.

Bexhill-on-Sea, England.—Life is becoming just one child "phenom" after another. Novels, poems, long stories, short stories, biographies, fake biographies and what not from, or alleged from, the hands and heads of child "phenoms," ranging from four to sixteen years, are being published every few days.

The latest child "phenom" strikes a new note, or a whole cord of them.

Her name is Ruth Gipps. She is eight years old, which is rather aged compared to most of the child prodigies who have broken into print, but she was making herself heard, literally and figuratively, when she was three years old and she demonstrated that she was a true child "phenom" when she submitted a story for publication at seven.

Having had her career as an author checked by a rejection slip, Ruth turned to music and is having a musical composition printed. It is a little piece in the thoroughly modern style called the Fairy Shoemaker, and she suggested the design for the cover.

Her publishers have a high opinion of the work which they accepted on its merit, and it was awarded second prize in the Brighton Music festival. All the other competitors were adults, and the judges were unaware that they were giving the prize to a child.

Ruth comes of a musical family. Her mother, who is Swiss by birth, and her mother's six brothers and sisters are all in the musical profession.

There is nothing of the "prodigy" about Ruth's temperament. When she was introduced to her publisher she was in a bathing costume, playing with a bucket and spade on the sands at Eastbourne.

Sword of Franklin Is Discovered in Paris

Paris.—The long-drawn-out polemics and discussions as to whether Benjamin Franklin ever wore a sword at the courts of France and England have been solved by the discovery of the weapon in the private collection of M. Honore Hecquest d'Orval, a descendant of P. J. Cabanis.

It was presented to M. Cabanis by Franklin shortly after the conclusion of the treaty of peace by which Great Britain recognized the independence of the United States of America.

A unique feature of the sword is that it is not similar to those usually regarded as a "courtier's sword," being of full military length with a triangular blade of the finest Sheffield mottoes and the elaborately chiseled hilt and guard—the gift of Louis XVI—it might have been the sword of an officer.

The blade bears the inscription:

"Sword which was carried by Benjamin Franklin in the battles fought in America for the cause of Liberty. He gave it later to his friend, P. J. G. Cabanis."

The discovery is due to M. Girodie, curator of the museum established in the historic chateau of Blerancourt by the citizens of the new French republic, shortly after Franklin bade his final farewell to the soil of France.

Rust-Proof Steel Easy to Weld, Says Expert

Washington.—Rustproof steel is easily welded by the acetylene-oxygen process and is even more rustproof after welding than before, due to loss of carbon, silicon and manganese during melting. These findings by W. Hoffmann, German metallurgist, have just been announced by the national advisory committee for aeronautics here.

The physical characteristics of rust-proof-steel welds are better than those of soft-steel welds, but the hardness of the metal due to welding must be removed by heat treatment.

Philanthropist Buys Camp for Students Who Work

Springfield, Mo.—L. A. Jones of Bristow, Okla., millionaire oil man and philanthropist, has purchased a 1,064-acre tract of land to be devoted to boys who work their way through school. The tract, purchased in the Ozarks, will have a large administration building, dining hall, dormitory, and several cabins erected on it. A large lake and swimming pool are also to be built.

French Court to Reform Bandits With Marriage

Bourg, France.—Will marriage reform a bandit? Three bandits think it will and the justice of peace of this town has decided to give them their choice of hymen over a prison cell. The ceremony was performed in the town jail. The bandit trio married three sisters whom they have courted off and on between raids around the countryside.

Secretary Gets $5,000

New York.—The Merchants' association announced that it had been making a survey to discover what salaries clerks, stenographers and secretaries made in New York and that the highest salary in this class, paid to a man who was principal stenographer and secretary to an officer of a bank, was $5,000.

GOTHAM VAULT HAS BIG SILVER HOARD

Bars and Ingots Come From All Over World.

New York.—The biggest store of pure silver in the United States lies under the pavement in Spruce street. Its repository is the vault, reaching out under the street, of a company which so dominates the world silver market that it is virtually a clearing house for the metal.

Bars and ingots of the treasure are constantly coming into the vault from the mines of the world, and as constantly being shipped away to mints and jewelry manufactories in the United States and Europe, and to China and India, which, because of their silver coinage system, are two principal silver-consuming nations of the world.

Insurance Rate Low.

The business of getting the pure silver in and out of the vault is highly organized. Armored cars and caged wagons bring it in and carry it away. It is carried up and down between the sidewalk level and the steel vault in electric elevators, and armed attendants are always on guard. The trucks that carry the treasure back clear up to the elevator shaft so that the silver can be transferred with minimum exposure, and most passersby do not even stop to watch the operation. At the docks the metal is handled under guard, and on ships and liners it is kept in specie rooms.

So efficiently is it transported that the insurance rate from New York to India is only 15 cents on $100 worth, and in 25 years not an ounce of silver has been stolen.

Is Handled "Naked."

The silver is handled "naked," with no covering around the bars. Handlers are careful not to rub them against each other and, although the metal in its pure state is comparatively soft, the loss from scratching in shipment averages but five ounces in every 8,335 pounds. Before the war London was the great silver bullion market. Now New York has usurped the place, principally because the use of silver has become so much more extensive here.

The phrase "born with a silver spoon in his mouth" hasn't much significance any more in this country, for almost every family has some silverware now, and since the war American industry has found many new commercial uses for silver. The laws require sterling silver to be 925-1000 pure. The silver in the Spruce street vaults runs higher than 999-1000 pure.

Find Faculty of 22 in School with Nine Pupils

San Francisco.—Opera bouffe armies, with a dozen officers to each private, were rivaled here by the Jesse W. Lilienthal school, it was revealed, when an auditor's check was made of the pay roll.

The school staff was discovered to be 22, consisting of 16 attendants, a principal and five teachers, to care for the instruction and needs of nine boy students.

The school is a correctional institution founded 50 years ago and taken over recently by the city. At that time there were 72 inmates. The drop in attendance came under the regime of Juvenile Judge Michael Roche, who returned the "incorrigibles" to their homes whenever possible for "adjustment and correction."

Only one teacher will now be provided, and the attendant staff will be cut to nine, with further cuts scheduled.

Ancient Village Perched on Roof of Old St. Peter's

Rome.—One of the oddest villages in the world is located on the roof of St. Peter's in the new Vatican state. It has been there for ages, and consists of little cottages in which several persons live. The view from this village is said to be unequaled in the world, commanding the entire "Eternal City" and a magnificent stretch of the Campagna and the Appian way

Winchester, Kan.—That the tractor and the motor car virtually have made "Old Dobbin" useless on the farm, was demonstrated at the Mike Hoffman public sale, held five miles east of here. A mule brought $1.50 Several horses sold for $2.50 apiece, and a span of work mares brought $12.50 each.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

By GRANT DIXON

For Baby

New York.—There are, even in this day of fabulous royalties and sales of motion picture rights, writers who are not wealthy. Of several such that I know, one recently became a father and all his friends showered the young son with gifts—appropriate clothing, silver spoons, mugs and what-not.

"But the best present of all," the writer told me, "is one good old George X sent. George gave my young hopeful two $20 gold pieces, and my wife and I have been instructed not to start the child's bank account with them. Instead, we must, each morning, hold the coins close to the baby's eyes and clink them together.

"As he grows up he will realize what real money is, and he will be trained to grab for it whenever he sees it."

Detective Story

A colored man walked into a pawn shop with a $250 camera. The pawn broker was suspicious and questioned the man regarding where he got such an expensive instrument. The colored gentleman thereupon departed hastily, not even troubling to take the camera, and not getting a ticket for it, either. The pawnbroker turned the camera over to police, who found a roll of film in it. This they had developed and prints made from it. The pictures were scenes aboard a yacht and at obviously expensive beaches. "Aha!" said the detectives, "A rich man owns this camera." One snapshot showed a close-up of a man in yachting costume, and a detective recognized the subject. It was Edmund O'Brien, an actor and the son of a former Supreme court justice. Pursuing the picture clew still further, the detective learned that the camera had been stolen from O'Brien, who hadn't even bothered to notify the police.

Sensitive Fellow

Here is a story they are telling about Jimmie Durante, comedian. Durante, who used to play the piano for a singing waiter named Eddie Cantor, is known far and wide as Schnozzle, because of his de Bergerac nose. He is, perhaps, sensitive. At any rate, rather than have people laugh at him, he expends tons of energy in making them laugh with him.

He was playing golf one day, out on Long Island. Part of the course lay alongside a railroad track, near a station. A crowded passenger train had pulled in, just as Durante was getting ready for a tee shot.

Decidedly nervous, Durante was the last of a foursome to drive. He took a terrific swing, and missed the ball entirely. Without a word he started down the fairway.

His companions called to him:

"Hey, you missed the ball!"

Durante gestured for them to pipe down:

"I know it," he said, guardedly, "but look at all of those people in the train watching me. They don't know it."

Acid Air

Chemical properties in New York atmosphere are hard on woodwork, it has been found after an examination of the steeple of St. Paul's church on lower Broadway. The church is 135 years old, and in excellent condition, but the wooden steeple has been eaten away. Scientists insist that it is chemicals that have done it, for the steeple has received as much care as any old Colonial mansion, many of which look as good as new. The old steeple is being demolished and will be replaced by one made of metal, colored to resemble the original. Even that may not last, for not long ago it was discovered that the metal figure of Justice, atop the Municipal building, was all but losing her flowing robes, due to a peculiar rivet disease in her costume.

Tooth Aches, So This Hero Removes It With Revolver

Santander, Spain.—The most original method yet discovered for removing an aching tooth was employed recently by a laborer in the town of Astillero, who shot out the offending molar. Unable to stand the pain any longer, he placed the barrel of a revolver against the tooth and pulled the trigger. He said he was relieved immediately. The only trouble was that the bullet also penetrated his cheek.

Women Give Cup to Town's Model Husband

Cushing, Okla.—A man who never drinks "more than enough," swears only moderately, drives a new car, uses tobacco in every form, plays a moderate game of golf and fills in at bridge only when forced to has been selected the "model" husband by the Cushing Women's Professional and Business club. Dwight Buell, the model, was presented a silver loving cup by the club.

Doctor Roll Grows

Washington.—The average American has at his beck and call more doctors than has the citizen of any other nation, the United States bureau of education has discovered by a survey. And the number of physicians is increasing every year.

America's ills now support 149,521 physicians, it was found.

At Last Use Is Found for Old Razor Blades

A problem which has hitherto baffled the greatest thinkers has at last been solved. The London Evening News publishes a solution of that question, "What to do with old razor blades." It says all the perplexed shaver has to do is to take his discarded blades to the nearest road contractor and let them take their place in the foundation of modern traffic ways.

For road-construction engineers are making use these days of almost anything in the metal line. Thousands of old tins, flattened out and purged of their foreign elements, are used weekly.

A reporter who watched a London road in the course of construction found many other domestic articles also proving their use. One load, for instance, contained besides a few hundred tin cans, an old umbrella and the springs of a bed.

Denver Boy is a Winner

Every mother realizes how important it is to teach children good habits of conduct but many of them fail to realize the importance of teaching their children good bowel habits until the poisons from decaying waste held too long in the system have begun to affect the child's health.

Watch your child and at the first sign of constipation, give him a little California Fig Syrup. Children love its rich, fruity taste and it quickly drives away those distressing ailments, such as headaches, bad breath, coated tongue, biliousness, feverishness, fretfulness, etc. It gives them a hearty appetite, regulates their stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord. For over fifty years, leading physicians have prescribed it for half-sick, bilious, constipated children. More than 4 million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it.

Mrs. C. G. Wilcox, 3855½ Wolff St., Denver, Colorado, says: "My son, Jackie, is a prize winner for health, now, but we had a lot of trouble with him before we found his trouble was constipation and began giving him California Fig Syrup. It fixed him up quick, gave him a good appetite, made him sleep fine and he's been gaining in weight right along since the first few days, taking it."

To avoid inferior imitations of California Fig Syrup, always look for the word "California" on the carton.

Find Size a Handicap

Gertrude Restoule, sixteen, of Sturgeon Falls, Ontario, has gone to a Toronto hospital to get thin, being perhaps the heaviest young woman in Canada. She weighs 450 pounds. A sister who weighs 375 pounds also will be taken to the hospital for treatment. The parents of the children are normal in weight.

Areas Reserved for Birds

Forty bird sanctuaries have been reserved in Canada by the department of the interior under the migratory birds convention act, which is the federal law for the protection of migratory birds. There are also fifty-one public shooting grounds reserved by the Dominion government in western Canada. Shooting is allowed on these latter areas in the open season.

Love and Humanity

Love is but another name for that inscrutable presence by which the soul is connected with humanity.—Simms.

The Right Way to Redye Fine Silks

Textile makers always use special dyes for silk or wool. They know that is the best way. The makers of Diamond Dyes are the first to enable home dyers to follow this plan.

Next time you want to dye some of your more valuable articles of silk or wool, try the special Diamond Dyes in the Blue Package. They will give these materials clearer, more brilliant colors than any "all-purpose" dye. And they are just as easy to use as ordinary dyes. Like the white package Diamond Dyes, these dyes contain an abundance of the highest quality anilines. The blue package dyes silk or wool only; the white package dyes, or tints, any material. Either package; 15c, drugstores.

Now We Can Supply You with Purina Chows!

The Profit Building Feeds in Checkerboard Bags

FEEDERS of poultry and live stock around Holt will be glad to know that they can now find the complete line of the well-known Purina Chows in our store. For some time we have been investigating various lines of commercial feeds. We have become a local authorized Purina distributor because we are convinced that Purina Chows will make more money for you who feed farm animals.

For 35 years Purina Chows have been lowering feeding costs --- increasing egg production -- putting more milk into the pail -- putting more weight on hogs and steers and sheep in quicker time--keeping horses and mules in finest condition for hard work. What Purina has done elsewhere it can do right around here.

A COMPLETE Line---for All Feeding Needs

NO MATTER what you're feeding---or how---you'll find that Purina Chows will fit your needs. If you want a hog ration to make your corn worth more—there's Pig Chow and Hog Chow. If you have no home grains and need a COMPLETE hog feed—there's Hog Fatena. So, too, dairymen can get just the right Purina mixture to go with alfalfa hay or mixed hay—or whatever they may have. And poultry raisers will find here the proper feed for chicks, for growing pullets and laying hens. Steer feeders, sheep men, horse and mule owners—all can find extra profit in the Checkerboard Bag.

The first carload of Purina has just arrived in Holt. Stop in and examine the largest selling poultry and stock feeds in America—largest because they do make more money for the feeders. Come in and let us explain the Purina plan of feeding and how it helps you make more money—or phone and we will be glad to come out to your place.

HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Issued Weekly From The Home Of The Biggest Co-operative Creamery In Marshall County

One Dollar Fifty Per Year In Advance

H. O. Hanson, Publisher. Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota; Friday, November 8, 1929. Volume 19; Number 28.

Skating Rink Fund

The gross income from local subscription and the big benefit dance given here two weeks ago, for to raise a fund for our local skating rink, was $80.75. The total expense of rebuilding the rink, music and other incidentals were $15.85.

The balance left on hand is $64.90. This sum we hope will reach for the maintaining of a good clean rink this winter.

We have this nice sum left for reason that so many of the local sportsmen donated their time and labor in fixing up the rink, instead of hiring someone to do all work. The rink was one of the finest co-operative projects ever worked out here. But a good live committee and a boost from every businessman and others in our town has again proen what can be done when we all co-operate.

School Notes

The children have finished making the curtain in Miss Rognlie's room. We all think our room looks very nice now.

Five members of the English III class were appointed to report on School notes. They were: Gerinda Monson, First and Second Grade room. Alice Hall, Third and Fourth grade room. Agnes Nohre, Fifth and Sixth grade room. Ethel Johnson, Seventh and Eight grade room. Verna Johnson, High School.

The chemicals and equipment for chemistry have arrived. During a laboratory period this supply was unpacked. The chemicals were arranged neatly on shelves and in a manner convenient for using.

Recently, the English II class completed the study of Washington Irving's Essays. They are, at present, studying Composition.

The English I class has studied Hawthorne's, "Twice Told Tales." Now, they are studying "Old Testament Stories." As a class project in connection with this study they have elected Julius Faiman and Eleanor Larson, president and vice-president, repectively, to work on a newspaper, which will be composed of editorials written by the members of the class. The topics will be taken from the "Old Testament Stories."

Oscar: What is a wireless telegraph?

Billy: Well, it is like if you have a large dog reaching from Holt to Thief River Falls, and if you showed him a bone in Thief River Falls, he would wag his tail in Holt. Only you haven't any wires.

Johnnie: Hey, Oscar, I believe this school is haunted!

Oscar: Why?

Johnnie: Well, because Mr. Vieths is always talking about school spirit!

Good sportsmanship is a very good characteristic for a person to posses Sportsmanship shows us that the person is fair and generous, whether it is in games, lessons or in contact with others.

The right sort of a sport considers others as well as himself. This person will co-operate with others in making things more jolly and enjoyable. He will not try to "get by" when not knowing his lessons or in any other way, try to "get by" without doing his part.

In any project, there are always the winners and the losers. Some people are not sportsmen enough to appreciate what another individual has won. They can only ask why they were not as lucky. A sportsman can always be a good loser. If he happens to be a winner he will be a broadminded winner, not saying much about it.

Good sportsmen are honest to themselves. They do not give one an impression that they are more than they really are. Sportsmen are well liked and popular for what they are. Then, if one wants to be a good sportman one must be himself.

Ethel Johnson.

Dinner and Sale

If you are looking ahead for a a good place to go and have a chicken dinner, then, you must not forget about the big chicken dinner and sale which will be held in the Nazareth Lutheran church parlors, by the Ladies Aid on Thursday evening, Nov. 21st, at six o'clock.

Large crowds always attend these dinners and sale, so just to give you a friendly "tip" we say to come early.

Many fine articles have been made by members of the ladies aid and others whom have donated them to be sold at this sale which will be held immediately after the dinner.

Come and bring your friends.

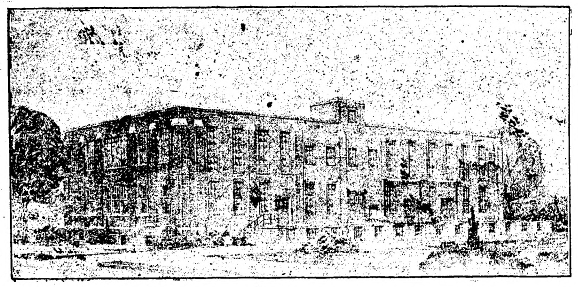
Official Opening of Land O' Lakes Poultry Plant Will Be Celebrated at Thief River Falls Saturday, November 9th



The formal opening and dedication of the new egg and poultry plant built by the Land O' Lakes Creameries in Thief River Falls will take place on Saturday, November 9th. The announcement of the opening of this new plant is of unusual interest to the poultry producers of Northwestern Minnesota as this institution represents more than a mere place for farmers to deliver their eggs and poultry. It is the outgrowth of many years of effort on the part of the producers in this territory to establish an outlet for their eggs and poultry through an institution owned and controlled by farmers. This plant will become the service unit for the creameries in this northwest section and brings to this territory an institution that will give farmers the most direct outlet for their egg and poultry products. Long hauls of both eggs and poultry are not economic both from the standpoint of cost of transportation and condition of product at the time of delivery, and it is through this new institution that the farmers bring to their doors the service of dressing and packing plant operations, as well as a point from which such feeds as they will need to purchase can be distributed at lowest cost. The plant is undoubtedly a beginning of a chain of service units that will be established by the Land O' Lakes Creameries through which producer and consumer will be brought closer together, and is an advance move in the solution of the agricultural problem.

The dedication program, to which the public is invited, will begin with the opening of the plant for inspection at 9:30 to 12:30. Afternoon program of speaking and entertainment will be held at the auditorium commencing at 1:30. The evening program will be in charge of the Thief River Falls Commercial Club. A dinner will be served at 50 cents per plate. This will be followed by an interesting program.

This plant is, without question, one of the finest and most up-to-date plants of its kind in this state. The entire second floor is taken up for the 120 battery feeding room. The first floor contains the office, receiving rooms, egg candling room and warehouse space for feeds, poultry and egg supplies. The egg candling room is insulated and equipped with cooling and ventilating equipment, permitting eggs to be handled under the most ideal conditions.

The basement contains the poultry killing and picking room which is being equipped to handle 5,000 birds per day; a battery wash room and two battery sterilizing rooms. All batteries after being once used, are taken to the washroom and thoroughly washed, after which they are placed in the sterilizing room and steamed before being put into use again. A feather washing and drying room; all feathers that are saleable will be washed, dried and sacked, ready for sale. Egg breaking room, where eggs will be broken, canned and frozen, ready for sale. A large cooler room, as well as a sharp freezer, which will permit the handling of poultry and eggs under ideal conditions. Boiler and engine room contains refrigerating machinery and boiler which is equipped with oil burner. Basement also has a well lighted storage room, and is so arranged so that a second killing and picking room can be had during the rush season when both turkeys and poultry are marketed.

For Best Results in Home Dyeing

You can always give richer, deeper, more brilliant colors to faded or out-of-style dresses, hose, coats, draperies, etc., with Diamond Dyes. And the colors stay in through wear and washing!

Here's the reason. Diamond Dyes contain the highest quality anilines money can buy. And it's the anilines that count! They are the very life of dyes.

Plenty of pure anilines make Diamond Dyes easy to use. They go on evenly without spotting or streaking. Try them next time and see why authorities recommend them; why millions of women will use no other dyes.

You get Diamond Dyes for the same price as ordinary dyes; 15c, at any drug store.

Saved

A peppery little lawyer who had much business to attend to in Superior court, responded when his case was called and immediately put in a plea for a continuance.

"For what reason?" the court inquired. The lawyer hesitated a moment and then said: "You see, Your Honor, I've been unable to get a cent from my client and consequently the case is not ready."

The judge smiled, pondered for a moment and then announced:

"Case continued for financial reasons."

THEIR DAY OF JOY

Eleven years ago, on November 11, 1918, the World war was ended. Verdun, Ypres, Chateau Theirry and other fields where the manhood of the warring nations fell, no longer were to hear the ear-piercing noise of cannonading. And with tear-stained faces, the world was able to laugh again after more than four years of strife.

And each year since, at the same hour, the world stops its business for two minutes to pray for the peace of the dead heroes and for the continued peace of the world.

Photo shows an American sailor, and an American Red Cross nurse, with two British soldiers at Vincennes, France, celebrating the signing of the Armistice.

War's Hatreds No Heritage of Americans

To those who have observed with thoughtful minds the changing character of the American celebrations of Armistice day there will come today a deeper understanding of our national ideals and a more illuminating conception of that essential spirit that has set America apart, in its aims and purposes, from all the nations of the Old world. When the news first broke upon a war-weary world eleven years ago that the day of peace had at last dawned, it was but natural that we should join with the other allied nations, our brothers in the great struggle in exultant manifestations of triumph over victory achieved as well as joy at the happy termination of the years of storm and struggle. But the wild exuberance of those first celebrations has diminished with each recurrence of the anniversary of Armistice day. It is no longer in America a day of victory exultation, but a day of tender memories and glorification of the heroic dead for whom the day of peace dawned in another world. The malice and the hatreds of war, the delirium of conquest and the vainglory of military triumph, have passed like incidents of an evil hour. In their place have come the effluence of those beneficent aims and purposes which were the corner stones of the nation's foundations and which, in every national crisis, have risen to assert themselves, as the true national ideals, above the shouts of victory or the transient glories of military successes. It is in this spirit that America proclaims to the world the ringing truth that it is not a militaristic nation, but the world's arbiter of peace.

Victories Not Celebrated.

This note of charity and healing peace has been characteristic of the aftermaths of all our nation's great wars. Jena and Austerlitz, Trafalgar and Waterloo, are still names that commemorate military achievements abroad and monuments and arches of triumph and days of celebration still perpetuate victories of the past over there. It is characteristic of the American spirit that we have not followed that custom. Our greatest monument attests a heroic defeat—that of Bunker Hill. No national holiday has ever been set aside to commemorate a military victory. Yorktown, New Orleans, Buena Vista, Gettysburg, the Appomattox campaign, Santiago and Manila Bay are still patriotic memories, but they are perpetuated only in glorious history and not in days of exultation. America's policy and spirit have always been characterized by a charitable forgetfulness of the hatreds of war and the extended hand of renewed peace to the foe.

Such was the last word that Washington left to the young republic still cherishing memories of the Revolutionary struggle: "It will be worthy of a free, enlightened and, at no distant period, a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. . . . In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others, should be excluded and that in place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated."

Lincoln's Great Message.

With the end of the great Civil war in sight—one of the most bitter wars ever fought—Lincoln in his second inaugural address voiced the same message: "With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphan, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations."

It was the same thought that found poetic expression in Francis M. Finch's "The Blue and the Gray":

No more shall the war cry sever
  Or the winding rivers run red,
They banish our anger forever,
  When they laurel the graves of our dead.
Under the sod and the dew,
  Waiting the judgment day,
Love and tears for the blue,
  Tears and love for the gray.

Soldiers' Heritage.

And so, on this Armistice day, there comes back a voice from the dead—the voice of a poet British born, but adopted by the world, who died on the field before the dawn of the day of peace—to remind us that America's, as well as the world's, greatest gain from the war of the nations are the memories of the hero dead and not the selfish glories of victory:

Blow out, you bugles, over the rich Dead!
There's none of these so lonely and poor of old,
But, dying, has made us rarer gifts than gold.
These laid the world away; poured out the red
Sweet wine of youth; gave up the years to be
Of work and joy, and that unhoped serene
That men call age; and those who would have been
Their sons, they gave their immortality. . . .
Honor has come back, as a king to earth,
And paid his subjects with a royal wage;
And Nobleness walks in our ways again,
And we have come into our heritage.

It is thoughts such as these, expressed by our own great statesmen and by this poet from across the seas, that should blend in the reflection of our hours of meditation today into a forgetfulness of all hatreds and a renewal of hopes for that reign of Peace which America, as a nation, has always symbolized.—From the Kansas City Star.

THE NEWS IN CAMP

Just an example of how the Sixth infantry went wild when they got news of the Armistice, near Remoiville, Meuse, France.

Heroic Dead Worthy of Their Day of Tribute

Armistice day was set apart as a periodical reminder to this country of what the World war cost it in treasure and in young life and limb. The apparently growing tendency of business to ignore the day meets with a rebuke from Gen. Chrales H. Cole, who protests against the commercialization of a day sacred to the memory of his fallen comrades. Veterans of the war will not be alone in applauding this protest. All Americans, whether the war took personal toll of them or not, who are still mindful of the significance of that greatest of all human upheavals, will second it.

With all our wealth, with all our prosperity, we can better afford to slow up the wheels of industry and trade for the space of one short day than to forget the sacrifice made by those who died that those wheels might not be stopped entirely. A nation that can so soon forget the sacrifice will not long remember its purpose or its achievement.—Detroit Free Press.

STORY FROM THE START

Capt. Lion Fellowes American ship is sunk by the British off Portugal in the War of 1812. Fellowes' life is saved by Cara Inglepin, daughter of the owner of the American ship, True Bounty, Capt. Chater, in trade with the enemy. Because of love for Cara he consents to sail as mate. The True Bounty is stopped by the British frigate, Badger, Capt. Collishawe. Despite his American citizenship, Fellowes is taken aboard the Badger a "pressed" man. He scents treachery and fosters a hatred for Collishawe. Cara and Chater Collishawe tells him Cara had nothing to do with his abduction. He refuses to believe.

—10—

"No occasion for this exhibition—or for your insolence. You were flogged for striking your commander—you should have been hung; I made allowance for your excited condition." He hesitated. "It ought not to be necessary to have to tell you that the lady you mention was in no way responsible for your being pressed. If you're a gentleman—"

"But I'm not," objected Fellowes. "I'm a common sailor. I've been flogged to convince me of it—one hundred lashes of the cat."

Collishawe rubbed his chin, embarrassed, apparently at a loss.

"See here," he exclaimed impulsively, "I'm d—d sorry this happened. You acted most foolishly, but I wouldn't have ordered the cat if there'd been any way out of the mess you got yourself into."

"Oh, d—n you and your sympathy," Fellowes answered, gently venomous. "And d—n your lies. I know what you are up to. I know what Miss Inglepin is up to. You aren't fooling me."

The Englishman stared at him coldly.

"That will do," he rasped. "Go below. And if you insult me again I'll send you to the brig in strict confinement. Clinch!"

"Aye, aye, sir!"

"Escort this man to his berth. He's not to come on deck unless he conducts himself in accordance with discipline."

"Aye, aye, sir!" The bosun was flustered. And as soon as they were out of earshot of Collishawe: "Wot 'ave I been atellin ye? Want to get that back cut up again? Only that the cap'n's kindly ye'd be stripped at the mast this minit."

Fellowes sobered.

"I hate him. I think I hate him more every day. I hate him for what he did to me. I hate him for being sorry he did it. I hate him— Oh, I just hate him. D'you understand, Clinch? I hate him! Whatever he does, I hate him!"

"'Taint Christian, lad," rebuked the bosun. "'Tain't nowise Christian. Now, 'ere's yer berth. Lie down and rest up a piece. Likely ye'll get some o' that hate out o' ye, then."

"No, Bob," Fellowes answered wearily. "It's a part of me. It won't come out."

CHAPTER V

Escape

Plying her regular patrol well to seaward of Sandy Hook, the Badger was the vidette of the New York squadron, always on outpost.

One of the first things Fellowes discovered was that the blockaders were in constant communication with the shore. At night sloops and periaugers would steal out from the Jersey coves or the Rockaway inlets, with fresh meats and vegetables—and information that was much more valuable. Well-dressed gentry would climb aboard the sloop-of-war hats pulled low over their eyes, and be escorted to the cabin, where they talked into the small hours.

Obviously, Ben Inglepin's daughter was not singular in her disloyalty; the country seethed with factional strife as in the days of the Revolution. There must be many Americans who hated Madison worse than the stupid Prince Regent—Americans who would wreck their country, procure its defeat, sacrifice a measure of its independence, rather than see the Democratic administration triumph.

Fellowes regarded the intercourse between the blockaders and the shore as encouraging for his plans to escape. He was certain the tide of treason was flowing unchecked. The continuing visits of the contraband traders were sufficient proof, and the news that percolated from them through all ranks indicated how disastrously the national effort was being crippled by political jealousy and incapacity.

But he waited with unabated confidence. His back was entirely healed and he was glad to do his share of hard, physical labor. Work helped to dull the carking itch of humiliation. Collishawe ignored him, and he avoided Collishawe as much as he could.

With the crew he was, if not popular, respected. But then any man would have been respected aboard the Badger, who could boast the friendship of Bob Clinch and Cuffee Cockroach. Clinch was all-powerful for'ard, and no sailor would have dared to risk the giant negro's wrath. The nigger, men said, fought with 'is teeth; he'd eat yer alive, if 'e got primed.

One July morning the Badger left her consorts off the Hook, hauled her wind and stood to the nor'west on long reaching tacks, and Fellowes' eye glinted expectantly when she closed a low, sandy shore that afternoon, and dropped her anchor outside the line of breakers. The hunger in his face drew Cuffee to him.

Fellowes caught the negro by the arm.

"That's mine, Cuffee! That's my land."

In his excitement he had raised his voice slightly, and Tom Grogan rolled across the deck.

"Easy all, messmate!" advised Tom. "No need to git yer dander rizzed up. These landin' parties is reg'lar divarsions on the blockade."

"Landing parties?" exclaimed Fellowes. "Who told you a party was going ashore?"

"Nobody, but I seed Clinch afussin' with the long boat, and we ain't anchored here for to rest our spars."

Fellowes glanced aft to where the longboat lay on its chocks. Bob Clinch was bending over it. As Fellowes watched him, he straightened and strolled for'ard.

"Oh, Bob," called Fellowes. "What's this I hear about a landing party?"

"Cap'n's orders. Dark o' the moon, ye see." Clinch winked mysteriously. "Fine time to raid 'enroosts."

"Is that what you're after?"

There was disappointment in Fellowes' voice.

"'Ow should I know, lad? The cap'n ain't give me 'is confeedance. All 'e says is: 'Bosun, landin' party tonight. Overhaul the longboat and pick me twenty good men. Pistols 'n cutlasses. Ye'll go with me.'"

"He's going, himself?" Fellowes asked eagerly.

"Aye, aye, lad. That's 'ow I understand it."

Clinch stumped off, and Fellowes fixed his gaze again on the shore that was so near, and so unattainable. He had been right. Cara Inglepin's treason was bearing fruit. Tonight, perhaps, it would flower. And he was helpless to interfere!

He groaned, and Tom inquired anxiously:

"Ye ain't goin' to be silly, 'n fret cause ye can't go in the longboat?"

"Dat him land," spoke up Cuffee. "Dat him home whar he lib."

"Not my home, Cuffee," denied Fellowes. "That's Fire Island, the Great South beach. My home is across the Great South bay beyond it—at Babylon, where the landing party are going."

"Who tole ye that?" demanded Tom.

"I'm as positive as I can be," the Long Islander concluded. "Collishawe, himself wouldn't go with an ordinary raiding party. No, he is going to meet her—Miss Inglepin—" a cold note of passion rang in his voice as he spoke the name—"and her father. At Chater's farm, of course. They must have something for him, political or military information—and if we could only get there in time we might raise the militia, and trap them all!"

"Mebbe so we swim fo' sho'," suggested Cuffee. "Cuffee him Krooboy. All Krooboy swim plenty. Cuffee swim fo' beach, pull yo' wid him."

Startled and doubtful, Fellowes surveyed the expanse of restless blue water and the smother of breakers.

"It would be a hard swim, Cuffee," he objected. "I can swim a little, but—"

"I can't," grunted Tom.

"Cuffee pull yo' bofe," grinned the negro. "Dat easy fo' Cuffee."

"Foolishness," grumbled Tom.

"We must make a try for it, Tom. If you won't come—"

"Cuffee no let yo' drown," promised the negro.

"We'll stand by you, if you'll stand by us." Fellowes pleaded earnestly. "But we must make a try for the shore. We may never have another opportunity. Why, we'd deserve to be flogged, if we didn't go!"

Pipe to Cure Pain

The shaman or doctor of the Wiyot Indians wore a pair of feather dusters draped on each side of the head, and carried a bundle of condor feathers, an elkhide belt and a pipe.

Among the Wiyot, unlike the modern custom, doctors were chiefly women. Some of them diagnosed the ills of their tribespeople by dancing or singing, others sucked out the pain through their magic pipes. The condor feathers were pushed down the throat, much as a sword swallower would handle a knife. A very complete shaman's outfit which has passed from one member of the tribe to another for several generations, has been recently acquired by the Museum of Anthropology of the University of California.

YOU HAVE A DOCTOR'S WORD FOR THIS LAXATIVE

In 1875, an earnest young man began to practice medicine. As a family doctor, he saw the harm in harsh purgatives for constipation and began to search for something harmless to the sensitive bowels.

Out of his experience was born a famous prescription. He wrote it thousands of times. It proved an ideal laxative for old and young. As people saw how marvelously the most sluggish bowels are started and bad breath, headaches, feverishness, nausea, gas, poor appetite, and such disorders, are relieved by the prescription, it became necessary to put it up ready for use. Today, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, as it is called, is the world's most popular laxative. It never varies from Dr. Caldwell's original effective and harmless formula. All drugstores have it.

Curious Old Beliefs

In Sweden a book is placed beneath the head of a newly born child so that he may be quick at reading. They say, too, that so long as a child is unchristened, the fire must never be extinguished lest evil spirits come, and no one must pass between the fire and the child whilst it is being fed by the mother.

That Was That

"I think you should show your parents some respect and ask them if you can do things before you do them," said her dad sharply.

"Be a waste of time, dad," retorted his modern daughter, "you'd say no, and I'd do them anyway."

Girl at the Top in Health Test

Millions of boys and girls all over the world, thousands of them right here in the West are being restored to health and strength by the purely vegetable tonic and laxative known as California Fig Syrup and endorsed by physicians for over 50 years.

Children need no urging to take it. They love its rich, fruity flavor. Nothing can compete with it as a gentle, but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It gives tone and strength to the stomach and bowels so these organs continue to act normally, of their own accord. It stimulates the appetite, helps digestion.

A Kansas mother, Mrs. Dana Allgire, 610 Monroe St., Topeka, says: "Bonnie B. is absolutely the picture of health, now, with her ruddy cheeks, bright eyes and plump but graceful little body and she stands at the top in every health test.

Much of the credit for her perfect condition is due to California Fig Syrup. We have used it since babyhood to keep her bowels active during colds or any children's ailments and she has always had an easy time with them. She always responds to its gentle urging and is quickly back to normal."

Ask your druggist for California Fig Syrup and look for the word "California" on the carton so you'll always get the genuine.

NEW CRAFT WILL CRAWL ON RIVER

Caterpillar Tracks Drag Vessel Through Shallows.

St. Louis.—Secrets of a new kind of boat that has power to move on dry land like a war-time tank were revealed here.

Its motive power is a pair of caterpillar tractor tracks, that run beneath the bottom of the vessel. It will not be set to climbing banks, unless the pilot falls asleep, because the bracing of the hull is made for water, and would be unlikely to support the weight on land. It is a towboat designed for navigating in two feet of water and meeting some of the problems of American river transportation.

The moving tracks run one under each side of a nearly flat bottom, and each one has its own power plant. The craft are rudderless, for they steer by the tracks like land tanks, and turn around in their own lengths. Their speed is eight to nine miles an hour and six miles with a tow.

The tracks are endless belts of flexible steel, that rise above water level to re-enter the boat through tunnels running the length of the hull on each side. Automatic doors close the ends of the tunnel, except to the moving tracks.

Like duck feet, these new fashioned boat pedals have to be webbed to grip the water. The webs are flat steel plates, two feet wide and a foot deep, fastened to the tracks so as to extend vertically downward into the water.

The tracks are driven by electricity generated by Diesel engines. Claim is made that three gallons of oil runs the boat an hour.

Even if they never begin taking to the highways alongside the river, the new towboats are designed for a revolution in waterway freight transportation. This revolution is to imitate railroad freight methods in order to recover for the rivers some of the freight hauling prestige that they lost to land lines.

The towboats are made to haul long lines of barges. The analogy does not end there. The barges look like railroad box cars, although their capacities equal three to five standard freight cars. They couple so that they will turn about sharp bends without losing their alignment.

Small towboats are designed to do switch engine duty at various ports. It is claimed that a "switch engine" boat can hook a barge to the main tow without stopping the procession.

Impenetrable Vault to Hold England's Gold

London.—An army of men who have been working for years under the strictest oaths of secrecy are now completing the new vaults for the Bank of England. They have transformed them into a veritable fortress of steel and stone, a $25,000,000 castle which will be able to defy any attack, even from the air. Bombs will be useless and underground tunnels will meet with impenetrable barriers.

As for attempts on the ground, engineers estimate it would take weeks of hard work with dynamite and oxyacetylene torches even to damage the huge steel doors which lead to the vaults.

Some of the vaults, buried deep in the ground are now finished and they embody the safe-builders' most perfect designs, and the most modern type of reinforced concrete and steel.

Concrete walls seven feet thick run around the vaults. Inside the walls are steel grills built into slabs of concrete and passages where armed guards will patrol when the vaults are full of bullion. The vault doors are solid steel and weigh 12 tons each.

And though they are so delicately balanced on their hinges that a child could swing them open, once they are locked they are strong enough to withstand the force of tons of dynamite.

Honeycombed in the maze of stone and steel will be scores of alarms and bells, to shrill out a warning as soon as any intruder enters.

The bank has its own water supply, electricity plant, and army of guardsmen, and in case of attack—by revolutionary forces, for example—could withstand siege indefinitely.

Action of the waves has recently washed the wreck near the shore where it has been identified by a member of the crew who escaped, badly burned, and who since has made a living as a fisherman at Boca Ciego. The hull, masts and funnels of the ship can be clearly seen against the white sands at the bottom of the bay.

FIND NEW GAMBLING SCHEME IN CAPITAL

Pool Is Based on Weather Bureau Reports.

Washington.—Daily temperatures of the United States weather bureau have been revealed as the newest vehicle for large-scale gambling operations in the Capital, backed by the operators of the "numbers" game, whose activities, confined to the daily report of the New York clearing house, have been badly crippled by the campaign recently undertaken by the United States attorney's office.

Through the scores of runners, who have been collecting the bets and attending to the pay offs for the backers of the clearing house "numbers" game, went the word recently that a new pool, based on the weather report, would be started and offers were made of prizes ranging from $500 to a few cents for the winners in the pool. An outlay of 60 cents for a week's play was all that was asked.

Like Baseball Pool.

Resembling more the baseball pool gambling that flourished here until the "numbers" game came into tremendous vogue with the gambling fraternity, the weather report gambling was reported in sporting circles to have already caught the fancy of many of the small sum wagerers, who have been the principal clients of the "numbers" operators during the brief popularity that form of gambling has enjoyed here.

According to one runner, the backers of the weather report gambling will take almost any sort of bet on the temperatures as issued to the newspapers by the weather bureau. They advertise a wide range of combinations of figures available for the gambler to place his money on, and promise to pay handsomely to the winner in regularly worked out systems similar to those instituted in the "numbers" game.

At the weather bureau it was stated that this form of gambling is not a new one except as it concerns the Capital.

"We have had considerable trouble in several cities, especially in St. Louis, which seems to be the center of this form of gambling, where attempts have been made to bribe officials of the weather bureau to issue false temperature reports," William Weber, chief clerk of the bureau, declared.

Attempts at Bribery

Mr. Weber declared that in some cities bribes running as high as $1,000 have been offered weather bureau officials for the issuance of false figures supplied by persons anxious to make a killing in the weather report gambling.

In St. Louis, he said, the situation was such that the bureau made agreements with newspapers that the latter were not to accept any reports from the weather bureau that showed signs of erasures. Tampering with the temperature figures while they were en route from the bureau to the newspaper offices in the hands of copy boys had been uncovered from time to time.

"Regardless of the gambling on these figures, we can't very well withhold such important information from the public," Mr. Weber stated.

Flyer Leaps Canal Locks in First Plane Passage

Balboa, C. Z.—The first seaplane ever to pass through the Panama canal avoided payment of tolls by hopping over the locks.

Loaded with 2,500 issues of "The Panama American" for distribution on the Atlantic side of the Isthmus, the plane's pilot, Capt. Jack Miller, of the Isthmian Airways, found he would have to take off in a blinding tropical rainy season squall in order to get the papers to Colon and Cristobal readers before breakfast. Reaching Miraflores, the plane speeded up and hopped over Miraflores locks, landing in the artificial Miraflores lake only to hop again and wing its way over Pedro Miguel locks. Through Gaillard cut and Gatun lake the plane churned the canal waters. Reaching Gatun locks it made a third and last hop before taxiing out into the Caribbean and to the Isthmian hangars at Folks river inlet.

The plane left the Pacific at 6:20 a. m. and reached the Atlantic side at 7:45 a. m., traversing the 47 miles of the canal in 80 minutes.

Laboratory to Be Like Bureau of Standards.

Washington.—The first step toward establishment in Washington of a national research center for problems in human and animal psychology, comparable in some ways to the bureau of standards, has been taken by the incorporation here of the National Institute of Psychology, whose membership includes 50 of the foremost American experimental psychologists.

The incorporators are Prof. Knight Dunlap, head of the psychology department of Johns Hopkins university and until a few weeks ago of the division of psychology and anthropology of the national research council; Dr. Hugh S. Cumming, surgeon general of the United States Public Health service, and Dr. Edwin E. Slosson. The charter authorizes it to "promote the application of scientific facts and principles to human and animal life and welfare."

The intent, as described by Professor Dunlap, is to found "a national psychological laboratory, similar in some of its functions to the bureau of standards, but not under federal control. Such a laboratory can be under a relatively permanent director and can undertake programs of research too lengthy, expensive and complicated for other institutions.

"In such a laboratory truly co-operative results of the highest value can be obtained. Men working in other laboratories on details of the problems undertaken in the national laboratory could arrange to transfer their work there during leave of absence or in summers.

"Work done here can be subjected to criticism while in progress, instead of afterward, and the co-operative method can insure greater certainty as to conditions. Such a national laboratory will be of really inestimable advantage to psychology, not only because of its availability for the solution of problems unwieldy elsewhere, but because standards of research may be elevated."

The selection of a site in Washington or its environs, Professor Dunlap said, must be undertaken with great care. The laboratories must be in some place free from noise, vibrations and electrical disturbances of the city because of the extreme delicacy of the instruments used in some experiments.

The institute wants to locate in Washington, Professor Dunlap said, because the National Capital is close to the geographic center of scientific America and because of the exceptional facilities for research here.

Movie Star Too Young to View Own Picture

Berlin.—Brigitto Helm, one of the foremost movie stars of Germany, looks younger than her years. This is admitted by Miss Helm, by her press agent and also by the imperial gloriously uniformed doorman of a leading Berlin movie house.

Some months ago Miss Helm played the lead in the film drama, "The Wonderful Lie of Nina Petrovna." Soon thereafter she presented a ticket at a door of a Berlin theater which should have admitted her inasmuch as she had bought it at the box office just a few minutes before. The doorman, however, refused to let her in, but pointed instead to a sign over the box office window which read: "Children Under 16 Not Admitted."

Protesting that she was not only older than sixteen, but was the Nina of the play, the doorman called the theater manager, who, after one glance at the young lady, replied: "You can't get past me with your wonderful lie, my dear child." So Brigitto Helm spent the evening at home.

Goggles Fitted on Dog; Little Mistress Pleased

Wausau, Wis.—A bulldog that had become dear to the heart of two-year-old Geraldine Albers was growing slowly blind and the girl's father sought eagerly to save the dog's eyes.

As a final recourse the animal was taken to an optometrist, who fitted him with specially-designed "glasses." The lenses were held in place by a harness that fit the bulldog's head. The animal now can see well—with the aid of his goggles.

Invalid Claims Record Writing on Rice Grain

Philadelphia.—E. L. Blystone, forty-year-old [illegible] of Ardara, Pa., has claimed [illegible] of having written [illegible] a single grain of rice [illegible] man. He read an [illegible] a Hindu writing 400 letters on a grain and set out to beat the mark. His record now is 454 letters.

Coloradoan Owns Quilt Antedating First Flag

Loveland, Colo.—W. H. Gard of Loveland owns a quilt one year older than the first flag of this country. The material for the flag, made in Philadelphia in 1776, is homespun and of hand woven linen. Printed in a symbolic and patriotic design, it was first put on the market in the Pennsylvania city to commemorate the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

Needless Suffering

The next time a headache makes you stay at home—

Or some other ache or pain prevents your keeping an engagement—

Remember Bayer Aspirin! For there is scarcely any pain it cannot relieve, and relieve promptly.

These tablets give real relief, or millions would not continue to take them. They are quite harmless, or the medical profession would not constantly prescribe them.

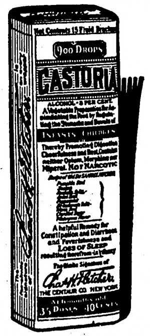
Don't be a martyr to unnecessary pain. To colds that might so easily be checked; to neuritis, neuralgia; to those pains peculiar to women; or any suffering for which Bayer Aspirin is such an effective antidote.

For your own protection, buy the genuine. Bayer is safe. It's always the same. It never depresses the heart, so use it as often as needed; but the cause of any pain can be treated only by a doctor.

BAYER ASPIRIN
Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

Fortunate are they who are run down only by elevator men.

Ambition begins with a wish, but it never stops there.



An Ailing CHILD

Are you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish condition, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the recipe on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

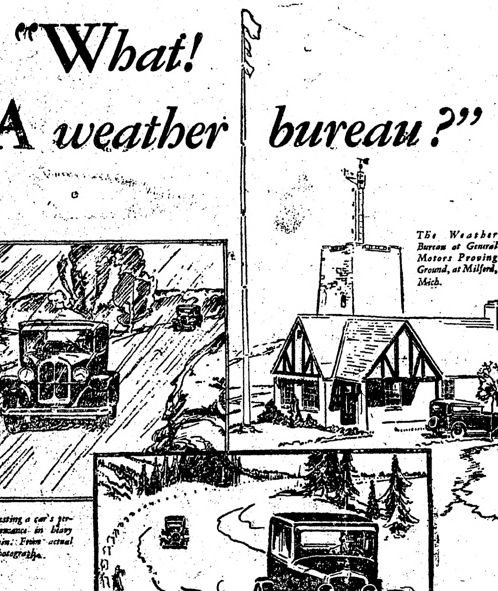
"What! A weather bureau?"



The Weather Bureau at General Motors Proving Ground, at Milford, Mich.

Testing a car's performance in heavy rain: From actual photograph.

Drawn from a photograph of a car being tested on snowy roads.

VISITORS to General Motors' 1268-acre Proving Ground marvel at the sight of a complete weather bureau and ask what it is for.

The answer is that in the testing of cars every possible factor that might affect a car's performance is considered by General Motors' engineers.

So precise are some of the tests that even the difference between a sunny day and a partly cloudy day—or between a north breeze and a south breeze—is considered.

With each day's record of the mechanical tests applied to a car on the roads and hills of the Proving Ground is included a report of the exact weather conditions prevailing. The engineers then can know how weather affects performance, and can have a comparable record so that every car tested is given an equal opportunity to prove itself under exactly the same conditions.

Advance models of all the cars listed below were proved at the Proving Ground before they were introduced to the public. Read about them; then clip and send the coupon.

"A car for every purse and purpose"

Let Your Figures Tell Which Feed to Use

WE OFFER you Purina Chows on just one basis—they must make more money for you than anything else you can feed to your poultry or live stock. Unless Purina does this, you don't want to buy it.

Put Purina to the test of the record sheet and the scale—right out on your own place. Keep track of your feed cost—of your income—of your profits. Purina may cost you a little more in the sack—but the extra eggs, milk, pork or beef will more than offset that. After all, it's the results in the pocketbook that you're interested in.

Ask us for free record sheets and the loan of a milk scale. Let us send you enough Purina to prove its value to you. Phone us—or drop in.

Try This In Your Pipe

It may be that it is just as well that we come out flat footed and tell those who owe us money that we are getting tired of spending our time and stationery in writing them about it. Those who have received statements of their accounts should come in and settle, otherwise we will be forced to call upon them for the hard cash, in some other way.

The Carlson Mercantile Company, the headquarters of good merchandise here, are this week announcing that they will hold a coffee demonstration at their store next week.

Monday and Tuesday Nov. 18 and 19 are the two days that you will have a chane to try the famous EMPRESS Coffee.

Short Lessons in Dairying

LESSON 80

PRODUCTION: When corn is cured in the shock to be fed in the bundle, or if the stover is to be fed after the corn is husked out, it is important to shock the corn up while it is still green and put in large shocks. Bind the shock close to the top to shed rain and snow. Corn stalks that have nice green leaves when fed are pretty good feed. If weather beaten and bleached out, most of the feed value is lost.

MANUFACTURING: The cost of manufacturing butter thru the co-operative creamery system is around three cents per pound on an average. The cost of manufacturing butter thru the cream station centralized system is around 7 cents per pound. These costs were found by the United States Government in its study to determine a proper tariff on butter. Co-operative creameries always pay best.

MARKETING: When a brand or name is once established for a high quality product, like Land O' Lrkes butter, it is extremely important to have butter sold under that brand just as good as it is represented to be. The Land O' Lakes butter is government inspected.

BANKERS DEVELOP NOVEL INSTITUTE

The Georgia Bankers Association in cooperation with the State College of Agriculture has sponsored a series of farmers' institutes in various parts of the State of an entirely new character. The principle feature is a large and comprehensive exhibit transported in four large trucks and set up at each stop. When set up it fills a space 40 by 60 feet and consists of panels, charts, and models on practically every phase of agriculture, including agronomy, horticulture, agricultural engineering, poultry, animal husbandry, soils and fertilizers, home economics and marketing. A large electrified farm model, showing the uses of electricity on the farm, model farm buildings and the ideal layout and landscaping of the farmstead, is one of the most elaborate and attractive exhibits.

Local bankers in each locality visited gave the money to cover expenses for the transportation and installation of the exhibit in their territory and assisted in the preliminary advertising and publicity. The College of Agriculture assembled the exhibit and conducted the tour through its various extension specialists.

School Notes

First and Second Grades

The first and second graders have completed their Thanksgiving sandtable. It is modeled according to the story of "The Landing of Miles Standish."

Several pots of flowers have been planted in the first and second grade room. They will have a real indoor garden.

The new curtains which are being made, will add to the homelike atmosphere of the primary room.

Third and Fourth Grades

The third and fourth grade Little Citizens League met last Friday, November 8, for the election of officers.

Adeloyd Larson was elected president. Lowell Sovde secretary and Opal Sanoden treasurer.

The third and fourth grade Reading Club met Friday, November 8. Glenn Carlson was admitted into the Reading Club.

We have many children in the reading club.

We had an enjoyable time.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The fift and sixth grade have now completed the dolls representing the people of Norway in their National Costumes.

They are now making a frieze of the pilgrams since the time they left England until they arrived in America.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

A party was given Hallowe'en evening, by the pupils. The room was appropriately decorated by the decorating committee, Clara, Minerva, and Clarence. Members of the other committees were: Beulah, Gladys, and Carl. The program committee: Eunice, Agnes, Margaret and Stilof. The serving committee were; Clarence, Rueben, Gustav, Olive and Clara.

Everyone came dressed as farmers and farmerettes, Miss Rognlie and Stilof Anderson winning first for having the best costumes.

A good time was enjoyed by everyone. The guests expressed hopes of future parties just as enjoyable.

HIGH SCHOOL

The English III Class are making Scrap Books in which to put poetry which seems most appealing to them.

From Nov. 17 to Nov. 23 is the American National Book week. English I class and English II class are giving book reports that week.

English III class are writing One Act plays. They must be written before Nov. 22.

The Holt High School plan to have a Carnival, Nov. 22. There will be an interesting time for everyone. A One-Act play, titled, "Not a Man in the House" will be played besides many other amusements and a good lunch. Come! Bring the family and all your friends. We have attractions for the young and the old; the serious and the gay.

Parcel post packages should not be sealed as only the mail order houses can do that without the payment of letter postage.

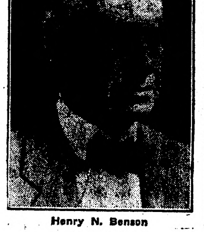
Middle River Record Changes Hands

M. S. Nordine, formerly owner and publisher of the Strandquist Press, closed a deal with H. L. Schuster on Tuesday whereby he became the owner of the Middle River Record at MiddleRiver.

We are glad to see you back amongst the boys, Mr. Nordine, and hope that our wishes for the best of luck and success to you at Middle River, will not go wandering.

As far as we know, Mr. Schuster has not yet decided what he will do or where he will locate.

Henry N. Benson Is Appointed Attorney-General of Minnesota



Henry N. Benson

Henrey N. Benson, St. Peter, Minn., was appointed by Governor Theodore Christianson as attorney general of Minnesota.

Mr. Benson will succeed Attorney General G. A. Youngquist who has resigned to accept the appointment as successor to Mabel Walker Willebrandt, who was an assistant attorney general of the United States in charge of prohibition enforcement.

Minnesota's new attorney general has been a member of the state senate for 12 years, serving until 1922 when he retired. He had been considered one of the outstanding Republican candidates for governor next year.

Mr. Benson, during his tenure of office in the state senate, supported the tonage tax and was chairman of the committee on elections in 1921. He is widely known throughout the state for his activities as chairman of the board of Gustavus Adolphus and studied law at the University of Minnesota.

Chicken Dinner

Ladies Aid Sale

If you are looking ahead for a a good place to go and have a chicken dinner, then, you must not forget about the big chicken dinner and sale which will be held in the Nazareth Lutheran church parlors, by the Ladies Aid on Thursday evening, Nov. 21st, at six o'clock.

Large crowds always attend these dinners and sale, so just to give you a friendly "tip" we say to come early.

Many fine articles have been made by members of the ladies aid and others whom have donated them to be sold at this sale which will be held immediately after the dinner.

Come and bring your friends.

Many People Attended Poultry Plant Opening

Several hundred people from here attended the opening celebration of the large Land O'Lakes poultry plant at Thief RiverFalls on Saturday. The plant is of the latest and most modern construction and is one of the largest of its kind in the entire northwest.

This plant and the business it will do in one year does not only mean a lot to our neighbor city, but it will be a big benefit to the whole territory which it will serve.

Thief River Falls can well take the title as the Turkey Center of the northwest. Last year several carloads were shipped out to the eastern markets from there and this year, with the new poultry plant operating at full capacity, they expect to pass last year's record by several carloads.

ROBBERS

Robbers will get you coming and going. If you haven't got turkeys to take, they will take the cash.

Gilbert Nelson was into the News Office on Wednesday and reported that thieves had broken into their house while they were gone on Saturday, and went thru their belongings, stealing $63.00 in cash.

Mr. Nelson wishes to thank the culprits for the favor and dirty work. Some one better look out or they will soon be caught in the act around here.——Holt Weekly News.

A Sour Stomach

In the same time it takes a dose of soda to bring a little temporary relief of gas and sour stomach, Phillips Milk of Magnesia has acidity completely checked, and the digestive organs all tranquilized. Once you have tried this form of relief you will cease to worry about your diet and experience a new freedom in eating.

This pleasant preparation is just as good for children, too. Use it whenever coated tongue or fetid breath signals need of a sweetener. Physicians will tell you that every spoonful of Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Get the genuine, the name Phillips is important. Imitations do not act the same!

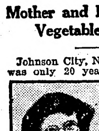
FIND "FRIEND IN NEED"

Mother and Daughter Praise Vegetable Compound

Johnson City, N. Y. —"My daughter was only 20 years old, but for two years she worked in misery. She was all run-down, nervous, had aches and pains and no appetite. I was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with good results so she decided to try it. Before she had taken two bottles her appetite was better, she was more cheerful and was able to work. I cannot praise your medicine too highly. It is wonderful for mothers and for daughters. It's surely 'a friend in need'."—Mrs. L. E. Hall, 223 Floral Avenue, Johnson City, N. Y.



AGED PRISONER ASKS NO FAVORS

Nearly Eighty, Man Says He's "Not Done Yet."

San Francisco.—While most of the elderly prisoners at San Quentin prison avail themselves of the privilege of taking life easy in the "old man's ward," the oldest inmate of them all, nearly eighty, works eight hours a day and sleeps like the majority of the convicts in the large cell blocks.

Received at the prison in April on a charge of passing fictitious checks in Yolo county, P. R. Graham was offered a bed with the other convicts in the quarters which used to house the women prisoners. Here 35 weary old-timers are allowed to spend their remaining days in peace and quiet, listening to the radio, smoking and playing dominoes.

"Not for me. I'm not done by a long shot yet," the gray-haired arrival announced and requested of John H. Carpenter, captain of the yard, that he be allowed to go to work "same as anyone else."

He was permitted to choose which of the prison industries he would engage in and selected the furniture factory. For months he has labored industriously learning the rudiments of the trade, and he is to be allowed to design and make his own pieces.

The seventy-nine-year-old clerk has no previous prison record known to San Quentin authorities.

Return of Arctic Forest Predicted After Survey

Tacoma, Wash.—Logging in the shadow of the North pole is only a matter of time. Tree growth toward the north is not limited by climatic conditions, declares Robert Marshall of the United States forestry service, but by the fact that such vegetation has not recovered the ground lost when it was swept away during the glacial period.

It will be a slow process, but tree growth is being established again on the Arctic slope, assert the scientists. With Al Retslaf, forestry expert, Marshall passed the last summer in the Koyukuk and Kobuk river region of northwest Alaska, studying the stunted tree growth. They passed hours on their hands and knees peering at the tiny struggling specimens of spruce, hemlock and balsam. Both concluded trees are advancing northward and will some day re-cover the barrens as in preglacial eras.

Alaskan Tribe Speaks Same Tongue as Navajos

Anchorage, Alaska.—Dwelling 3,000 miles apart, a small tribe of Tanana Indians on a tributary of the Yukon speaks the same language as the Navajos, native of New Mexico and Arizona.

How the two distant tribes presumably possess language and history in common is of interest to anthropologists. Mr. and Mrs. Robert McKennan have departed for the Upper Tanana to attach themselves to the Tananas and discover their traditional and actual history.

The Tananas hunt, fish and trap. They make no connections with other Indians or Eskimos, and except for exchanging furs for supplies have little to do with white men. One or two have attended a government school and from these the scientist hopes to find an interpreter.

Stowaway Wants to Get Back to His Laundry

Havana.—Being a stowaway in these days of world travel has become an ordinary affair, but to become a stowaway against one's will—that's news!

Rafael Casado, Key West laundryman for the P. & O. liners' sailors, took the wash to the steamer recently as usual and asked for his money. While waiting for it, however, the steamer cast off and Casado found himself going to sea, hence he did.

Upon arrival of the steamer Governor Cobb in Havana, Cuban authorities asked questions, and as a result of their interview the journeying laundryman was sent to Tiscornia, the immigration station, to await the return of the P. & O. boat to Key West and the laundry.

STUDIES VOLCANOES' THROATS FROM AIR

Scientist Uses Planes to Make Observations.

Washington.—The use of an airplane to permit a scientific observer to look down the "sore throats" of active volcanoes, is one of the latest developments of aviation.

On the Island of Hawaii, where the eruptions are feared, three navy seaplanes have been used for volcano inspection trips. Aboard one plane was the veteran volcano observer, Dr. Thomas A. Jaggar.

No monarch or President receives more careful attention than that given by Doctor Jaggar to the volcanoes of the Hawaiian Islands. While his fame rests largely on his practice in these American possessions, Doctor Jaggar is subject to call as consultant in the Aleutian islands, Japan and other volcano centers.

His house on the lip of Kilauea gives the scientist the right to be considered a "bedside volcano observer" in practically constant attendance on his most chronic case. His instruments, especially his seismographs, have their fingers on the pulse of the volcanoes at all times.

As some eruptions have arisen to fever heat earthquakes became stronger and more frequent. The numerous earthquakes that have shaken Hawaii recently aroused fears of impending eruption.

Studied Mount Pavlof Area.

During the summer of 1928 Doctor Jaggar led a National Geographic society expedition to the little-known Mount Pavlof volcano area in the Aleutian Islands, one of the most active volcanic regions in the world today.

On the expedition to the Pavlof area Doctor Jaggar found evidence of a four-and-a-quarter-year cycle of activity among the Aleutian cones.

"There are no more earthquakes or eruptions than there have been in the past," declared Doctor Jaggar, in a report to the National Geographic society. "But more and more people are living in congested areas where disturbances inflict disasters now, whereas they would have passed unnoticed not so many years ago."

Hence the need for skilled observers to keep tab on dangerous volcanoes.

How one eruption prediction saved thousands of lives and much property, was reported by Doctor Jaggar, in a communication to the National Geographic society, on the eruption of Sakurajima, Japan's greatest volcanic convulsion within historic times. The Hawaiian specialist was an eye-witness of the last phases of this eruption.

Although 20,000 people were living on the tiny island center of destruction a few days before the disaster, the volcano killed no one.

"The remarkable record of life-saving in the Sakurajima eruption," wrote Doctor Jaggar, "was partly due to good luck, but also to the instinct of the people, to the wisdom of the government, and to scientific societies."

Hopes to Learn More.

To determine whether earthquakes, more common in the United States than volcanoes (Lassen, in California, the only active cone), have a close relation to volcanoes, has been one object of Doctor Jaggar's study.

"It is only a question of time," Doctor Jaggar continued, "and of additional observations at several volcanoes, for science to learn more about earthquake portents than anyone dreamed of 50 years ago.

"The late honored Professor Omori was a martyr to science in the Tokyo earthquake. He devoted all the later years of his life to studying the relation of earthquakes to active volcanoes in Japan. He found that volcanoes were keys to the earthquake problem. He had almost reached the point of unlocking the mystery. All honor to his memory, and may science take up the key where he laid it down."

Detroit to Use Planes to Check Up on Taxes

Detroit, Mich.—In an effort to discover thousands of dollars' worth of taxable property which has escaped assessment in the past, a contract for an aerial photograph of the entire city of Boston was recently awarded to a flying service.

It was believed that the aerial photographs when pieced together will show up houses, garages and other real estate which has never been surveyed by the assessors.

Several weeks will be required for the work, and the air snapshots will be used in conjunction with news maps being completed by the assessing department.

Keen-Eyed Indian Caddies Are Popular

Banff, Alberta.—The keen eyes and passiveness of the Indian braves are proving the ideal combination for caddies at this Canadian resort. Members of the tribe of Stoney Indians, many of them old braves, are employed as caddies. Their ability to see balls driven for great distances has won them popularity among golfers. Caddy masters say they have not yet lost a ball. A topped shot never brings a snicker, nor do they ever speak unless spoken to. Chief Sitting Eagle, descendant of famous warriors, is one of the best liked of the Stoney Indian caddies.

Framing Arguments

The polite New York cousin of the street corner loiterer who encourages a good fist fight is a young chap of my acquaintance. He's fairly wealthy, in the social register and all that, and he loves to hear an argument. So, just for the fun of it, he spends his spare time in arranging debates between champions of causes. If a man attains some prominence in the press for his stand against prohibition, this young acquaintance of mine buzzes through town looking for some one equally prominent who has opposing views. When he finds the man he is looking for, he signs up both parties for a public debate, hires a large hall, inserts provocative advertisements in the newspapers, and makes quite a lot of money.

Mystery Man

On nearly every bright day a man may be seen playing on a tiny one-hole golf course on the roof of a building just off Fifth Avenue in the Forties. At least, he appears to be playing golf, for one can see a club swing above his shoulders sometimes. What makes him interesting is that his torso is nude. Whether he wears any clothing at all is a complete mystery, for the roof is so situated that only the upper third of his body is visible, even from adjoining roofs. No one in the neighborhood knows who he is.

I. O. U.

A few months ago one of the best known theatrical press agents got into a crap game—his first and his last. He lost $125 in cash. The game continued, and before he quit he had given an I. O. U. for $200 to a fairly wealthy man. Subsequently the holder of the note said to the press agent:

"I don't need the money, so, if you like, you can pay me back by giving me theater tickets."

Consequently, the press agent was at the beck and call of his creditor until just a few days ago. The man would telephone the unfortunate crapshooter and demand tickets to the latest success. He was given in the neighborhood of $400 worth of tickets.

The other day he visited the press agent's offices, and asked for a pair of seats to the latest hit. The press agent figured that he had more than paid his debt, so he said:

"I can't get them."

"All right," said his so-called friend, "I hold your I. O. U. and I'm going to sue you for $200."

If he sues, he'll collect, for the press agent is afraid to testify concerning the manner in which he really paid off the debt.

A Relief

The story is told about a government survey that was made to determine whether a woman's farm lay in New York state or just across the border in Canada. It was not a question of whether the farm should be alcoholically dry or supervisedly wet. The two governments wanted to determine which should get the woman's taxes.

The surveyors concluded that the farm was on United States territory.

"I'm so glad," said the owner. "I've always been told that the winters in Canada are terrible."

Pigmy Amid Giants

Cass Gilbert, the man who conceived the Woolworth building, is designing a pigmy building of four stories that will be built within a block of his world-famous tower. It is to be the home of the New York County Lawyers' association, and will be built just west of Broadway on Vesey street. It will be 86 feet tall, just this side of nothing to the Woolworth tower's 796 feet.

Speaking of buildings, I am told that the life expectancy of homes is much greater than that of skyscrapers, despite the use of imperishable steel in the latter. The trouble is, apparently, that office buildings, theaters, etc., must be up-to-the-minute, so they become obsolete very quickly. Homes may easily be remodeled to accommodate the latest gadgets, so they are torn down much less frequently.

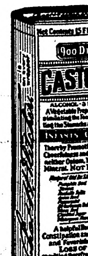
Doctor Jokes as Hand Is Cut Off

Jersey City, N. J.—Calmly watching while his left hand was amputated at the wrist, Dr. Edward Mulvahy bowed to the malignant influence of the X-ray which he has fought for fifteen years.

He even jested while Dr. Earl J. Halligan cut off the hand, using only a local anesthetic. He chatted about the new artificial hand he intended to use, saying:

"I'll be glad to get rid of this old thing and strap on a fine new hand. With the aid of a good artificial one, by next week I'll be back at my experiments."

Doctor Mulvahy is prominent in New York and Jersey City, specializing in cancer. His hand became infected from X-ray experiments.



If Baby has COLIC

A cry in the night may be the first warning that Baby has colic. No cause for alarm if Castoria is handy! This pure vegetable preparation brings quick comfort, and can never do the slightest harm. Always keep a bottle in the house. It is the safe and sensible thing when children are ailing. Whether it's the stomach, or the little bowels; colic or constipation; or diarrhea. When tiny tongues are coated, or the breath is bad. Whenever there's need of gentle regulation. Children love the taste of Castoria, and its mildness makes it suitable for the tiniest infant, and for frequent use.

And a more liberal dose of Castoria is always better for growing children than some needlessly strong medicine meant only for adult use. Genuine Castoria always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Prescribed by doctors!

Goes to Hospital to Learn Beauty Aid

"THE first time I heard of it," writes Mrs. E. Whitney of 35 Parker Street, Bangor, Maine, "was when I was at the Hospital. I was very nervous and run down and after my baby daughter was born the doctor began giving me something. In about ten days I felt like a new person. Before then, I was miserable. My skin was in very bad condition and I could not understand what made it clear up so quickly.

"Before I left I asked the House Doctor what kind of medicine it was that cleared up my skin and made me feel so much better. He said 'My dear girl, didn't you ever hear of Nujol? Hospitals aren't the only place where you can get it! You can buy it most everywhere!'

"I have been using Nujol ever since, and I think it is wonderful."

That's the great thing about Nujol. Not a medicine, contains no drugs, can't possibly hurt you, forms no habit—and if you are like most other people its simple natural way of bodily lubrication will do wonders for you, too.

You see, all of us have an excess of body poisons that make our skins sallow, only able to work at half or quarter our real ability. When Nujol absorbs these poisons and carries them off easily, normally, naturally, we just feel like a million dollars.

Try Nujol for two weeks, and see what happens. It costs only as much as a ticket to a good movie, and it will mean so much to you. In sealed packages at any drug store. Start feeling fine, this very day!

Doctor laughed when asked "What cleared my skin?"

Crowd to Lincoln Memorial

Since June 1, when the Lincoln memorial, in Washington, was first kept open at night, records kept by the United States park police show it to be the most attractive to sightseers. Between the hours of 4:30 and 9:30 p. m., guards reported the daily average number of visitors exceeded 800, and the record high was reached August 17 when 1,200 viewed the impressive statue of Abraham Lincoln.

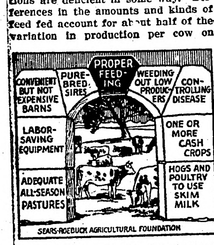
Proper Feeding Is a Keystone of Profitable Dairy Farming

Good feeding is a keystone of profitable dairy farming, the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation states. But it must be supported by firm foundations, such as good breeding, control of disease, development of other sources of income, and an effective cropping system.

Cows rightly fed give 50 to 100 per cent more milk than when their rations are deficient in some way. Differences in the amounts and kinds of feed fed account for about half of the variation in production per cow on different farms. Good rations increase the cost of feed, but increase net income 40 to 80 per cent.



PROPER FEEDING
CONVENIENT BUT NOT EXPENSIVE BARNS
PURE-BRED SIRES
WEEDING OUT LOW PRODUCERS
CONTROLLING DISEASE
LABOR-SAVING EQUIPMENT
ONE OR MORE CASH CROPS
ADEQUATE ALL-SEASON PASTURES
HOGS AND POULTRY TO USE SKIM MILK
SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

Scanty grain rations usually are not really economical. Grain should be fed according to production, about 2½ pounds being given daily for each gallon of milk produced. Moderate grain rations for cows on pasture often increase net returns 5 to 75 per cent.

Lack of protein is a prevalent fault of dairy rations, the Foundation continues. It is deficient in most home grown feeds and is costly to buy. Milk contains much protein. The cow can not alter its composition according to the feed received and cuts down production when the protein supplied is inadequate. Giving enough protein often will increase production 20 to 40 per cent.

YOUTH--AND THE NEW LEADERSHIP

By CRAIG B. HAZLEWOOD
President American Bankers Association

Craig B. Hazlewood

LEADERSHIP is a picturesque word. With it, one pictures Hannibal fighting his way through the passes of the Alps—Napoleon in his campaigns—or Washington holding together his half-frozen army by the sheer magnetism of his character at Valley Forge. But I visualize something that holds a more astounding spectacle in many respects than any of these. It is the onrush of our business life. Our economic progress plunges ahead at a rate unheard of in the history of the nations of the world and every industrial and financial leader is daily brought face to face with new and perplexing problems requiring the highest courage and intelligence for their solution.

Ninety billions a year, they tell us, this country is now producing in new wealth. The rate of increase is even more staggering than the amount. It is difficult to say where it may lead us in even ten or fifteen years.

We are moving exceptionally fast. Our economic and industrial structure is placing before us problems of greater and greater magnitude. Few men can see far ahead. Few are in complete control, for this is a changing world, as even the most inexperienced business man will readily testify. Our methods of adjusting ourselves rapidly to economic changes and of cooperating are far from perfect.

What an opportunity the leadership of five, ten or fifteen years from now presents! What an adventure it will be! What responsibilities it will lay upon the broadest shoulders that may be found! This is the challenge to leadership as I see it. In the hands of the young men must rest the responsibility for this leadership.

Boys Who Reached the Pinnacles

Business is full of the romance of youngsters whose chief characteristic was working hard and keeping at it. There was a green farmer boy who decided he would rather stand behind a counter than follow a plow. He seemed so obviously lacking in sales ability that for a time no merchant would hire him. He failed in his first position, and in his second his salary was reduced. He even agreed that he was a misfit—but he stuck. Out of his first five stores, I believe, three failed. But he persisted and worked hard. And that boy, Frank W. Woolworth, became the greatest retail merchant in the world with a store in every city of eight thousand or more population in this country.

There was another lad who clerked in a grocery store sixteen hours a day and studied mathematics in his odd moments. He became interested in the doings of the steel plant whose employees traded at this store. He began to study steel and sought a position in the plant. He carried a surveyor's chain and drove stakes. At night he studied mathematics and engineering. He did not despair. He could not be diverted. He kept the pressure on for seven years. And that boy, Charles Schwab, mastered the iron industry and became one of the country's great industrial leaders.

There was a lad who sold papers on a train. When he grew up, several million men and a score of billions of dollars of capital were given profitable employment through his inventions. Even in middle life, Thomas Edison continued to work twenty hours a day, if necessary to achieve his purpose.

Leadership is not play. Leadership offers countless positions of varying opportunity, of which the highest pinnacles will mean almost unbearable responsibility in the new era. There will be men with the fire and iron to qualify even for these places. Such men must have had the very finest preparation and the most grueling tests. Their reward will be the attainment of these highest pinnacles of achievement, and the rendering of an immeasurable service to their times.

STORY FROM THE START

Capt. Lion Fellowes' American ship is sunk by the British off Portugal in the War of 1812. Fellowes' life is saved by Cara Inglepin, daughter of the owner of the American ship, True Bounty. Capt. Chater, in trade with the enemy. Because of love for Cara he consents to sail as mate. The True Bounty is stopped by the British frigate, Badger, Capt. Collishawe. Despite his American citizenship, Fellowes is taken aboard the Badger a "pressed" man. He scents treachery and fosters a hatred for Collishawe, Cara and Chater. Collishawe tells him Cara had nothing to do with his abduction. He refuses to believe. Off New York Fellowes learns a landing party is going ashore.

—11—

Tom spat disgustedly.

"Oh, I'll go," he agreed. "Flogged or drowned, it's all one."

• • • • • • • •

Despite himself, Fellowes was unable to keep his eyes off Collishawe, methodically concerned with preparations for the longboat's expedition. An undercurrent of excitement pervaded the crew. Each of the men selected to go was surrounded by a knot of friends, and Bob Clinch was trailed along the deck by sailors, who hoped to be chosen at the last moment. Mr. Curry and the other officers were hurrying about their various duties; the gunner was inspecting pistol-flints, and packing bags of grape-shot for the light three-pounder which squatted in the longboat's bow. Only Collishawe remained phlegmatic and undisturbed.

Watching Collishawe, fury slowly welled in Fellowes' heart. He pondered the thoughts which occupied Collishawe, tried to plumb the secrets concealed behind the Englishman's hawk-nosed face.

Battle lanthorns shed gouts of yellow radiance on the deck, and the longboat's company followed their captain down the jacob's ladder, Clinch ticking them off at the gangway. Oars rattled in the thole-pins. "That you, Clinch? Take the tiller. Give way, men."

Fellowes stole for'ard. Men were dowsing the extra lights. A pair of ship's boys were sparring by the main-hatch, egged on by a circle of sailors. The confusion of the longboat's departure hadn't quite died down.

"Cuffee?" whispered Fellowes.

"Yah, mars'r." The negro rose from the windlass. "Tom been under bowsprit heel."

"Good! We must go quickly."

They slipped over the catheads into the water that rippled purringly about the bow. Tom muffled a groan.

"Drown me, ye will," he murmured dismally.

"Cuffee no let yo' drown," returned the negro, placing one of Tom's hands on his shoulder. "Hol' on dar."

And he vanished in the darkness with the celerity of a fish, towing Tom's floundering bulk as easily as though his companion was a lump of cork. Fellowes pursued at a more moderate pace. He couldn't see twenty feet beyond his nose; the Badger was a vague huddle of spars, in a few strokes more became invisible. He traced Cuffee's progress by Tom's puffings and snortings. It was easy, he told himself, driving ahead, hand over hand, legs kicking rhythmically. Ah, but not so easy, he discovered soon, as the little waves kept slapping at his face, and his limbs grew heavier and heavier.

The venture assumed the aspect of a nightmare. He was being crushed between black water and darkness, the air squeezed from his laboring lungs, a deadly pressure numbing his heart. Time ceased to have meaning. Space was illimitable. He was conscious simply of splashing wearily, of intervals when he was tempted to subside under the next wave, of recurring spells of battle. He came to himself at last, treading water feebly, Cuffee pummeling his face and chest, a dull roaring in his ears.

"Mars'r Fellowe'," pleaded the negro. "Mars'r Fellowe'! We go fo' surf. Yo' hear? Dat him surf."

Fellowes acceded drunkenly.

"Where's Tom?"

Cuffee indicated a dripping burden lashed to his belt by the remnants of his shirt.

"Tom plenty wet, mebbe him drown'. But we go fo' surf—quick! Yo' hol' Cuffee tight. Cuffee pull yo' two like him whale pull boat. Yo' see!"

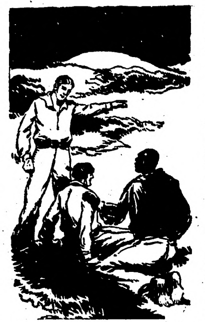
Fellowes was too tired to argue longer. He suffered his fingers to be hooked into the negro's belt, and floated supine, marveling at the undiminished vigor with which Cuffee slashed into the rollers. After a few strokes he was stung to renewed effort, himself, paddling dog-fashion with one arm and kicking his feet, albeit sluggishly. In the darkness they were blind, steering by sound rather than eyesight, and both were surprised when their feet touched bottom. Cuffee, with a grunt of satisfaction, tossed Tom over one shoulder and grasped Fellowes by the arm, striding out against the suck of the undertow as easily as though he walked a level deck. And while Fellowes collapsed on the dry sand, panting and muscle-cramped, Cuffee set to work on Tom, and had him choking and coughing by the time the Long Islander was sitting up. An irate person, Tom—"Fine pair o' messmates!" "'Tain't yer fault I wasn't drowned." "'Never be the same man, I won't!" "Oughter be, keelhauled, ye had!"

"Just the same, you're a free man tonight," exclaimed Fellowes with his first whole breath. "Free of 'Crimpin'' Collishawe. An American again! We're as good as home, Tom. This is my land—the Point o' Woods, at the west end of the Island. My herders' shack is on the far side of the forest, behind the dunes."

Fellowes led the three at a stiff-legged trot over the dunes, until they emerged upon the island's opposite shore. Close at hand a cordial glow poured from the open door of a lightly built structure, together with the pleasant odor of bacon and a singsong hum of voices.

Fellowes approached the door, his companions crowding his heels.

"—Jes as I'm atellin' ye, Joe," one of the voices was saying. "He come back nex' night, and he looked like he'd seed a ghost. Ses he: 'Twas that air slaver cap'n—over to P'int o' Woods. Ha'nted me, he did. All night. Come 'n' wailed into my ear, "Whar's my head?" he'd holler. "Whar's my—"'"



"We're as Good as Home, Tom."

"Lord!" moaned another voice. "Here he be, head 'n' all!"

Fellowes, peering in the doorway, saw two frightened figures cowering in a corner of the hut, but no sign of a "ha'nt" until he happened to glance sideways. Then he chuckled. Cuffee, curious as to these strangers, had stuck his head in a convenient window. The negro's scarred features, atop of his glistening naked torso were sufficient to affright any yokels already bent on frightening themselves.

"Haven't you seen a black man before?" called Fellowes, stepping inside. "Paris Eaches! And Joe Doak. Well, well, boys—"

"Another ha'nt," gasped Doak. "Oh, Squire Fellowes, be kind like ye used to, and go back to the grave, and leave us poor fellows be."

Fellowes laughed outright.

"You'd better try the zanies, Tom," he invited. "Here, Paris, Joe! Ever see anyone more like a live sailor?"

The pair were fascinated by Tom's gargoyle visage and grotesque figure.

"Be—be—ye really Squire Fellowes?" quavered Eaches.

"Feel my hand," Fellowes bade him.

"Cuss me, but that's flesh-'n'-blood," he confessed. "But how 'n tim'd ye git here, squire? We heard tell ye was pressed by Collishawe."

"'Tis a long story," Fellowes answered grimly. "Is Saul Chater in Babylon?"

"Ever sence he come home from Portygal," Eaches replied, a trifle shamefaced. "But who ye got with ye, squire?"

"Two men who escaped with me off the Badger. Collishawe and a landing party are bound for Babylon tonight. I want to take them. Have you a boat here?"

Primitive Sea Cookery

Hutchinson's Treatise, published in 1791, tells of the cooking arrangements on the vessels at that time. It seems that a slab of metal was placed on the deck and a cauldron of water suspended by a tripod placed over it. A fire was made, either of coal or wood, depending upon the availability of either, and the salt pork was boiled almost constantly, insuring hot food for the sailors at practically any hour. Hutchinson also speaks of taking the drinking water, adding a few tea leaves, and placing this in a bottle which he corked tightly and allowed to boil within the cauldron, so that he could have a hot cup of tea, which is more refreshing than plain water, thus conserving his water supply, quenching his thirst, adding food value that allayed his hunger for the salt pork, and thus saving himself the fearful disease of scurvy.

Ancient Residence

The oldest inhabited residence in Scotland is said to be Dunvegan castle, in the Isle of Skye, dating back to the Ninth century.

Flaming Worker Leaps in Barrel

Tuxedo, Md.—Transferred into a human pillar of fire when a bucket of gasoline exploded, William H. Queen, colored, twenty, of this place, saved his own life by leaping into a barrel of water. He was seriously burned.

Queen was cleaning an automobile motor with a wire brush and a bucket of gasoline in a lumber yard at Nineteenth street and Benning road northeast. The brush, scraping the metal, sent forth sparks, which ignited the gasoline.

The youth's clothing immediately went up in flames, but Queen had the presence of mind to leap into a barrel of water nearby. Queen was taken to Casualty hospital and treated by Dr. J. Rogers Young for serious burns about the arms, back and body. A small fire developed and was confined to lumber.

FINDING OF BONES SOLVES MYSTERY

Case Had Puzzled Police for Seven Years.

Winnipeg, Man.—With the discovery of a man's skeleton at Paradise Hill, near Turtleford, Sask., by a farmer's wife, a seven-year-old murder mystery has been solved and the disappearance of the alleged slayer cleared up by the Northwest Mounted police.

A jury brought in a verdict that the bones were those of Charles Taylor, for whom a nation-wide search was carried on in the fall of 1922 following the murder of Taylor's cousin, Charles Currie, bachelor homesteader of Paradise Hill. Currie was found dead outside his shack with two shotgun wounds in his body.

The coroner's jury further decided that Taylor, who disappeared immediately after the murder, had met his death by his own hand.

Police authorities in Canada and the United States searched for Taylor and the mystery might never have been solved but for the discovery of the skeleton by Mrs. Frank Klein, who came upon it while picking berries 200 yards from her home. She discovered the skull and notified Royal Canadian Northwest Mounted police. Constable Streeton found the complete skeleton, a watch, a ruby set gold ring, some coins, fragments of clothing, and a large butcher knife.

The clothing, the watch, and ring were definitely identified as Taylor's. At the inquest Mrs. John Dahl of Paradise Hill said she had known Taylor when he worked for her husband. She added that the man had tried to commit suicide and that he had begged her husband to kill him.

"Murder" Fails as Way of Getting Divorce

Berlin.—Herr Landwehr and his wife found a brief experience of marital felicity more than sufficient. But their effort to regain freedom has ended disastrously.

The couple live at Premnitz, in the province of Brandenburg. The husband is only twenty-three and the wife thirty-three. Whether this disparity of years has had anything to do with the mutual dislike that followed their marriage is not disclosed.

On one point only could they agree—that separation was essential. As neither could accuse the other of actual cruelty or infidelity, and as neither had any desire to create the necessary evidence, they languished chained together in despair.

Then one day smoke was seen issuing from their bedroom window. Neighbors broke in, to find the bed ablaze—and Herr Landwehr sleeping peacefully upon it. The apparently unpenitent wife freely acknowledged that she had sprinkled benzine on it and then set it on fire, and was arrested for the attempted murder of her husband.

Now, however, she has been released and the couple are condemned again to live together. For investigation of the crime revealed that the "murder" was planned with the assistance of the husband, it being hoped in this way to obtain sufficient evidence for divorce proceedings.

New Englander, 43, Arrested 43 Times

Worcester, Mass.—George Brannigan, forty-three, saw his name written for the forty-third time in the last eighteen years in a police blotter when he was booked for attempted larceny. Brannigan was charged with having tried to take money from a register in a Front street department store. Detective Lieut. Otis H. Pineo was in the store at the time and arrested Brannigan.

Man Carries Stone in Forehead for 25 Years

Aggarp, Sweden.—Unwittingly, Hans Nilsson of this place carried a stone in his head for 25 years.

That was disclosed recently when an old scar on his head began to bleed and out came a small finely polished pebble. Nilsson now remembers that in his teens he fell and received a deep cut on his forehead. He thinks the stone lodged in the wound then.

Neal's Mother Has Right Idea

Within a few months there will be no more feverish, bilious, headachy, constipated, pale and puny children. That prophecy would surely come true if every mother could see for herself how quickly, easily, and harmlessly the bowels of babies and children are cleansed, regulated, given tone and strength by a product which has proved its merit and reliability to do what is claimed for it to millions of mothers in over fifty years of steadily increasing use.

As mothers find out from using it how children respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup by growing stronger, sturdier and more active daily they simply have to tell other mothers about it. That's one of the reasons for its overwhelming sales of over four million bottles a year.

A Western mother, Mrs. Neal M. Todd, 1701 West 27th St., Oklahoma City, Okla., says: "When my son, Neal, was three years old he began having constipation. I decided to give him California Fig Syrup and in a few days he was all right and looked fine again. This pleased me so much that I have used Fig Syrup ever since for all his colds or little upset spells. It always stops his trouble quick, strengthens him, makes him eat."

Always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name and see that the carton bears the word "California." Then you'll get the genuine.

High Egg Production

What is believed to be the highest egg production record ever established in the North Central states has just been announced by A. M. Pilkey, poultryman at the Northwest Experiment Station, Crookston. A white Leghorn hen in the station flock finished her laying year with a record of 321 eggs in 365 days.

This year's record hen is a daughter of a 318 egg sire and a 250 egg dam. She is free from standard disqualifications and is of excellent type, possessing a long, wide, deeg body with an average body weight of 3.94 lbs. She produces an egg weighing over two ounces.

Carnival!—Do not miss an incident like this—!

Perhaps you have heard about the Carnival, but not yet have you seen it, and since seeing is believing, come and see the One-Act Play, "Not a Man in the House" at Holt on the eve of Nov. 22.

Come in any mood; if you are curious, well yes, they'll show you were love is found. If your heart is aching for a fight,—remember there is a boxing match. If you are hungry, the Russian Cavern is the place for you.

We don't know how our imported gypsies will get along with the Russians, but after you have partaken of a Russian dish, the gypsies can tell your fortune.

Enter the Frenchie's Beauty Parlor; you're sure to come out all dolled up like a Christmas tree. At last we have solved the great problem! The Fat Folk may learn how to grow thin quickly.

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Seventh and Eighth graders have moved downstairs to the 'Northwest' room until after the carnival. The reporter was told, very confidentially, that the seats in the "northwest" room are very uncomfortable.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The fifth grade language class is now planning a Thanksgiving program where they plan to entertain the sixth graders.

~~The Industrial Art club~~ is now making covers for their news outlines.

Third and Fourth Grades

The third and fourth grade Reading club will meet on Thursday afternoon.

The third and fourth graders have been studying about the Pilgrims and are now making little booklets about them. They also have decorated the sand table in the Pilgrim fashion, and have many other decorations on the walls also pertaining to the Pilgrims.

First and Second Grades

The first graders have made carpets, using the complimentary, colors blue and orange.

The second grade pupils have been making Thanksgiving posters.

The second graders have made friezes about the making of white bread.

A Gas Holder Extraordinary

THE unbelievably large and complicated problem of supplying satisfactory and dependable public service in densely populated communities is well exemplified in a gas holder which was placed in service in Chicago sometime ago, as a part of the storing and distributing system for furnishing gas for lighting and heating in that great city.

This colossal reservoir is about 860 feet in circumference and 250 feet high. Some 5,000 tons of steel went into its construction—the plates being two inches thick. Its bottom rests on an enclosing cushion which contains some 16,000,000 gallons of water. It has a storage capacity of about 10,000,000 cubic feet of gas and the cost of construction was about $1,000,000.

This holder is a twin. Both tanks are connected with an adjacent pumping station by a pipe which is 15¾ feet in circumference. Both were so placed and built as to feed their contents into a giant distributing main—the backbone of the city's gas distributing system—which is 12½ feet in circumference and 22 miles in length. It supplies lateral and smaller mains, which in turn lead into individual factories.

When the pumping station and both tanks are working full tilt, this plant is capable of pushing gas into the great main at a rate of 120,000,000 cubic feet every hour of the day and night, which is said to be more gas than is used in Chicago, except during unusual days when, for some reason or other, the demand is above normal.

New Farmer to Locate Near Holt in the Spring

A. C. Kvennes reports that he has sold a 100-acre farm ½ mile north and 2 miles west of Holt to William T. Fluke of Grand Forks. Mr. Fluke will move onto the farm early in the Spring and make extensive improvements on the place. Mr. Fluke comes here highly recommended and we are glad to welcome him and his family into our community.

COME EARLY

Turkeys! Ducks! Geese!

We want 150,000 pounds of dressed turkeys, geese, and ducks for the Christmas market. We will start buying on December 3d and continue until December 14th, so you have about two weeks of heavy feeding to get your turkeys in the best possible shape for the Christmas market. No doubt the roads will be in good shape at that time so you can drive to Thief River Falls and sell your turkeys, geese, and ducks on a delivered basis and receive every cent there is in it because the delivered prices are always higher than the prices paid at outside points. Come in and see us when ready to sell. We will give you prompt service and best returns.

LESSON 80

PRODUCTION: When corn is cured in the shock to be fed in the bundle, or if the stover is to be fed after the corn is husked out, it is important to shock the corn up while it is still green and put in large shocks. Bind the shock close to the top to shed rain and snow. Corn stalks that have nice green leaves when fed are pretty good feed. If weather beaten and bleached out, most of the feed value is lost.

MANUFACTURING: The cost of manufacturing butter thru the co-operative creamery system is around three cents per pound on an average. The cost of manufacturing butter thru the cream station centralized system is around 7 cents per pound. These costs were found by the United States Government in its study to determine a proper tariff on butter. Co-operative creameries always pay best.

MARKETING: When a brand or name is once established for a high quality product, like Land O' Lakes butter, it is extremely important to have butter sold under that brand just as good as it is represented to be. The Land O' Lakes butter is government inspected.

FAMILY DOCTOR LEARNED THIS ABOUT CONSTIPATION

Dr Caldwell loved people. His years of practice convinced him many were ruining their health by careless selection of laxatives. He determined to write a harmless prescription which would get at the cause of constipation, and correct it.

Today, the prescription he wrote in 1885 is the world's most popular laxative! He prescribed a mixture of herbs and other pure ingredients now known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, in thousands of cases where bad breath, coated tongue, gas, headaches, biliousness and lack of appetite or energy showed the bowels of men, women and children were sluggish. It proved successful in even the most obstinate cases; old folks liked it for it never gripes; children liked its pleasant taste. All drugstores today have Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in bottles.

Encourage French Births

The French firm of Michelin began some years ago to make family allowances among its employees, based on the size of the family. The birth of a child is a positive economic advantage. As a result it is reported that the birth rate in the Michelin community is twice that of France as a whole. Living conditions are good; therefore, the rate of infant mortality is low.

STORY FROM THE START

Capt. Lion Fellowes' American ship is sunk by the British off Portugal in the War of 1812. Fellowes' life is saved by Cara Inglepin, daughter of the owner of the American ship, True Bounty, Capt. Chater, in trade with the enemy. Because of love for Cara he consents to sail as mate. The True Bounty is stopped by the British frigate, Badger, Capt. Collishawe. Despite his American citizenship, Fellowes is taken aboard the Badger a "pressed" man. He scents treachery and fosters a hatred for Collishawe, Cara and Chater. Collishawe tells him Cara had nothing to do with his abduction. He refuses to believe. Off New York Fellowes learns a landing party is going ashore. He escapes.

—12—

"My leetle ducker," responded Doak "She's a durned handy craft, if I do say so."

"Get her ready. We must scud for it. Hurry! Every minute counts."

He set an example by seizing a roll of blankets; Cuffee helped Eaches collect the provisions; Doak slipped out with an apologetic: "Git the anchor up. Ye'll have to wade to her," and Tom brought up the rear.

The ducker was an almost flat-bottomed craft, an elongated triangle in shape, with a single leg-o'-mutton sail, capable of astonishing speed before the wind. Just the feel of her slimy floorboards under the bare feet stimulated Fellowes' self-respect. She was a boat, and he was captain aboard her; and the realization helped him to slough off the last trace of the subordination the Badger's iron discipline had ground into his soul. His voice crackled with the crisp authority of the quarterdeck. "Get that sail up, Paris! Joe, you take the tiller Cuffee and Tom, lie up in the bow."

"We'll make a spry run with this wind," Joe Doak announced as the sail filled. "Wouldn't be s'prised if we done it in two hours to Sampawams creek—land ye slick as a whistle at the Manor dock, squire."

"No, we'll have to run into East creek," replied Fellowes. "The Britishers will be at Saul Chater's farm and I don't hanker to go near them, unarmed. How are we going to catch Collishawe's party? Have you any militia?"

"For sartain," Joe spoke up proudly. "Thar's the Fencibles."

"Who's in it?"

"All o' us—Nimrod Sopher's cap'n."

Fellowes deliberated for some minutes.

"I'll tell you what," he decided finally. "As soon as we land, Paris had better go wake up Sopher. The rest of us—I suppose the Widow Rhodes still has the Pig and Farmer at the crossroads? 'Tis a convenient place to rally at. Joe, you can be waking other lads in the village. I think I'll get some sleep while I can." He had rolled himself in a blanket under the herders' feet when a sudden thought occurred to him. "Have you heard if Chater has visitors at the farm?" he asked, sitting up.

"By heck, I'd plumb forgot," exclaimed Eaches. "Couple o' women, squire, and the feller to Noo Yawk owns Chater's ship."

Fellowes laughed harshly.

"I expected they'd be there. Wake me when you make in for the East creek."

He was asleep almost as soon as his head touched the floorboards. Everything was happening as he had intended. Success he no longer doubted.

CHAPTER VI

At the General Armstrong

Doak's hand on his ankle awakened Fellowes with all his senses alert. No light showed against the curtain of the night, no noise came from the shore.

"Seems as though the Britishers wore mortal quiet," whispered Eaches.

"They don't want to be seen here," returned Fellowes. "Look sharp, Joe! There's a landing."

"'Twill do," acknowledged Doak, and slid the ducker inshore beside a rickety wharf.

Their feet clattered on loose boards, then pattered soundlessly on the earthen roadway parelleling the creek.

"Waall, I turn off here for Sopher's," Eaches announced. "I'll knock at every door I pass. Joe, ye better work west."

"I'll rattle up the hull durned village," promised Doak.

The others soon emerged upon a wider thoroughfare, sprinkled liberally with houses, the largest of which, directly opposite, was distinguished by a signboard, creaking gently in the breeze as it swung above the street. In the stable yard beside it stood a dilapidated stagecoach.

"Jeff Riggle must have been late driving out from Brooklyn," exclaimed Fellowes. "Mrs. Rhodes is still up. This is luck."

The lighted window was open, and a spatter of argument carried clearly to the fugitives. "I never heard such foolishness! Ye be'n adrinkin', Jeff. That's what ye be'n." "No, I ain't, M'randy. I seed him as nigh as ye be. A greaaat, tall man, dressed like a English sailor, and a naked cutlass in one hand and pistol in t'other And he stuck the pistol into my stummick, and says he: 'Is this the Babylon road?' and ses I: 'It be. And ses he: 'Git along it, mate. And I seed mebbe three-four more dressed like he wore."

"A likely tale," scoffed the woman

Fellowes snatched aside the window curtain.

"But true, Mrs. Rhodes," he said.

"Another one," squawked Riggle "And look to that evil naygur with him!"

But Mrs. Rhodes was unperturbed She rose from the table at which she had been sitting, six feet of gaunt, capable bone and muscle, and stalked to the window.

"Now see here, my man," she asserted sternly, "no nightwalker, be he English or American, ever had aught out o' M'randy Rhodes. I've a musket handy, and—God bless my soul, 'tis Squire Fellowes! Where in the name o' Providence did ye come from, sir, that Saul Chater tole us wore pressed off'n his ship. Dear, dear, dear! Come in, sir, come in. And who have ye thar? Land's sake, that nigger's as tall as some o Jeff Riggle's stories!"

"Huh, ye better not talk so brash, M'randy," growled Riggle. "I said I seed a Englishman, and it 'pears like I did."

"Ye saw that nigger o' squire's—"

"No, he saw a real English sailor, Mrs. Rhodes," interrupted Fellowes. "We've just escaped off the Badger Captain Collishawe's ship. She's lying outside the inlet, and Collishawe and twenty men should be at Saul Chater's this moment—they came ashore in the longboat."

"Saul Chater!" Mrs. Rhodes' lips clamped in a tight line. "Ye mean that skunk—"

"That's what we want to find out. I've sent Joe Doak and Paris Eaches to rouse Sopher and the Fencibles. We'll catch the English, and overhaul the farm." He hesitated, strangely reluctant to name Cara Inglepin, despising himself for his embarrassment "Chater has visitors—"

"Mr. Benjamin Inglepin from New York, 'n' his daughter," corroborated Mrs. Rhodes, her jaw still very square. "An arrant Federalist knave, by all accounts."

"Are the Inglepins the only strangers at Chater's?"

Jeff Riggle answered him.

"Right now, they be; but Saul's had a passel o' comp'ny sence he come home from Portygal. Mr. Inglepin's be'n out afore, and a dozen fellers off 'n' on—most o' 'em from New England, by the way they talked."

Fellowes experienced a rush of savage exultation "There's a mess of treason brewing on Sampawams creek, but we'll upset the pot," he said. "And that reminds me: Jeff, will you wake the Fencibles, who live on Main street?"

"I'll whip 'em out o' bed, if I got to," Riggle assented. "M'randy, I want to borrer that air musket o' yer's. I'm goin' to have a shot at the feller poked his pistol in my stummick."

"I'll b'lieve it when some one else tells me," she retorted as he departed. "One o' squire's men 'd do my powder 'n' lead more justice." She leveled an admonitory forefinger at Tom. "Now, that hairy, leettle feller, he looks like he'd be better at shootin' than backin'."

"Axin' yer pardon, ma'am," replied Tom, shuffling his brown feet, "but I'm no hand with a gun. If ye had a cutlass—or a boardin' ax—"

"Thar's a wood ax ye're welcome to. What about the nigger, squire? He don't look decent in that naked state. He's welcome to the gun, but I can't come by a shirt, let alone a coat, to cover him."

"Cuffee can get along as he is," rejoined Fellowes. "But he'll be grateful for a musket, Mrs. Rhodes."

The negro favored her with a view of his entire mouthful of filed teeth.

Disappearing Gulf

However slow and imperceptible the process may be, it is a well-established fact that the contour of the earth is changing constantly. Sea captains frequently note the presence of islands in midocean where no islands were ever seen before and just as often note is made of the total disappearance of points of land in the sea. The peninsula of Lower California, in the western part of Mexico, is, as most persons know, a long tongue of land following the coast line and forming the elongated Gulf of California. Recent observations show that the land of Lower California is raising and accordingly increasing in width and at the same time the gulf is narrowing so that in the course of time the land of the peninsula may be joined to the mainland of Mexico and water now separating them will disappear entirely.

Sure Sign of Old Age

A young man in Kansas City came downtown on a recent morning looking tired and worn. "No, I'm not sick," he said "I'm just getting old." Then he explained his thirteen-year-old daughter had had a party the night before. He was trying to help entertain as he always had done at such affairs since she was a baby. Pretty soon his wife beckoned him into the next room, "Paw," she said, "go on upstairs and let the young folks have a good time."—Capper's Weekly.

Eyes

EYES differ from ears for the ears are nothing but little receiving sets while the eyes receive and broadcast. The wink, the glance, and the goo-goo look are evidence of this.

Superstitious people are afraid of what they call the "Evil Eye." I believe that this tradition has a great place in history going way back to the Pyramids, but I can't see in it anything more than the familiar dirty look.

The angry person gives you that when he can't hand you anything else. If looks could kill—well, a dirty glance that one gets sometimes is meant to be mortal. For some glances are sharp and every one of us gets a cut now and then.

We live in the sound age, the era of the Big Noise. All sorts of sounds are played from records and the rest are broadcast from this station or that.

Then, people seem to be talking more than they used to so that when a man holds his tongue, like Coolidge or Hoover, he becomes famous for what he doesn't say.

But there are other ways of expressing one's self than those of voice or saxophone. One can give a meaningful look or glance an eye-ful. That's what makes the eye such an important organ for subtle broadcasting.

The silent drama, which has been broken up by the talkie movie, shows us how human beings can express themselves by means of glances, with a few gestures thrown in for good measure. The screen folks may overdo this eye-business somewhat, but still they show us what can be done by a glance.

With a woman, this eye-work is especially important. It isn't what one woman says about another that counts so much as the way she glances at her frock or hat. One dirty look and that other woman is killed socially.

The eye is important in the business of sizing people up. It isn't the story that they tell, or the way they sell themselves that counts. It's the way their eyes behave while they are speaking the piece.

We are supposed to be in an age when we should stop, look and listen. Goodness knows we have to stop at every corner to let traffic go by and we are bound to listen in on all sorts or sounds. But the main thing is to let the eye get its work and look.

A Blue Honeymoon

THE difference between a blue moon and a honeymoon is that the blue moon is seldom if ever seen in the heavens. Unfortunately the honeymoon of the cool variety does put in an appearance in a sky where Venus is supposed to rule.

Young people rush into marriage without much idea of what it's all about and with the idea of finding out. They expect the wedding bells to start a tune which will not die out until the morning stars cease singing together. They think that orange blossoms grow on century plants. Very often, before the honeymoon has sunk in the west, they are disillusioned. Then the fun begins.

The failure of the honeymoon may mean something more than "two to Duluth." It may mean a round trip ticket to Reno. The light of the marriage moon sinks into the gloom of divorce. That makes the blue honeymoon, all right.

My idea is that we should have a court of love. I know that they used to have such things in the day of queens and chivalry, but it wasn't a real court with judges, witnesses and all that. No, it was a poetical affair.

A couple can be married in a court and divorced in the same place, but there should be a love court somewhere between. I'm sure I don't know just how such a court would be made, but I do know that there's need for it.

Probably we expect too much of marriage, which itself is an old institution and which includes countless individuals who are as ill fitted for love as a cow is for roller skates. It doesn't make any difference how bad a reputation marriage has, there are always plenty of people who are willing to try it.

After a business has failed and people have learned that there isn't anything in the manufacture of left-handed monkeywrenches, you can't get anybody to order another one. But with marriage, the more the failure of the thing is advertised, the more anxious people are to give it a try.

That's why the honeymoon turns blue.

The best thing for a couple whose honeymoon is sinking is to talk it over and find out where they are at. If they have been disillusioned, they can be re-enchanted by reason. If they have lost out on love as romance, they may be able to make up with love as affection.

It isn't the moon's fault, for that gentle orb has nothing to do with love, lunacy, or the weather. The fault lies in the lover's heart. The moon knows enough to rise again after it has sunk. Why can't lovers love again after they have grown cold?

War and Monkeys

Eight-year-old Jean was being mentally measured by a professor in the education department of the State university. The college class was observing the method.

Apperception

The Herbartian theory of apperception states that mental activity consists in the clash of two factors that unite to form experience. Herbert conceives them to be, on the one hand, a new datum for experience and, on the other, the mass of organized experience through which the new datum obtains meaning and interest. The mental resultant of previous experience wherewith we meet and receive a new experience is termed apperceptive or apperception masses.

Girl Hobo Passes as Boy for Years

El Paso, Texas.—Resembling a boy so closely that she spent a night in the men's ward in the county jail here without anyone discovering she was a girl, Anitar De Valley, nineteen years old, who said she was the daughter of a New York broker, confessed to police she had traveled several years in her male disguise.

She said her aunt, Miss Antonia Yzanga, lived at 370 West One Hundred and Eighteenth street, New York city. Another aunt, according to the young woman, is Mrs. Jackson Butler of Los Angeles.

Charged with vagrancy, the girl told police she attended Castle Heights-on-the-Hudson and Ward Belmont, exclusive finishing schools, before starting on her hobo trips. She was married in Canaan, Mexico, in 1927, to a stunt flier, who later was killed in parachute jump, she told police.

HUSBAND HELD IN DEATH OF WIFE

Climax of Month's Secret Police Investigation.

Allentown, Pa.—Roy Van Wagenen, prominent in business circles and society here, has been arrested, charged with the murder of his wife, Mrs. Emily Van Wagenen, as the climax of a month's secret police investigation.

Mrs. Van Wagenen, her skull fractured and her body badly bruised, was found lying in a suburban street. She died after five days without making a statement. The original theory was that her death was caused by a hit-run motorist.

State Police Corporal Harpster and Detective Captain Nixon arrested Van Wagenen on the basis, it is said, of statements by three individuals described as witnesses to events which preceded Mrs. Van Wagenen's fatal injury.

Mr. and Mrs. Van Wagenen, on the night of the society woman's injury, had spent the evening at a country club. It was said at the time Van Wagenen left the country club before his wife, who announced her intention of returning home later with friends.

The witnesses uncovered by police are said to have been driving automobiles behind the Van Wagenen car and to have seen the lights on that machine go out suddenly and a woman hurled from the car.

L. E. Can Be Pushed So Far and No More

Chicago.—Stealing your employer's wife may be permissible in business, but when the love-pirating employee takes his boss' pajamas too, that is a violation of business ethics which merits nothing less than an old-fashioned ankle-to-jaw uppercut, according to L. E. Wheeler-Reid, Hollywood publisher.

Wheeler-Reid's code of business ethics was disclosed by himself in explaining to a police court his attack on Delbert S. Sponey, his erstwhile auditor.

The publisher's story was that he hired the auditor in Chicago and sent him to Pasadena to examine accounts there. But while Wheeler-Reid remained here he said Sponey persuaded Mrs. Wheeler-Reid, known in the films as Lillian Coolidge, to come to Chicago. Wheeler-Reid returned home, found his wife missing and came back to Chicago.

"When I found them in a hotel here," the publisher testified, "I simply had to pop him. It was not enough that he took my wife. He also took my Pasadena pajamas and bathrobe. And when I knocked on the door of his suite, he had the colossal nerve to greet me affably at 3:00 a. m. wearing my own nightclothes. That was too much, your honor, I just had to hit him."

Frightened by Spider, Girl Loses Her Voice

Syracuse, N. Y.—Intently studying in class, Vivian Proudlook, high school sophomore, was so frightened when a spider suddenly appeared on her neck that she could not scream. Brushing the spider away, she tried for several minutes to speak, then wrote a note to the teacher telling her she had lost her voice. Taken home, she was attended by a physician, whose diagnosis of the case as one of temporary suspension of the voice through fright proved correct, as the girl's voice returned after a few hours.

Gets License; Kills Self Before Fiancee

Buffalo, N. Y.—Climaxing an argument with his fiancee shortly after they had obtained a marriage license, Ambrose Collins, twenty-eight, an attorney, shot himself through the heart in the city courtroom here recently. The girl witnessed his suicide.

Kills Own Mother

Jamestown, Ky.—Ivan Cook, twenty years old, is being held in jail here, pending examination on a charge of having struck and kicked his mother, Mrs. Minerva Cook, forty-three years old, to death.

This Little Girl Got Well Quick

"Just after her third birthday, my little daughter, Connie, had a serious attack of intestinal flu," says Mrs. H. W. Turnage, 217 Cadwalder St., San Antonio, Texas. "It left her very weak and pale. Her bowels wouldn't act right, she had no appetite and nothing agreed with her.

"Our physician told us to give her some California Fig Syrup. It made her pick up right away, and now she is as robust and happy as any child in our neighborhood. I give California Fig Syrup full credit for her wonderful condition. It is a great thing for children."

Children like the rich, fruity taste of California Fig Syrup, and you can give it to them as often as they need it, because it is purely vegetable. For over 50 years leading physicians have recommended it, and its overwhelming sales record of over four million bottles a year shows it gives satisfaction. Nothing compares with it as a gentle but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It regulates the stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

There are many imitations of California Fig Syrup, so look for the name "California" on the carton to be sure you get the genuine.

Young Woman Shipmaster

Miss Gudrun Trogstad, twenty-one years old, has just been awarded at Oslo her shipmasters' certificate, thus becoming the first girl in Norway to gain such a distinction. She is now entitled to be captain of vessels up to 200 tons displacement. She took a course at the Oslo Seamen's school, and has gained practical experience in a Norwegian lake steamer.

Touching Faith in Police

Little Joe Arciga, fourteen, of Los Angeles, has the trust of all small children, and especially in policemen. He reported to the police that his bicycle has been stolen for a month. "Why," asked the sergeant, "didn't you report it sooner?" Joe replied that he thought the police knew everything that was going on.

The Deferred Excuse

By A. W. PEACH

(Copyright.)

IT WAS not a happy world to John Stuart. He was trying to get his own breakfast. His housekeeper had been suddenly called away, and he was, as the expression has it, "on his own."

On his ascent from the cellar way he found the kitchen door had blown open, and wintry gusts of snow were cascading in. He closed the door and went about his labors, when an unmistakable "me-ow" warned him that he had a visitor. A scouting expedition revealed the visitor in his study, a kitten, decorated with a crimson ribbon. Evidently she had slipped in when the kitchen door had blown open.

After some skillful stalking, which did not make his world any the happier, he cornered the kitten. He had reason to believe it belonged next door, so he decided to drop it over the fence. He performed this act with due ceremony and retreated to his belated breakfast. As he entered the kitchen his doorbell rang and he hastened through the bungalow to answer.

He opened the door and found himself facing a slight figure muffled in a fur coat.

"I wonder if you have seen my kitten?" a sweet voice queried.

"I just deposited a feline of the description over the backyard fence," he replied with some coldness as befitting the time of the year, the subject, and a breakfastless man.

"Oh, you did!" the sweet voice said with increasing chill. "I thank you! But, if I am not mistaken, I just saw the kitten behind you!"

He looked around, exploded a mild expletive in his mind, snatched the kitten from under a davenport, suspended it by the nape of its neck and extended it to its mistress.

"You need not be quite so savage about it!" she said as she received the kitten, and turning sharply about went down the snowy walks, her small overshoes leaving quick imprints behind her.

He closed the door and retreated to his belated breakfast. As he ate, the unhappy world took on a rosier aspect, and he suddenly realized that the owner of the kitten possessed brown eyes of a remarkable depth and beauty, and her eyebrows, and the curve of her cheeks above the dainty furs—

"By Jove, she was downright pretty, and I'm just awake to the fact!" he advised himself.

He was a newcomer in the neighborhood. Probably she lived in the attractive house just back of his on the other street.

"Now, if that kitten should come again I'll have an excuse for going over, and perhaps I can make a better impression than I did this morning," he thought to himself.

He made his usual morning trip to the post office and returned by way of the street on which the pretty owner of the kitten lived. Her home was attractive, there was no doubt about that. He wondered if he could catch a glimpse of her.

The effort to do so was fatal. The deceptive snow sheltered an icy stretch made more icy by the sliding feet of schoolboys, and John cascaded down the walk in front of her house with more speed than grace.

He gathered up the outspread limits of his six feet of extensive proportions and thought as he did so: "This is a grievous day. The Bible is right again: 'He was tempted and he fell!' I'll make tracks for home and stay there!"

Once more in his snug and comfortable study he set himself to work, but it was of little use. In front of the sheet in his typewriter he saw brown eyes so deep his glance could not fathom them; the curve of rosy cheeks and the hint of heavy coils of brown hair under the fur cap.

The afternoon wore on to evening. He prepared and made way with a very satisfactory repast and was smoking a pleasing cigar when his heart jumped. At the kitchen door there sounded an unmistakable "Me-ow!" He rushed to the door and gathered to himself the kitten that was to be his furred excuse.

He donned the proper garb and started. He walked briskly until he came in front of her house. In the shadows he saw something dark, stretched across the walk where he had fallen. It was the girl, unconscious from the force of her fall on the snow-covered, icy walk. He gathered her in his arms, thrilled at the sense of the firm, slight figure; then he went to the house.

Her father came to the door. There was excitement and confusion for a time, but fifteen minutes later the troubled waters were quiet and John was looking into brown eyes that regarded him oddly.

"I saw you tumble out there this afternoon and I was amused—there was so much of you!" she laughed. "And then I had to do it, too. It serves me right for being so disagreeable to you this morning."

"I'm afraid I should apologize. I was trying to get my own breakfast!" he said.

She smiled. "That explains it; you are forgiven and I suppose"—her brown, musing eyes were upon him—"I suppose because the kitten likes you so well I ought to!"

"I agree with you," he said, "and I love the kitten!"

Needless* Pain!

The man who wouldn't drive his motorcar half a mile when it's out of order, will often drive his brain all day with a head that's throbbing.

Such punishment isn't very good for one's nerves! It's unwise, and it's unnecessary. A tablet or two of Bayer Aspirin will relieve a headache every time. So, remember this accepted antidote for pain, and spare yourself a lot of needless suffering. Read the proven directions and you'll discover many valuable uses for these tablets. For headaches; to check colds. To ease a sore throat and reduce the infection. For relieving neuralgic, neuritic, rheumatic pain.

People used to wonder if Bayer Aspirin was harmful. The doctors answered that question years ago. It is not. Some folks still wonder if it really does relieve pain. That's settled! For millions of men and women have found it does. To cure the cause of any pain you must consult your doctor; but you may always turn to Bayer Aspirin for immediate relief.

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

Children* Cry for it

Children hate to take medicine as a rule, but every child loves the taste of Castoria. And this pure vegetable preparation is just as good as it tastes; just as bland and harmless as the recipe reads. (The wrapper tells you just what Castoria contains.)

When Baby's cry warns of colic, a few drops of Castoria has him soothed, asleep again in a jiffy. Nothing is more valuable in diarrhea. When coated tongue or bad breath tell of constipation, invoke its gentle aid to cleanse and regulate a child's bowels. In colds or children's diseases, use it to keep the system from clogging. Your doctor will tell you Castoria deserves a place in the family medicine cabinet until your child is grown. He knows it is safe for the tiniest baby; effective for a boy in his teens. With this special children's remedy handy, you need never risk giving a boy or girl medicine meant for grown-ups.

Castoria is sold in every drug store; the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature.

Night Life Gets You if You Don't Watch Out!

War Vet almost takes count, but pals help.

HOW would you like it if every two weeks you had to give up your good night's sleep, and work all night instead? This is what happened to W. H. Huggins of 90 Savannah Street, Rochester, New York. When he came back from the War, he took a night "shift" job.

"It certainly shot me all to pieces," said Mr. Huggins. "I was licked before I started. My pals noticed that the night shift got me, so during a 'lunch' period in the middle of one night one of them said to me, 'Hug, I bet I know what's the matter with you. This irregular life gets us all unless we watch out. Why don't you try Nujol? Most of the boys are onto this little health trick. Try it!'

"Well, that very night on the way home I got a bottle and within a week I felt like a different person. I wouldn't know myself. You can lick any job, even a night one, if you get the poisons out of your system regularly. Nujol sure did it for me!"

That's the great thing about Nujol. It absorbs the poisons in your system (we all have them) and cleans them out regularly. It cannot hurt you no matter how long you take it, and it forms no habit.

Nujol contains no medicines or drugs. It is simply the world's most famous method of bodily lubrication.

You can get a bottle at any good drug store, in a sealed package, for less than the cost of a couple of good cigars. Begin today to prove to yourself how Nujol can help you to lick the toughest job and feel bully!

JURY OF 276,003 COWS

The Verdict of 276,003 Cows

"AMAZING," say feeders when shown the results of the eight months' dairy profits survey conducted by the Purina Mills. Figures were obtained on 276,003 cows fed hand mixtures, Purina, and 55 other commercial rations. Here's what they showed:

Yearly Profit per Cow:

Average on hand mixed rations	$124.10
Average on 55 commercial rations	138.70
Average on Purina Cow Chow	164.25

The average Purina profit was $19.80 per ton of feed more than on other commercial rations and $27.04 more than on hand mixed rations.

Frankly, Purina results are the one big reason why we decided to handle Purina Chows—because we know they'll make you more money. Come in and let us help you with your feeding problems — or phone us.

Fatal Accident

A serious accident took place at the first intersection of the new and old highways north of Middle River, Saturday afternoon at about 5 p. m. when the bread truck belonging to Wieberg's bakery at Red Lake Falls, coming down from the north, collided with the Ford touring car of Mr. G. E. Evans of Middle River at he was going west.

Mrs. Evans, who was riding with her husband, was thrown from the car, striking the bread truck with such force that she was instantly killed.

Both drivers are taking part of the responsibility for the accident, as they did not see each other until it was too late to make a stop.

According to reports received here, Mr. Evans is getting along pretty good. The truck driver only got a shaking up, as little damage was done to his machine.

Short Lessons in Dairying

LESSON 81

PRODUCTION: The past summer has shown more than ever, the value of sweet clover pasture. Sweet clover produced good pasture in spite of the dry weather. Using a common expression—"There is a reason." The roots go deep in the ground and if there is any moisture within two feet, the sweet clover will get it and grow. These deep roots draw nitrogen and store it up for the crop that follows. Plan to seed sweet clover next spring for pasture.

MANUFACTURING: Twenty-five years ago, most butter was made from raw cream. But it was found that butter kept much better if the cream was pasteurized before churning. The creameries found it paid to put in pasteurizers. In the same way, creameries found that butter made from sweet cream is of higher quality and keeps longer than butter made from sour cream. It pays creameries to make butter from sweet cream, the same as it pays to pasteurire.

MARKETING: This year sees butter production mighty close to the surplus line. There are over 20 million pounds more butter in storage September 1st this year, than the same time last year. Land O' Lakes Creameries has worked to avoid a surplus of butter by making sweet cream butter—butter of the highest quality. With fine, high quality butter, there is always a greater consumption.

The Carnival

The buzzer rang off at twelve o'clock, dismissing all the grades, while the high school students were left with the "big job" on their hands, which was to be finished before eight o'clock.

Upon returning after dinner each individual was given his task to perform. That afternoon the very atmosphere seemed filled with excitement and ambition, thus they worked until everything was done.

The doors were all thrown open at eight o'clock. Just one moment, won't you take one look with me and see for yourself what hard work and a little cooperation can really do?

Entering in the lower hall you found several attractive porters. To your left was the booth which solved the nupterious problem, "where is Love Found?" On the same floor was the "Russian Cavern" which was decorated with streamers of red and white crepe paper. Your fortunes were also told here by two gypsies. The boxing also took place in the lower hall, which proved rather exciting.

As you entered the upper hall, the first thing to attract your attention was the candy booth, which was placed in the center of the floor, nicely decorated in purple and gold. In the southeast room on the upper floor was the beauty parlor. In the assembly was the "picture Gallery," and the booth "How to Become Thin."

The first thing on the program that evening was the one act play given by five high school girls, entitled, "Not a Man In the House." After the play was over the booths were opened and the excitement and noise began, which lasted till about twelve o'clock.

HIGH SCHOOL

The High School students are still assimilating the results of the Six-Weeks Examinations, but happiness, we hope, will fill the sad thought when 3.45 p.m. of Wednesday shall have approached.

Oscar, the poet, has composed some poetry which was tended for publication:

If time is money,
As some declare,
Behold in me
A millionnaire.

Billy F. had been told that a tradition is something handed down from parents to children.

So next day at school he explained to Mr. Vieths that he was late because, "Mother had to mend my traditions."

Seventh and Eighth Grades

Six-weeks examinations were held last week. Marks averaged higher for this period than for the first six-week period.

The carnival being over, school work has been resumed in the seventh and eighth grade room upstairs.

Both grades are learning Thanksgiving poems, and are looking forward to an enjoyable Thanksgiving vacation.

Chicken Dinner a Success

A very large and appreciative crowd attended the Nazareth Lutheran Ladies Aid Chicken Dinner and sale given at the church parlors last Thursday evening.

As usual, the ladies served a dollar dinner for only thirty-five cents.

Thanks

To say that we were pleased with the success of our recent community function would be stating it mildly indeed. We wish to have you know that we are very thankful to the community who made our carnival a a success. We invite you to attend other programs of entertainment in the future and assure you we will do our best to make your attendance enjoyable.

To those organizations and individuals who so kindly helped us by permitting us to use furniture and other articles we feel especially grateful.

R. J. Vieths, Superintendent.

W. C. T. U.

The W. C. T. U. will meet at the home of Mrs. C. A. Davis on Tuesday, Dec. 3.

Paul Anderson and Lenn Miller spent Sunday afternoon at Red Lake Falls.

Mrs. H. O. Hanson and Mrs. S. Lorentson visited at the home of Mrs. O. T. Ness Saturday afternoon.

Some traveling show troupe gave a show and dance here Monday evening.

Congregation Held Annual Meeting

The congregation of the Nazareth Lutheran church here held its annual meeting in the church parlors Sunday evening after the Luther League program.

The old board of church elders were re-elected with the exception of one, Hans Fosholm, who retired after many years of faithful service as a trustee on the board.

H. O. Hanson was elected to fill his place on the board as a trustee for three years.

Church Board Meets

The board of trustees for the Nazareth Lutheran church met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Gunheim Tuesday evening and outlined the program for church work for the coming year. The members of the board and their wives were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Gunheim after the business meeting. A bounteous lunch was served, for which they wish to thank the host and hostess.

Mrs. Gronvold and family made a business trip to T. R. Falls on Friday.

Take Care of Your Kidneys!

One should not neglect kidney and bladder irregularities.

TOO many people sacrifice health by failing to heed the early danger signals of kidney disorders. Even minor irregularities should be dealt with promptly.

A drowsy, listless feeling; lameness and stiffness; constant backache and bladder irregularities are often timely warnings. Don't neglect them.

To promote normal kidney action and assist your kidneys in cleansing your blood of poisonous wastes, use Doan's Pills. Recommended the world over.

50,000 Users Endorse Doan's:

Benjamin Faucher, 262 Silver St., Manchester, N. H., says: "For a time I couldn't do any work, for when I bent over my back would ache. My kidneys acted very irregularly and I felt all out of sorts. After using Doan's Pills, I felt fine again."

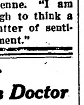
Ancient Idealism

"Would you marry for wealth?"

"No," said Miss Cayenne. "I am still simple-minded enough to think a wedding should be a matter of sentiment and not an investment."



John's Mother Praises Doctor

There isn't a mother living who won't agree that no half-sick child should be the subject for an experiment with medicines of uncertain merit. When your child is bilious, headachy, half-sick, feverish, restless, with coated tongue, bad breath, no appetite or energy, you know that nine times out of ten it's a sign his little stomach and bowels need purging. And when you know that for over fifty years leading physicians have endorsed one preparation for this condition, there doesn't seem to be any reason for "trying" things.

Rich, fruity California Fig Syrup clears the little stomach and bowels gently, harmlessly and in a hurry. It regulates the bowels, gives tone and strength to them and to the stomach; and helps to give your child new strength, energy and vitality. Thousands of Western mothers praise it. Mrs. Joseph W. Hill, 4306 Bedford Ave., Omaha, Nebraska, says: "I'll never forget the doctor who got me to give my baby boy, John, California Fig Syrup. Nothing else seemed to help his weak bowels. That was when he was just a baby. He suffered a good deal before I gave him Fig Syrup, but it stopped his trouble quick. I have used it with him for colds and little upset spells ever since. I consider him a Fig Syrup boy."

Insist on the genuine article. See that the carton bears the word "California." Over four million bottles used a year.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helps Her So Much

Pittsburgh, Pa.—"I was just completely run-down. I had tired, heavy, sluggish feelings and I could not eat. I was losing in weight. I read so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what a good medicine it is, that I started taking it. I have taken eight bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and about the same in tablet form. This is one medicine a woman should have in the house all the time. I am improving every day and I sure am able to eat. I am willing to answer any letters I get asking about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Ella Richards, 21 Chautauqua St. N. S., Pittsburgh, Pa.

FIND OLD WALLS OF ROMAN TIMES

Rich Discovery Made by German Archeologists.

Berlin.—The foundation of a wall, consisting almost wholly of sculptured stones of the imperial Roman period, is the astonishing spoil of the spades of German archeologists working in the neighborhood of the town of Alzey in the Rhine country. Seeking for traces of a medieval church, they came upon the remains of a much older building, about sixteen yards square, which dates back to the days when the legions still occupied the parts of Germany that bordered upon Gaul.

The construction of the foundation was of a most unusual type of masonry. The stones consisted largely of sculptured fragments of ancient pagan shrines and temples, including among others, nine altars, twenty-five pieces of pillars, four stones with inscriptions, six broken statues and reliefs, and six blocks with images of gods on all four sides. The structure suggests that it was the work of builders who not only disbelieved in the old gods but were actually hostile to them and wished to show their contempt for them; therefore possibly of early Christian date.

An examination of the sculptures and inscriptions shows that here, as elsewhere in southern Germany, the pre-Christian populace of mixed Germans, Romans and Gauls identified local gods with deities of the Roman pantheon. Apollo was linked with Grannus, a Celtic divinity, and the Roman Vulcan with the Celtic Cerunnos.

Jupiter is shown with a nine-spoked wheel, and the wheel is not a Roman emblem, but a German, being a figure of the sun.

Monument to Motherhood to Be Raised by Vets

Kansas City, Kan.—A monument to the motherhood of America is to be erected on the grounds of the V. F. W. National home at Eaton Rapids, Mich., founded four years ago by the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, for the care and welfare of the widows and orphans of deceased veterans.

State commanders throughout the country will recommend one man from their respective states to act on a committee charged with the responsibility of gathering the necessary funds and erecting the memorial.

The movement, sponsored by a resolution adopted by the thirtieth national encampment of the V. F. W. held at St. Paul last August, contemplates the erection of "a utilitarian monument bearing the inscription 'To the Motherhood of America.'"

The contribution of American motherhood, manifesting itself in every human activity, affording stimulus and inspiration to the better causes of civilization, was cited by those supporting the plan as a "vital force in our American heritage."

The project also gives recognition to the "multiple and continuous sacrifices, both in times of war and in times of peace, on the part of the motherhood of America for the most part unhonored and unsung."

Dog Saves Cat's Life but Earns No Gratitude

Malone, N. Y.—Dogs are not commonly known to befriend cats, yet one instance of such anomaly was witnessed here.

The cat had been missing three days. Its mistress hunted vainly for her, notwithstanding felines are supposed to return of their own will. Finally a state trooper, apprised of the lost pet, observed a dog standing on a rock ledge barking vociferously at an island in Salmon river. Search of the island brought forth the cat, a bit haggard at having been marooned three days, but still able to "spit" at the dog which had unwittingly saved her life.

Missouri "Houn' Dogs" Increasing in Value

Springfield, Mo.—The houn' dog is not a thing of the past.

The major portion of coon and fox hounds in the United States are furnished by this section of the country. Each year, prior to the opening of the hunting season, buyers from all over the country come into the Ozarks to purchase hundreds of dogs.

And the value of the "old houn' dawg" has increased until a first-class one is now worth $100.

Army Truck Operates With Wood for Fuel

San Francisco.—Using a sackful of broken tent poles for fuel, an army truck had demonstrated that it could pull a load of more than 38 tons.

Army officers watching the test of the invention of Col. Jean P. Imbert, former French army officer, were astounded by the performance.

The appliance invented by Colonel Imbert was placed in the truck in the place of the gasoline tank. After the container had been filled with wood a torch was applied, and a few minutes later when the truck had been cranked it chugged away with the load.

STUDY ENVIRONMENT OF U. S. CHILDREN

Nation-Wide Inquiry Is Sponsored by President.

Washington.—A nation-wide inquiry into the physical and social environment of the American child is moving forward. Permanent headquarters for a secretariat have been opened in the Interior department and 24 prominent educators, physicians, and sociologists have agreed to direct various phases of the investigation, which was sponsored by President Hoover.

Organization of the working force to place the American child under a microscope, determine his ills, and recommend means of curing them have been completed. The group of public men chosen to make the survey immediately will begin collecting data. Fully 18 months, they predict, will be so spent.

General Meeting to Be Held.

With the study completed, a general conference of the committeemen will be called in Washington to consider conditions as they have found them and decide what may be done to improve them.

The investigation, announced by President Hoover at a White House conference some months ago, was made possible by a gift of $500,000 by some of the President's friends. He declined to name them.

A complete picture of the American child and his environment will be painted by the investigators, who will turn the spotlight of science into the home and school in their search for facts. Public health organization, medical service for children, the family and parent education, vocational guidance, parental and maternal care—these are some of the subjects assigned to the study committee.

The Handicapped Child.

The handicapped child, including both the physically and mentally abnormal, will be the subject of a particularly diligent study. Four committees will work in this field. One will survey state and local organizations for the handicapped, another the physically and mentally handicapped child, yet another the child who is socially hampered by dependency, and finally, another will seek data on delinquent children.

A committee of 25 persons, including Secretaries of Interior Wilbur and of Labor Davis, was designated by Mr. Hoover to supervise the investigation.

Negress Gives Up White Baby in Hospital Mixup

Havana, Cuba.—A kinky-haired baby that nearly wrecked one Cuban home and a fair-haired infant that was the pride and joy of a young negress who thought she was its mother finally were returned to their proper parents when a strange case was solved in City court.

Berandina Vega, the negress, gave up the white child she had learned to love and look upon as her own, and accepted in its place a dark-skinned pickaninny that nearly caused a divorce in the family of Caridad Perez.

The two babies were born about the same time last December in a maternity hospital and were mixed during their first bath. As the days passed Senora Perez's charge began to turn dark of skin. The husband, after many stormy scenes, instituted suit for divorce.

Ten days ago Senora Perez called on the police to aid her in proving the child in her possession was that of a negress. Chief of Detectives Calvo started a search and found the white infant in the possession of Bernardina.

California Coeds Get 2:00 A. M. Curfew

Los Angeles.—Two o'clock in the morning has been set as the deadline for coeds at the University of California at Los Angeles to return from dates. This decision was reached at a women's council meeting headed by Mrs. Helen Matthewson Laughlin, dean of women. The time limit for week night dates was set at twelve o'clock. Freshmen have been limited to two week-end dates only; sophomores have been limited to two week-end dates and one during mid-week, while upper classmen may use their discretion so long as they are in their rooms before the deadlines. Special regulations governing houses where girls are staying were also discussed.

People So Law-Abiding Justice Is Idle 25 Years

Butler, Pa.—W. B. Higgins, justice of the peace in Oakland township for 25 years, probably has set a record. In all the time he has held the office he has not heard a case, civil or criminal, so law-abiding are the residents.

If differences arise between neighbors, Justice Higgins either reconciles them or advises that they take the case to another court.

Seized Slot Machines Turned Into Birdhouses

Merrill, Wis.—With a hammer and a jackknife Jahn Aho whiles away his time in the county jail here making birdhouses out of confiscated machines. After breaking them to pieces the sheriff turns the slot machines over to the ambitious prisoner, who already had made several birdhouses which have been lodged in trees in the jail yard.

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

Matters of Memory

I have a friend who prides himself on a certain quirk in memory which enables him to remember telephone numbers. He can remember any person's telephone number, when he has heard it once. And this is not idle boasting on his part, as I have seen him demonstrate his ability many times.

The other day I dropped in at a store with him while he bought a new hat.

"What size?" asked the clerk.

"I don't know," replied my infallible friend. "Seven, or seven and one-eighth, or seven and one-quarter. Somewhere around there."

Sure Fire

In the old days of vaudeville, a lagging act was spurred on by the cry: "Go into your dance!" It meant that a comedian's lines weren't getting over very well, and a dance was a sure-fire way of getting out of difficulty. Nowadays, when whole choruses do more difficult steps than the highly paid specialty dancers of former days, some other life-saver must be found.

As a matter of fact, two life-savers have been found. One is for the performer to interrupt whatever he is doing, fall on one knee and yowl "Sonny Boy-y-y!" It never fails to bring down the house.

The other method is to speak Yiddish. Somehow, New York vaudeville audiences rock with laughter at hearing that ancient and honorable tongue, and it is employed every week at the Palace.

The other day Lou Holtz flung out a phrase or two. Nearly everybody laughed. Then, so that the others might laugh too, he stepped to the edge of the orchestra pit and said:

"For the benefit of the four or five people from out of town, I will explain what I said. I said 'I'll take the same.' You paid your money to get in here, and you're entitled to know all that's going on."

* * *

The Big Kick

There are all sorts of practical jokers, but the latest one I heard of is the man who somewhere bought an explosive golf ball. He started out for a round with a friend. The friend teed up an old ball. The practical joker said:

"You can't play with me with a ball that old. Take this new one."

When the clubhead met the ball there was a loud explosion. That is supposed to be the big kick in the joke. It meant two extra rounds at the nineteenth hole.

A Sick Man

Douglas Fairbanks the energetic moving picture star, has always been an outstanding pattern of pep even when he was supposed to be sick. Years ago, before he entered the movies, he was in the Lamb's club one day and was asked to appear in a benefit. He complained that he could not undertake to do it because he felt rotten and was going home to bed. On the way out of the club he vaulted over a piano. If it had been one of his good days, he probably would have vaulted right over the first floor of the Lamb's club.

Pure Luck

Sometimes I have a suspicion that our great financial geniuses are not so smart, after all. It is a great comfort to think that millionaires are not wizards, but simply lucky. Such a relief permits me to think that I, too, may some day make a killing in Wall street.

One of the most satisfying anecdotes concerns a financial genius who telephoned his broker to buy 2,000 shares of something or other. The order was executed immediately. Ten minutes later the financial genius again telephoned his broker, and he was, to say the least, distracted.

"I've made a ghastly mistake," he quavered. "Something or Other is not the stock I intended to buy. I don't care where it is now. Sell it at the market."

This order, too, was executed on the spot. Twenty minutes after the brokerage firm had started buying Something or Other for its customers, all of that stock had again been sold.

The net profit was $12,000. This particular stock had long remained quiet, and when all the stock gamblers saw an order for 2,000 shares placed, they figured that something was about to happen. So many of them put in additional orders, and the stock went up.

His Desire for Sole Place in Sun Costs $20

Provincetown, Mass.—His desire for a place in the sun cost Frank Viera $20 in court here.

It has long been Frank's daily custom to sit at the corner of Franklin and Tremont streets for a sun bath.

On a recent day, Antone Carlos, who is blind, chose the same street corner as a nice place to bask in the sun.

"Here, move out. You're keeping the sun from me," Frank complained.

Antone refused to budge and the scuffle that followed led to court.

Katahdin's Height

Katahdin, Maine's highest mountain, is 5,268 feet high, only 12 feet short of a mile. In 1869 a Maine water power report gave its altitude as 5,380 feet. In the '70s Dr. M. C. Fernald of the Maine State college, now the University of Maine, placed the elevation at 5,266 feet above sea level. In 1906, during a survey of the west branch of the Penobscot river, still another finding was that Katahdin was 5,273 feet high.

For any BABY

We can never be sure just what makes an infant restless, but the remedy can always be the same. Good old Castoria! There's comfort in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm in its frequent use. As often as Baby has a fretful spell, is feverish, or cries and can't sleep, let Castoria soothe and quiet him. Sometimes it's a touch of colic. Sometimes constipation. Or diarrhea—a condition that should always be checked without delay. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. Relief will follow very promptly; if it doesn't, you should call a physician.

All through babyhood, Castoria should be a mother's standby; and a wise mother does not change to stronger medicines as the child grows older. Castoria is readily obtained at any drugstore, and the genuine easily identified by the Chas. H. Fletcher signature that appears on every wrapper.

Girl Fights Big Handicap

MANY a girl would give up in despair when she found herself snubbed in school and unpopular in college, but not so Mrs. Norma Kussel Jones of 1567 Cramer Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

"When I was seventeen I went away to college," says Mrs. Jones. "Freda, my room-mate, was a very popular girl. Soon she asked to have her room changed. It seems I kept her awake at night, I slept so restlessly. No one knows how I suffered.

"One day one of my teachers found me sobbing. 'Why', she said, 'sometimes sluggish circulation causes restless sleep. Why don't you try Nujol?'

"In two weeks Nujol had begun clearing out the poisons in my body, my skin had a clear healthy appearance, and everything looked brighter. 'What have you been doing to yourself?' asked my room-mate. 'You are a different girl.' The days and years that followed were filled with every activity and not long ago Freda was maid of honor at my wedding. That's what Nujol did for me!"

Such a simple way to health and happiness! Your doctor will tell you that Nujol contains no medicines or drugs—it is simply bodily lubrication—harmless, normal, and it works easily so you will be regular as clockwork. You can get a bottle in a sealed package at any drug store for what you would pay for two or three sodas.

Get a bottle today and try it. If you are like most other people Nujol will make you brighter, happier, more able to succeed. Don't put off good health! Start being well this easy way, this very day.

Brave American Girls like this one never say die!

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

STORY FROM THE START

Capt. Lion Fellowes' American ship is sunk by the British off Portugal in the War of 1812. Fellowes' life is saved by Cara Inglepin, daughter of the owner of the American ship, True Bounty, Capt. Chater, in trade with the enemy. Because of love for Cara he consents to sail as mate. The True Bounty is stopped by the British frigate, Badger, Capt. Collishawe. Despite his American citizenship, Fellowes is taken aboard the Badger a "pressed" man. He scents treachery and fosters a hatred for Collishawe, Cara and Chater. Collishawe tells him Cara had nothing to do with his abduction. He refuses to believe. Off New York Fellowes learns a landing party is going ashore. He escapes. The British landing party is at Chater's home and Fellowes sets about arousing the villagers.

"Cuffee plenty lub fo' shoot," he said.

"Heavens, what gibberish," she protested. "And is he a cannybal with all them wicked teeth?"

"No more'n ye be, yerself," growled Tom before Fellowes could answer.

"H'itey—t'itey!" snapped the widow. "Keep a civil tongue in yer head, my man."

"I ain't yer man," roared Tom. "And I'll thank ye to mind as how Cuffee's my nigger."

"A pressed man own a nigger?"

"The negro would serve with his master, you see," Fellowes intervened.

"I don't see," scoffed Mrs. Rhodes. "If that makes sense, I'm a fool."

"Ye said it yerself," jeered Tom.

The widow grabbed a pewter jack from the table.

"And if ye think to talk back to me, ye lettle, hairy vermin, I'll try the weight o' yer skull," she threatened.

But Cuffee thrust his enormous body between them.

"Cuffee him b'long fo' Tom," he said in his curiously soft, soothing voice. "Tom him b'long fo' mars'r Fellowe'. Cuffee plenty lub him bofe. Yo' don hit Tom."

She regarded the negro with unwilling respect.

"Why, ye talk like a Christian—which is more'n that Tom does."

"Tom him no lub woman," explained Cuffee, grinning. "Oh, my aunt, him plenty 'fraid fo' woman."

"Land's sakes, so that's the kind o' critter he is!" Mrs. Rhodes smiled upon the pair of them. "Waall, it's time he learned what a respectable woman's like. Poor feller! Thar's naught nearer to a babby than a sailor in this world." Tom started to retreat toward the door. "Tom! You, Tom!"

"Yes, ma'am?" he answered meekly.

"What's yer name?"

"Tom Grogan, ma'am—o' Philydelphy, P. A."

"Set yerself doawn, Tom. I wouldn't want for any man to think I meant him harm. Will ye have a drop o' drink jest to wet yer tongue?"

Tom brightened perceptibly.

"Why, I'd take it kindly, ma'am."

"Not too much," cautioned Fellowes, and turned to greet Nimrod Sopher, who hurried in at the head of four or five men, all carrying rifles, muskets or fowling pieces of various dates and patterns. Sopher was a man of about forty, thin as a lath, with a long, mournful face that reminded Fellowes of a horse. Around his waist was belted a dragoon saber of prodigious size.

"This is an unforeseen pleasure, Lion," he proclaimed ponderously. "I very nearly fell out my window when Paris told me you were home. An extraordinary deliverance! A veritable Odyssey, I doubt not. You'll have much to tell us, yes, yes! But we have not been idle at home. And you'll find the Manor all in order. I've had some trouble with Chater, who gave me to understand 'twas your pleasure he should be permitted to buy the 'swamp tract' east of the creek; but I trust I've not merited rebuke in resisting his persuasions."

"Chater lied to you," rasped Fellowes. "He and—an accomplice of his betrayed me to Collishawe—to silence me lest I reveal their intercourse with the enemy. Collishawe, as Eaches must have told you—"

"Ah, but my dear Lion, how can you prove this British officer comes with the intention of proposing a commerce in treason?"

"That's why I had your Fencibles roused. We must catch the scoundrels in the act."

"Scoundrels?" Sopher was distressed. "A libelous phrase, my friend. And it occurs to me that Chater has visiting him Mr. Benjamin Inglepin, a reputable merchant, of New York city, as well as Mr. Inglepin's daughter—"

"Who is the guiding hand in the plot!" flared Fellowes.

"But, Lion! Mr. Inglepin is a reputable merchant!"

"Say a wealthy merchant, and I'll agree with you. Grown wealthy on trading with the enemy. A corrupt, conspiring Federalist, bent on restoring allegiance to the Crown."

Sopher was bewildered.

"It passes comprehension," he said. "And as your attorney, Lion, I must counsel you to have your proofs in order before you undertake to prosecute your charges."

"With your Fencibles to aid me, I'll have proof enough to hang the lot of them."

"What? A woman?"

Mrs. Rhodes, who had stood by listening, arms akimbo, rapped sternly:

"And why not, if she deserves it?"

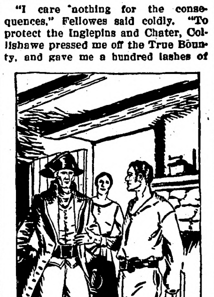
"Why not?" echoed Fellowes.

Sopher wagged his head forebodingly. "I like it not, Lion, and that's the truth. As your attorney—"

"'Tis not as my attorney, but as captain of the Fencibles I've called on you. Will you aid us to capture these British invaders?"

"Ah, that's a different matter." The lawyer-militiaman plucked up his spirits. "There, to be sure, we have the law on our side. Invaders in arms may be resisted, nay, they should be resisted. But laying an information alleging the crime of high treason is a matter requiring protracted consideration. I should err in my responsibility did I not urge reflection upon the possible consequences."

"I care nothing for the consequences," Fellowes said coldly. "To protect the Inglepins and Chater, Collishawe pressed me off the True Bounty, and gave me a hundred lashes of the cat. Did you ever see a man who had taken a hundred lashes on his back? Do you understand what it means to be compelled to serve against your country?"



"Who is the Guiding-Hand in th Plot!" Flared Fellowes.

"Your resentment is justifiable," deplored the lawyer, "yet suffer me to indicate that justice is seldom realized through passion."

Eaches, who hovered by the window, made an awkward attempt to come to attention.

"Axin' yer pardon, Cap'n," he reported, "the powder's sarved out, and the comp'ny be acallin' for ye 'n' squire."

"And 'bout time some one took heed to actin' 'stead o' argyin'!" announced Mrs. Rhodes. "Here!" She opened a cupboard, and drew from it a musket, powder horn and shot pouch, which she extended to Cuffee. "Tom, jest stir yerself out to the woodshed, and ye'll find a hefty ax I honed, myself. Squire, thar's a pistol in the drawer o' that table. Nimrod, git out o' here, and muster yer Fencibles or I'll go do it for ye."

"I trust I do not need to be reminded of my duty, Mirandy Rhodes," the lawyer returned with dignity. "Corporal Eaches, lead out your squad. After you, Lion!"

In the hall they encountered Tom, fingering the edge of a shiny, broad-bladed wood ax.

"Run yer thumb over that," he invited them admiringly. "The Badger's gunner couldn't have it no sharper. Thar's a woman for ye! Cripes, she'd fight a seventy-four 'soon as look at it."

The Names of Indians

In the system of naming children in vogue among the old Indian tribes, the men, and sometimes the women, changed their names from time to time. There were two classes of names: The names, corresponding to our personal names, and names which answer rather to our titles and honorary appellations. Personal names were given and changed at the critical epochs of life, such as birth, the first war expedition, some notable feat, and elevation to chieftainship. Frequently retirement from active life by a warrior was marked by the adoption of the name of his son. True names among the Indians define or indicate the social group into which a man is born, whatever honor they entail being due to the accomplishments of ancestors. Personal names mark what the individual has done himself.

Settlement Days

Lady day (March 25), Midsummer (June 24), Michaelmas (September 29) and Christmas are the old quarterly rent payment dates in England and were commonly used as payment dates for various types of regular income.

Woman "Kidnaps" Process Server

Davenport, Ia. — Constable Werner Dallenbach went to attach Mrs. L. L. Carnall's automobile.

She refused to give up the keys and backed the machine into the street.

As the officer leaped on the running board Mrs. Carnall pushed on the accelerator and sped over the government bridge through Rock Island and Moline to a filling station.

Dallenbach, hatless and shivering, alighted and the car again sped away. When Mrs. Carnall returned home Dallenbach was waiting. She was taken to jail and faces a year's term or a $1,000 fine for resisting execution of a process.

SEEKS LOCK FOR NEW WOODEN LEG

Experience With Last One Painful and Costly.

New York.—Wrought-iron links and a burglar-proof padlock are to grace the leg of an able-bodied seaman, not in imitation of the golden ball and chain now appearing on some girls' ankles, but as a safety first measure.

Seaman John Woodin has a wooden leg. That is, he "had" a leg made of wood, and the difference between "has" and "had" explains the idea of the wrought-iron links and padlock. The next pegleg is going to be chained and padlocked.

Mr. Woodin was in a terrible stew when recently he hopped into the Seaman's church institute, 25 South street, on the arms of two sympathizers who had found him marooned on a park bench not far from the institute.

Several days ago he arrived in town, and as he had been on a long voyage he decided to see if New York had changed any since he left. Being a fresh-air enthusiast, he thought he would inhale the ozone from a bench in the park before turning in for the night. The fresh air made him sleepy and he was soon dozing on the bench.

"Well, sir, the first thing I knew," John told the chaplain of the institute, "I awoke and a couple of bums had yanked off my leg. They used it to kick me with as well as hit me. As many of us that wear the pegs use them for our banks, they were looking for my money, and they not only got that but made off with my leg as well."

But Mr. Woodin had overlooked the fact, so the chaplain told him, that he had left much of his savings with him before starting out, and that, therefore, most of his few dollars had not reposed in the hollow leg but were safe in the institute's strong box.

John breathed easier when he heard the news, and now he is hobbling about the institute on crutches. He confided to the chaplain, too, that he was going to save now for a new wooden leg fitted not only with a place to store his money but also with a chain passing through it and around his waist—"with the best burglar-proof padlock I can find. And maybe the next pair of bums that try to steal that may be surprised!"

Woman Falls Off Ship in Midocean; Saved

San Francisco.—How a well-known society woman of New York and the Orient narrowly escaped drowning in mid-Pacific and was rescued in record time by the crew of the liner President Madison was revealed when the ship docked here.

Except for a wound on her left heel, the woman, Mrs. Gardner O. Foster, thirty, wife of a Shanghai importer, suffered no ill effects. She fell overboard between Yokohama and Honolulu.

Capt. Thomas Johnson ordered the ship slowed down and a boat lowered. Nine minutes later Mrs. Foster was back aboard the vessel.

Auto Crash Heals Girl's Broken Leg

Waynesburg, Pa.—Automobile accidents cannot generally be recommended for their healing powers. Yet Miss Beatrice Carpenter of Waynesburg can attest to the curative properties of one such accident.

Two years ago Miss Carpenter suffered a broken leg in an automobile accident and had regained only partial use of the member, although the bone had knit.

She was injured a second time recently in a similar accident and the leg snapped back into its natural position. Miss Carpenter recovered the full use of her leg.

Sues Wealthy Relative for Calling Her "Hexer"

Hackensack, N. J.—Accusing her uncle, Edward A. Spengeman, rich silk manufacturer, of calling her a "hexer" and saying she had bewitched her stepmother, who willed her a $60,000 estate, Mrs. Charles Small has sued him, asking $60,000.

District Schools Popular

Washington.—So many out of town pupils take advantage of the capital public schools that the board of education has raised the elementary tuition rates to $71.52 and has lowered the high school rate to $122.62.

Record Gain in Butter Profits

Dairymen Who Use "Dandelion Butter Color" Say It's the Best Investment of All.

The biggest creameries in the country, who are most careful to cater to the whims of the public, are earning record profits by keeping their butter that appetizing June color everyone likes. Ninety per cent of them are doing it with "Dandelion Butter Color." It's the most economical and satisfactory butter color made. Half a teaspoonful colors a gallon of cream! It doesn't color the buttermilk. It's purely vegetable and tasteless. Approved by all State and National Food Laws. Large bottles, only 35¢ at all drug and grocery stores or write Wells and Richardson Co., Inc., Burlington, Vt., for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

why smokers graduate to

CAMELS—

CAMEL
TURKISH & DOMESTIC BLEND CIGARETTES

The phrase "I've Graduated to Camels" originated with a Camel smoker. It expresses the experience of millions who through Camels have learned to know real smoking pleasure.

As taste in smoking develops, it naturally leads toward better quality. New smokers may not be critical but when they once experience the true mildness and surpassing fragrance of the Camel blend, they realize that here is a real superiority. It is for smokers of such discernment that Camels are made . . . for them the choicest tobaccos are selected . . . and this quality is maintained for the millions who know genuine smoking pleasure.

when they learn the difference they flock to Camels

Hogs—Steers—Sheep Say:
"The Purina Pound Is Cheapest"

IT'S not what we say about Purina Chows that counts—it's what the animals say. Through 2,413 feeding records from all leading hog raising centers, 90,247 hogs shout, "Purina makes pork at $6.50 per hundred," while 19,890 steers add, "and makes beef at $10.08." At the same time 33,399 sheep say, "$9.98 per cwt. gain." No wonder Purina feeders are making money—more money than by any other plan of feeding. No wonder we became enthusiastic about Purina and decided to become the local authorized distributor of the Checkerboard line.

You'll be an enthusiastic booster, too, once you've fed Purina to your poultry and live stock. Why not phone us for a supply—or drop in.

Cows From Fred Voth Herd Won High Honor in Many State and County Fairs

Ormsby Peiterje Bess De Kol, a Holstein cow sold last spring by Fred Voth of Holt to J. D. Bacon farm, at Grand Forks, won a long string of prizes at shows in several midwestern states this year, a representative of the Lilac Hedge farm told Mr. Voth recently when he returned for some more fine breeding stock from the Voth herd.

At the Minot, Devils Lake, Fargo, Grand Forks fairs this cow won second place in her class, first place in each instance being won by another cow from the Bacon herd. At Davenport, Iowa and Burlington, Iowa, she placed first and grand champion. At DeMoines fair she placed 4th in a class of 50 cows; at Topeka, Kansas 3rd out of 57 cows and at Lincoln, Nebraska she placed second.

N. S. A. News

All Valley-wide organizations are co-operating to insure the success of the forthcoming Northwest School Farmers' Week and Red River Valley Winter Shows to be held at Crookston, February 10-14. Nationally known speakers have been engaged for the evening meetings, with special lectures and demonstrations during the day for the men, the women and the boys' and girls. Eighteen different judges will make the awards in livestock and farm crops divisions, and supervise the various judging and rural school spelling contests.

Railroads will run specil trains each day in addition to granting reduced rates on all regular trains during the week.

Cooperating agencies include the Northwest School of Agriculture, Red River Valley Livestock Breeders' Association, the Red River Valley Development association, the Red River Valley Crops and Soils associatian, the Northern Minnesota Poultry association, the Northwestern Minnesota Singers' association, the Crookston association of Public Affairs, and organizations and individuals numbered by the hundreds.

O. M. Kiser, R. S. Dunham, and Ole Flaat, superintendents of the livestock and farm crops divisions, and H. A. Pflughoeft, 4-H Club Leader, anticipate record entries in all departments.

Short Lessons in Dairying
LESSON 81

PRODUCTION: The past summer has shown more than ever, the value of sweet clover pasture. Sweet clover produced good pasture in spite of the dry weather. Using a common expression—"There is a reason." The roots go deep in the ground and if there is any moisture within two feet, the sweet clover will get it and grow. These deep roots draw nitrogen and store it up for the crop that follows. Plan to seed sweet clover next spring for pasture.

MANUFACTURING: Twenty-five years ago, most butter was made from raw cream. But it was found that butter kept much better if the cream was pasteurized before churning. The creameries found it paid to put in pasteurizers. In the same way, creameries found that butter made from sweet cream is of higher quality and keeps longer than butter made from sour cream. It pays creameries to make butter from sweet cream, the same as it pays to pasteurire.

MARKETING: This year sees butter production mighty close to the surplus line. There are over 20 million pounds more butter in storage September 1st this year, than the same time last year. Land O' Lakes Creameries has worked to avoid a surplus of butter by making sweet cream butter—butter of the highest quality. With fine, high quality butter, there is always a greater consumption.

Important Notice

Under date of Nov. 29th, a notice was published in the Postal Bulletin calling attention to an order previously published that all Christmas stamps and seals must be placed on the back side and not on the address side of letters, cards, and parcels.

The address of the sender should always be placed in the upper left hand corner of all letters and parcels, and they should always be addressed with pen and ink and not a pencil.

Over a million letters are sent to the dead letter office every year, because they haven't a return address.

This Mother Had Problem

As a rule, milk is about the best food for children, but there are times when they are much better off without it. It should always be left off when children show by feverish, fretful or cross spells, by bad breath, coated tongue, sallow skin, indigestion, biliousness, etc., that their stomach and bowels are out of order.

In cases like this, California Fig Syrup never fails to work wonders, by the quick and gentle way it removes all the souring waste which is causing the trouble, regulates the stomach and bowels and gives these organs tone and strength so they continue to act normally of their own accord. Children love its rich, fruity flavor and it's purely vegetable and harmless, even for babies.

Millions of mothers have proved its merit and reliability in over 50 years of steadily increasing use. A Western mother, Mrs. May Snavely, Montrose, California, says: "My little girl, Edna's, tendency to constipation was a problem to me until I began giving her California Fig Syrup. It helped her right away and soon her stomach and bowels were acting perfectly. Since then I've never had to have any advice about her bowels. I have also used California Fig Syrup with my little boy, with equal success."

To be sure of getting the genuine, which physicians endorse, always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name.

There is no truer test of a man's qualities for permanent success than the way he takes criticism. The little minded man can't stand it. It pricks his egotism. He "crawfishes." He makes excuses. Then, when he finds that excuses won't take the place of results, he sulks and pouts. It never occurs to him that he might profit from the incident.—Thomas A. Edison.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescriptional product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

INVENTS OXYGEN VEST FOR PILOTS

Will Protect Aviators in Water Accidents.

Washington.—A new oxygen-breathing device has just been perfected here, intended to prevent the drowning of aviators trapped by seaplanes that crash in the water, or caught under their parachutes after a jump that brings them down into a river or the sea. It is the joint work of Chief Gunner C. L. Tibbals, well known for his inventions of submarine safety devices, and Frank H. Hobson of the naval bureau of construction and repairs. As yet it has received no official name, but is provisionally called the seaplane rescue safety vest.

Mr. Tibbals describes the new contrivance as "a sort of combined vest and belt, equipped with two long pieces of rubber hose through one of which the wearer inhales and through the other exhales; a nose clamp to prevent the sudden rush of water from suffocating him; a tiny canister containing soda lime, which serves to purify the breath while eliminating carbon dioxide, and a bottle containing sufficient oxygen to keep a man afloat at least half an hour after he has jumped into the water from his 'chute. However, if it so happens that the flyer has not had a chance to use his parachute and therefore hits the water while in the plane, he can readily gain access to a larger bottle always carried as an emergency measure in the ship. This will supply a human being for about an hour and a half."

U. S. Bets Four Billion Dollars Every Year

New York.—More than four billion dollars changes hands through commercialized gambling in the United States each year, according to a survey made by Howard McLellan.

The sums handled by gamblers in either New York or Chicago far exceed those won and lost in the world's most famous center of legalized gambling, Monte Carlo, McLellan asserts. Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, New Orleans, Kansas City, St. Louis, Cleveland, Detroit, and Washington are close rivals of Monte Carlo in the volume of their gambling activities, he asserts.

McLellan's itemized tabulation of the nation's gambling bill is as follows:

Baseball pools, $500,000,000; policy games (lotteries based on daily totals of bank clearings or other daily figures), $300,000,000; race track betting, $1,000,000,000; handbook betting on races, $800,000,000; cards, dice and similar games of chance, $1,000,000,000; bucketshops, $500,000,000.

The figures, arrived at through an examination of courtroom testimony in local gambling investigations, a study of income tax figures, police court records, books of the leading race tracks, and other authoritative sources, represent an underestimate, since they exclude many minor gambling activities, McLellan states.

Woman Spends Night in Capital Monument

Washington.—Mrs. S. E. Longaell, forty, of Middleburgh, Vt., is the first among nearly 10,000,000 visitors to the Washington monument to spend the night in it.

It was an oversight on the part of the guards that permitted her to be locked in the great obelisk for the night. Authorities believe she purposely secreted herself in the shaft when the door was closed at night. The story did not leak out until later.

Mrs. Longaell went to the monument fortified by a lunch and a thermos bottle full of tea. Authorities think she wanted to see the moonlight and the sun rise from the top of the monument.

The guards promise this stunt will never be repeated. Hereafter they will move any furniture behind which a person might hide. It has been a sort of unwritten law that no visitor should be permitted in the monument after the closing hour, primarily for the protection of visitors.

Made Insane by Loss of $100,000 Won in Lottery

Breslau.—With a lottery prize of $100,000 in his pocket, Bruno Wellmann thought he need not bother to work for the rest of his life.

Wellmann was the owner of a cafe until he won the big prize in the Saxon State lottery. He immediately made his nephew proprietor of his cafe, bought a villa and prepared with the interest on the rest of his money to spend his days in dignified ease. But the next day the bank in which he had deposited his winnings went into bankruptcy. Wellmann is now in an insane asylum.

HEADLESS BODY OF WOMAN IS FOUND

Mysterious Murder Mystifies Authorities.

Yonkers.—Westchester county authorities are faced with the third murder of a woman in the township of Greenburgh since last April, the decomposed and partly dismembered body of a young woman having been found in a gully off the Ardsley road on the Yonkers-Greenburgh line.

The spot is three miles from where Earle Peacox burned his murdered wife's body last April, and about six miles from where some one shot down Mrs. Elsa Marshall and dragged her body into the woods a few weeks ago, just as the Peacox trial was coming to a close.

Head and Hand Gone.

A young man, hunting in the woods near St. Andrew's Golf club, pushed his way through the heavy underbrush into the gully and stumbled over the body. He went to the home of District Attorney Coyne in Yonkers and told the prosecutor what he had found.

The prosecutor called several Yonkers policemen and the hunter guided them to the spot where he had seen the body.

The head and right hand were missing from the body. What little remained of the body was naked, except for a pair of black pumps on the feet. A cheap wedding ring and an imitation gold ring, with three glass stones in it, were on the left hand. The back of the neck was covered with thick dark reddish chestnut hair, which had been bobbed.

No Weapon Marks.

Coyne and the police examined the body minutely, in the hope of finding the mark of a weapon, but were unsuccessful. The body was moved to a morgue in Yonkers, where Medical Examiner Amos O. Squire examined it.

Coyne said his opinion was that the body had been lying where it was found at least several weeks and possibly as much as three months. The body of Dorothy Peacox was found last April in a patch of woods, similar to the place where the latest body was found.

One Pig for Four Months' Food Wins Her Divorce

Boston.—It was a pig that wrecked their home, Mrs. Gladys Deeg of Stoughton testified in Norfolk Probate court, Dedham, where Judge Joseph R. McCoole granted her a divorce from John L. Deeg.

She charged him with neglect to provide suitable support and also with cruel and abusive treatment—in that he gave her nothing to eat except pork for three months.

She said he killed the pig in November of 1928 and then supplied no other food to the house until February of this year, when she left him.

"Then it was a case of too much pig?" Judge McCoole queried with a twinkle in his eye.

"Yes, sir."

"That's enough for a divorce here." And the judge granted a decree nisi.

Mrs. Deeg said that her husband bought plenty of gasoline for his automobile but would give her no food for the house.

Gland Grafting Makes Tunneys of Young Boys

Paris.—A normal life span of 150 years may be possible for men and women of the future, in the opinion of Dr. Serge Voronoff, the Russian rejuvenation expert.

Gland-grafting operations he has tried on monkeys, rams and bulls, will enable man to attain a normal life of a century and a half, he said recently in an interview.

Results of such gland operations have remarkable effects not only on adults, but on children. He said children of nine could be given the force and vigor of the average person of twenty-five and the person living to be one hundred and fifty, would retain the youthful force of thirty.

"I have experimented on all kinds of animals," Doctor Voronoff continued. "I have prolonged the life of rams to twenty-six years in comparison to the normal thirteen years. That gives promise of what can be expected by man."

Chinese Seal Will Be Carved in Rare Jade

Shanghai.—Nationalist China's official seal is to be carved from a stone rich in tradition as in beauty.

A large and exceptionally rare specimen of the famed "flesh color" jade, measuring five inches by seven, was recently discovered in Sinkiang and is being presented to the state council by the chairman of the Sinkiang provincial government.

Jade is considered a stone of good omen in China, and Chinese value it as much for its fortunate auspices as for its beauty.

A young patient in the Hadassah hospital in Jerusalem agreed to turn over his share in the next world for £2 (approximately $10). Payment by the purchaser, an older man, is to be made in monthly installments of 10 shillings.

TRANSLATES INDIAN "BOOK OF GENESIS"

Expert Takes 30 Years to Complete Epic Poem.

Washington.—An American aboriginal narrative poem, described as the Indian "Book of Genesis," has been translated into English.

The work was completed by J. N. Hewitt of the bureau of American ethnology of the Smithsonian institution after thirty years of work.

The poem traces the Indian conception of the creation of man and is expected to prove a valuable contribution to American letters, both for its intrinsic literary value and for the light it throws on the workings of the Indian mind in attempting to solve the eternal problem.

The bulk of the epic relates the adventures of the Dehaehiyawakho, an imaginary man-being who is called the master of life.

Before his "arrival and creation of man and the world" there was believed to have been a "sunless and moonless skyland, lighted only by the snowy white flowers of the great tree of light."

Much confusion is created in the mind of the average reader by the amazing phenomena detailed in the poem. This, Mr. Hewitt explains, is because of the unsimilarity of creative thought between Indian mythology and the workings of the more familiar European mythology.

Dehaehiyawakho, for whose origin there is only nebulous explanation in the primitive lyrics is portrayed as the creator of man while his brother, Ohaa, roughly corresponds to the theological devil, according to Mr. Hewitt.

The creator won the government and rulership of all living things by a game of bowl and plum pits with his grandmother, in which he shook as dice the heads of chicadees kept magically alive and acting according to his bidding.

The songs and stories which generation after generation of Iriquois have handed down by word of mouth depict the adventures of the two brothers.

They are prepared for their first appearance by Mr. Hewitt, who, deprecating the loss of emotional stress which is lent only by the Indian tongue, believes the beauty of the primitive imagination, which is retained in the translation, will compensate for this loss.

Rail Fares in France Less Than Before War

Paris.—Despite the general rise in prices during the last ten years, French railway fares for passenger traffic are one-third cheaper than before the war, figured on the gold franc basis. These facts have been circulated in a report on the management of the French state railways.

In 1914 it cost 0.112 francs (gold or paper) to travel one kilometer first class; today the price is 0.4505 (paper) francs. Accordingly the rates have gone up 302 per cent in paper, but they have gone down 32 per cent in gold, the report shows.

French passenger rates are the lowest in the world today, it is revealed, being exactly 68 per cent of prewar rates. The percentages for other countries (present tariffs compared with 1914 gold rates) are:

United States, 149; Italy, 72; Great Britain, 150; Czechoslovakia, 80; Germany, 154; Spain, 97; Holland, 157; Switzerland, 162; Austria, 100.

He's 53 Years Old, Yet Has Never Been Born

Southsea, England.—There is a fifty-three-year-old man living here who, officially, has never been born. He is further worried by doubt as to whether his real name is James Mead or that of his twin brother, John.

A sick benefit society to which James belongs recently asked to see his birth certificate. On inquiry at the place of his birth James discovered that although his twin brother's name was registered he was nonexistent.

James has now revealed that at the christening of the twins the boys were so alike that one wore a red band around the arm and the other blue. When they were disrobed the gowns became mixed, and although the mother pointed to him and declared that he was James, he is still doubtful if she really knew which was which.

Barmaid in England Takes Pastor's Place

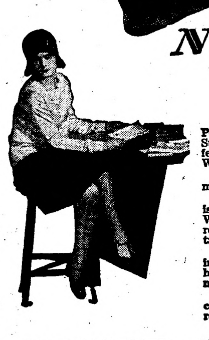
Banbury, England. — During the absence of the regular preacher Miss Varney Hancock Cashmore, twenty-six, shingle-haired barmaid of the Marlborough Arms, conducted the services at the Unitarian church and created a favorable impression among the congregation.

Miss Cashmore is president of the Banbury Young People's guild, which encourages young people to conduct services. She has studied elocution and is said to have a fine voice.

"It has always been my ambition to be a preacher," she said after her first appearance in the pulpit. "I like to talk and do not feel the least bit nervous in the pulpit."

At the Marlborough Arms Miss Cashmore combines her barmaid's work with household duties.

Bayer Tablets Aspirin



Needless Pain!

People are often too patient with pain. Suffering when there is no need to suffer. Shopping with a head that throbs. Working though they ache all over.

And Bayer Aspirin would bring immediate relief!

The best time to take Bayer Aspirin is the moment you first feel the pain. Why postpone relief until the pain has reached its height? Why hesitate to take anything so harmless?

Read the proven directions for checking colds, easing a sore throat; relieving headaches and the pains of neuralgia, neuritis, rheumatism, etc.

You can always count on its quick comfort. But if pain is of frequent recurrence see a doctor as to its cause.

Wins Wife as First Prize!

If you don't think your whole life can be changed by chance, read this. It is the story of a young man who was pretty well down and out, but he figured he might win a prize if he took some advice.

"As far back as I can remember I had been a weakling," says Mr. Calvin L. Floyd of Orlando, Florida. "A headache, it seemed, was to be my life companion. I was always dizzy in the mornings. Nothing I ate seemed good for me. Then I attended a health lecture in a sanatorium and the physician talked on 'faulty elimination.' That was certainly my trouble. One of the patients asked him about Nujol. He recommended it highly. I decided to try one bottle to see if there was anything in what he said about natural lubrication for the human body.

Many a life changed by a message like this one.

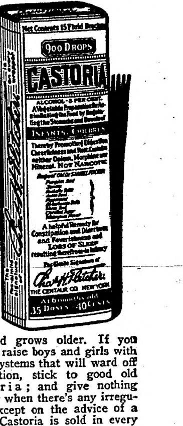
"Long before I had finished the first bottle my 'companion-headache' was gone. No more tired out feeling. I get a real kick out of life now. By the way, I almost forgot to tell you I found a new life companion, too!"

Perfectly simple, wasn't it? Mr. Floyd just learned the normal natural way to get rid of bodily poisons (we all have them) and nature did the rest. Why shouldn't you be well?

Nujol is not a medicine. It contains no drugs. It is effective, so you will be "regular as clock-work." You can buy it at all good drug stores in sealed packages for less than the price of a couple of good cigars.

Begin today. Millions have found that Nujol makes all the difference in the world. Nujol will make you feel fine and you can prove it.

Children CRY for it



It may be the little stomach; it may be the bowels are sluggish. No matter what coats a child's tongue, its a safe and sensible precaution to give a few drops of Castoria. This gentle regulation of the little system soon sets things to rights. A pure vegetable preparation that can't harm a wee infant, but brings quick comfort—even when it is colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance.

And don't forsake Castoria as the child grows older. If you want to raise boys and girls with strong systems that will ward off constipation, stick to good old Castoria; and give nothing stronger when there's any irregularity except on the advice of a doctor. Castoria is sold in every drugstore, and the genuine always bears Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper.

—14—

Fellowes reflected uneasily that, at least, she'd probably fight more handily than his prolix attorney. But a clamor of voices distracted his attention. "Hi, whar's the squire?" "Down with the Bloodybacks!" "Come on, Nimrod, we want to fight!" "Three cheers for the Fencibles!" "We'll show them Englishmen a few tricks!" "Hey, Sopher! Hear yer bloodhounds barkin'?"

Not so well disciplined, the Fencibles, who, after all, were only everyday farmers and fishermen. Thank God for the misty darkness!

The men were armed as nondescriptly as the squad that had attended Eaches—half of them carried old Brown Bess firelocks, with bayonets; the remainder sported hunting rifles, tradeguns and fowling pieces. Lads barely in their teens shambled beside grandfathers wearing their white hair long in the fashion of the last century. But all, regardless of age or equipment, were hysterically aggressive, and they broke ranks with a whoop to receive Fellowes.

He quieted the demonstration with difficulty.

"The British will hear you, friends. Our one hope is to surprise them. Fall them in, Nimrod."

Sopher drew his saber with a clang.

"Fall in, men! Fall in! Sergeant Peirt! Where's Sergeant Peirt?"

One of the ancients of the company stepped clear of the confusion and saluted with shaky smartness.

"Muster the men, sergeant. Column of fours."

"And douse those torches," added Fellowes.

Prompt abedience plunged the group in darkness, and the confusion increased until the Widow Rhodes appeared with a lighted stable-lanthron in either hand.

"I never see sech clumsy oafs," she snapped. "For land's sake, git agoin', Abner Peirt. I've heard yer tell 'baout Saratogy for thirty years. S'pose ye show us a bit o' sojerin' for a change."

"We will, M'randy, we will," quavered Peirt. "The Fencibles ain't Continentals, but they knaow thar drill. Fall in, men! Slope arms! Right dress!" His old voice took on a ghostly ring of virility. "By fours—column right—for'ard!"

Feet shuffled in the dust, and Fellowes found himself, with Cuffee and Tom and Nimrod Sopher, leading the Fencibles west on the South Country road. From the rear of the little column echoed the monotonous incantation of Sergeant Peirt: "Hayfoot, strawfoot! Hayfoot, strawfoot! Hayfoot—"

The ancient's reiterated refrain died away in the chatter of the tree-toads. There was only the "shuffle-shuffle, slap-slap" of feet in the dust, the rustling of equipment, the tense breathing of men laboring under excitement held in leash. It must be very late, Fellowes reflected, well along toward dawn; but the mist, low-lying over the swampy lands bordering the bay, thickened the darkness. Collishawe should be on the point of departure—the Englishman was no fool; in any case, would wish to keep his landing secret.

They tramped around a curve in the road, and Cuffee, at Fellowes' elbow, stiffened with a jerk.

"Wha' dat?" he whispered.

Simultaneously, came a hail from the shadows in front:

"Ahoy, there! Lay to!"

And a bosun's whistle trilled, sharp and clear.

"Back yer oars, Clinch," roared Tom Grogan.

Pistols exploded among the trees; the whistle trilled again, sharper, more piercing.

"Out cutlasses," bellowed Clinch. "Stand by to receive boarders."

Behind them Fellowes heard Peirt, quaveringly authoritative:

"Form column—by fours—left into line—for'ard! Shift—firelocks! Present—firelocks! Aim—fire!"

The crashing detonation of thirty stand of arms dismayed the sailors, notwithstanding the militiamen's bullets flew in every direction save the enemy's. Fellowes detected their flight by the crackling of tree branches and Clinch's fervid oaths, and summoned the Fencibles to pursue.

"After them, boys! Give 'em the cold steel!"

Tom was off already, Mrs. Rhodes' ax brandished at the length of his apelike arm, howling challenges to Clinch. Cuffee leaped into the woods, screaming a weird slogan learned in the jungles of Coromandel. Sopher continued to emit twittering calls that ran the gamut from falsetto to bass, trotting next to Fellowes. The Fencibles followed stoutly.

The pursuit receded from the road, traversing a belt of trees which hid the antagonists from each other, bewildering both sides, and presently spilled out of the grove on to a range of cultivated fields. The light was growing, Fellowes perceived. In the distance, Chater's house was a white blur against a windbreak of tufted elms. Clinch launched a vigorous cutlass charge as soon as the increased visibility revealed the scanty numbers and character of the attackers.

"Come on, Badgers," the bosun encouraged his men. "Carry it to 'em, lads! Slice the lights out o' 'em! They're only milishy!"

The sailors responded gallantly, coming forward in a compact group, sure-footed and agile; and the militiamen, caught off-balance, out of breath, most of them with their guns empty, were disposed to run, despite Sergeant Peirt's angry appeals. Sopher, vocal at last, stood stockstill, wheeling his saber and crying shrilly: "Follow your captain, men! Follow your captain!" It was Fellowes, with Tom and Cuffee, supported by Peirt, who checked the impact of the sailors, and gave the Fencibles an opportunity to rally. He flung his empty pistol into the charging group, snatched a clubbed rifle from one of the faltering militiamen, and attacked Clinch, himself—who recognized the Long Islander with a yell of incredulity.

"Sink me, lad! 'Ow'd ye git 'ere?"

"Surrender, Bob! You're cornered."

"Not me! Bob Clinch don't strike 'is colors—"

But in the midst of his defiance the knot of sailors disintegrated, as Cuffee smashed the head of one and Tom hewed a second from shoulder to waist. The Fencibles, who had been on the verge of flight, were intoxicated with ferocity by their first sight of blood, and eagerly resumed the pursuit.

"Surrender, Bob," Fellowes urged again.

"Not if I knows it," retorted the bosun, dodging a blow with a clubbed rifle. He parried another swing, then stooped and grabbed a fold of Fellowes' shirt, jerking it over the Long Islander's head. Blinded and hampered, Fellowes stumbled to his knees, and by the time he had ripped off the tattered garment and scrambled up, half-naked, Clinch was safely out of reach.

The sailors recovered rapidly from their panic, and made for the creek bank, halting at intervals to fire their pistols and gain a breathing spell. Daylight, Fellowes realized, would increase the timidity of his raw men, and he called anxiously to Sopher:

"We must finish this while we have the darkness for cover. One more charge! Fire a volley, and drive them into the creek."

Peirt cried valiantly: "That's the way we took 'em at Saratogy! Keep achargin'! The British'll run fast as any fellers if they see bay'nits to thar gizzards. Hearts up, naow, boys! With powder 'n' ball—load! Present—firelocks! Aim—fire!"

The greasy powder smoke billowed across the field, and the Fencibles trotted with it, making no pretense at order, unable for the moment to see what the enemy was doing, and therefore persuaded they were beaten. Fellowes, in advance of the line and not yet blanketed by the smoke, saw the sailors fall prostrate as the American's muzzles jetted flame. Then Clinch's whistle piped distinct in the racket of musketry and haphazard cheering, a cannon boomed on the creek, and a host of sinister voices whined through the dank air. Grapeshot! Fellowes knew what that meant: the longboat's three-pounder had been brought to bear on them. And he knew, too, by their frightened yells, that the Fencibles were in headlong retreat.

"Peirt," he shouted. "Sergeant! Can't you hold your men? Sopher! Nimrod!"

But his only answer came from Tom Grogan, who bobbed up out of the smoke beside him.

"The old feller took a whif o' grape 'twixt wind-and-water, messmate," Tom reported. "And that air milishy cap'n 's off on t'other tack under full sail, along o' the rest o' his squadron."

"Where's Cuffee?"

The negro towered erect at mention of his name.

"Cuffee wid yo', mars'r," he answered simply.

"Three of us left," groaned Fellowes. "But we can't fall like this. We must take Collishawe."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Sheep Work for Living

There are not many parts of the world where the ordinary domestic sheep is used as a beast of burden, but in Tibet they are. The animals, loaded with packs of wool, are used between Tibet and the Rampur Fair, in India. The journey takes more than a month and several high passes are traversed that are inaccessible to other pack animals.

Once the wool has reached its destination the sheep remain on the plains for the winter, for the frontier passes then are impassable. They return later with loads of corn for border districts where grain is scarce.—Wide World Magazine.

Illiterate Monarch

From slave to emperor might well be the title of a biography of Christophe, ruler of Hayti during the days of the "Black Republic." Because he came from such humble origin Christophe was poorly educated despite his collection of fine books and rare art pieces in his palace, Sans Souci. The story is told that when he was made emperor, Christophe chose to call himself "Henry, I" rather than Christophe, because he could spell the former and was unable to write his real name.—Detroit News.

Peculiarity in Home of Thomas Jefferson

Monticello, historic home of Thomas Jefferson, has many oddities which excite the popular interest, says an article in Pathfinder Magazine. For example, it is a home without beds. The master slept (and died) on a cot of his own contrivance located in an opening between his study and what should have been his bedroom. He was able to jump out of it into either room. The cot was so arranged that it was raised to the ceiling during the daytime to leave a passageway between the two rooms.

There are unfounded tales that Jefferson was afraid of his life and took this means to insure safety. One basis for this, probably, is the secret room directly above his bed which has porthole-like openings in the walls, formerly covered by pictures, through which supposed bodyguards could fire down on intruders if need be.

Hoaxing the Hens

Quartz glass used in the windows of a hen house is said to induce hens to lay more eggs. The glass admits ultra-violet rays, which are also said to speed up the process of incubation.

When a quartz mercury arc giving off ultra-violet rays was used in an incubator, 20 per cent of the eggs were hatched from 24 to 48 hours sooner than other eggs not treated with the rays.

Why Butter Fell

Perhaps the average dairy farmer in the Red River Valley may not readily grasp the idea that the collapse of the speculators' market in Wall Street—America's biggest gambling joint—had anything to do with a drop in the price of butter. Hundred of thousands of people of moderate means had invested their savings, and often money borrowed, in stocks bought on margin, in the hope of becoming rich. When the crash came and wiped out their investments many of them had to economize in their expenses, and in cases of necessity like that oleomargarine often displaces butter.

GUARDED AGAINST T. B.

Zero weather means nothing in the lives of Jack and his companions at the Children's Preventorium near St. Paul, one of the institutions for the prevention of tuberculosis. Each day boys and girls with but little covering dash outside for air baths, while inside, lamps provide man-made sun light to keep them sun-tanned during the winter.

All Preventorium children have been exposed to tuberculosis in the home, or are in danger of developing the disease because of a run down condition. To find children endangered with tuberculosis and to protect them from the disease forms an important part of the statewide work financed by Christmas Seals.

Tuberculosis kills one Minnesota citizen every six hours. Buy Christmas Seals and check this enemy.

LESSON 82

PRODUCTION: A firm seed bed is one of the best assurances of getting a catch of newly seeded alfalfa, or sweet clover. The past dry season was a good test of the condition of the fields where new seeding was made. In loose soil the seeding dried out. In firm soil such as corn ground that had been disked or fields that had been thoroughly worked down with disk and roller, the catch was generally good. Mark this down as a reminder for next spring.

MANUFACTURING: The sale of milk for direct consumption has met with much more strict requirements than the sale of cream for buttermaking. Most of the large cities require that cows shall be tested for tuberculosis, that dairy barns shall be inspected, that milk houses and cooling tands be provided on the farms, in order for the milk to be marketed.

Milk is the finest food in the world when it is pure.

THE WAY

A Christmas Pageant of Peace
(To be given Thursday, Dec 19)

In the first scene shall be seen four prophets, Abraham, Moses, Elijah, Isaiah, who come forth and speak of the coming of the Christ Child. They are all answered by a voice. As the stage darkens, Mary appears.

In the second part Mary is seated beside the manger. She rises and speaks, as the prophets; she is also answered by the voice. Soon the Angel of the Lord and the Herald Angels enter. The voice again speaks and the Herald Angels sing "Away In a Manger." Three Kings enter and kneel at the manger and give precious gifts.

In the third part the nations of the world appear, each nation having two attendants. They bow down before the cradle. Lastly, America enters, and the chorus sings "America, The Beautiful."

The characters are as follows:

Part I—Waiting For the Christ
The Voice—Miss A. Rognlie
Abraham—Stilof Anderson
Moses—Johnny Doran
Elijah—Julius Faiman
Isaiah—Walter Steinhauer
Part II—The Coming of the Christ
The Voice
Mary—Esther Hagberg
Angel of the Lord—Fernel Peterson

Seventh and Eighth Grades

The grammar class shows unusual interest in the study of clauses.

Appropriate drawings--those of the Three Wise Men following the star---have been made by the drawing class.

Fifth and Sixth Grades

The fifth and sixth grades have completed their soap village centered on the theme of Christmas which looks very beautiful.

The fifth graders have completed their product maps in geography.

The sixth grade geography class is studying the map of Europe; all agree that there are too many countries in Europe for any geography class to study.

Third and Fourth Grades

The third and fourth grade have been making Christmas decorations for their room. They have also made Christmas spelling booklets.

They expect to have the curtains for their room, and to have their sand table decorated in the Christmas fashion this week. Some of the children have brought plants to be placed in their room to make it more pleasant and homelike.

First and Second Grades

The first and second grade children are now studying Christmas poems and stories written in their own language. The children are very busy practising the Christmas carols for the animal Christmas program.

Christmas Notice

All postoffices will be closed all day on Christmas by order of the department. Any postmaster who disobeys this order is liable to punishment.

Mail your cards, letters, and parcels now so they will reach your relatives and friends before Christmas. Letters and parcels may be marked "Do not open until Christmas." Always use pen and ink and be sure to put your return address on everything you mail. Do not place Christmas seals or other stickers on the address side of anything. We are not allowed to insure fragile aricles that are liable to breakage while in transit.

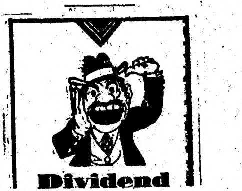
It will greatly help us at the time of the year if people living in and near town will please get their money orders and mail their packages in the forenoon, so we can take better care of the farmer trade in the afternoon.

A little co-operation on the part of the public will be a big help during the Christmas rush.

Wishing you all a Merry Christmas, I am sincerely yours,

Henry B. Young, Postmaster

Gone Forever!



A few days ago we received a letter from the State Banking Department in which was stated a few facts why the Holt State Bank did not pay a dividend to its depositors.

The letter stated that only 44 per cent was recovered by those whom held collateral for money borrowed the bank and, whom had preferred claims filed with the department.——Long will the memory of this live.

Alfin Simonson arrived here on Saturday from Spokane, Wash. where he has been employed, to spend some time visiting at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Simonson.

Like the Old Family Doctor

NIGHT or day, fatigue or loss of sleep, mean nothing to the faithful family doctor when a life is at stake. Sometimes he may be seen when most of the world is asleep, driving his lonely car on a lonely road.

The same spirit of cheerful service which makes the medical helper appreciated, should characterize the financial adviser.

Our ideal is to serve our patrons faithfully and cheerfully—not only inside of the bank but outside as well. The close personal contacts which we have with our patrons are the basis of our reputation for understanding an individual's needs.

—15—

They stepped out of the smoke onto the creek bank as the longboat was backing into midstream. The gun in her bows no longer aimed their way, but several sailors discharged pistols at them. Collishawe, in the sternsheets, bending over a wounded man, straightened at a word from Clinch, who held the tiller.

Fellowes waded waist-deep into the creek.

"Collishawe," he shouted. "D'you hear me, Collishawe?"

The Badger's captain rose slowly to his feet, motioning to several of his crew to put aside their pistols.

"I hear you," he answered clearly.

"This is Fellowes—Lion Fellowes, whom you flogged. Will you come ashore, and fight me, man to man?"

"How did you come here, Fellowes?"

"Never mind how I came here." Fellowes waded further out, the bottom mud clutching at his feet. "Will you come ashore, and fight me, man to man? Choose your weapons, choose mine. You and all your men shall go off, unharmed, whatever happens to me."

"That is impossible," the Englishman replied deliberately. "I am an officer on duty. I cannot indulge in personal quarrels."

Gripped as he was by a rage that was volcanic in its force, Fellowes never for a second doubted the honesty of his enemy's position. Say what he might of Collishawe, he would believe the Englishman courageous—morally courageous, as well as physically. He choked down his wrath, and as Collishawe remained standing, with an effect of courteously allowing him the last word, he called again:

"Very well, I'll come to you."

Collishawe bowed.

"I shall be ready, Fellowes."

He resumed his seat, the longboat's oars feathered and dipped, and she pulled away for the mouth of the creek, as the first pink of the sunrise stained the east. Fellowes waded ashore, less disgruntled than he had been. For Collishawe's parting words had recognized their equality. They were no longer captain and common sailor, superior and infinitely inferior; but two enemies, who should encounter on a level plain of enmity, honorable, however bitter the hatred which knit their interests as closely as though they had been abiding friends. And somehow, hatred tasted cleaner in Fellowes' mouth—much, much cleaner than the hatred he held for the three who remained in the farmhouse beyond the creek fields.

CHAPTER VII

A Nolle Prosequi

The glow in the east was deepening. Objects that had been obscure assumed their proper shape. Fellowes' whole being, now that Collishawe had escaped, was concentrated upon the punishment of the three who remained in Chater's house. Climbing the creek bank, he set his face in that direction and led the way across the trampled fields, pausing only when they came upon a rusty-brown sprawl of limbs in a furrow of beet tops. Pallid lips mumbled unhappily:

"D—n milishy! Takes—Continentals—stand—cannon—"

"We can't leave Peirt out here," exclaimed Fellowes. "His wounds must be dressed."

"Nothin' to do for them wounds," grunted Tom. "Looks like he'd stopped a roundshot."

"You drove the Britishers, Peirt," Fellowes tried to comfort him. "We'd have been beaten without you."

"Drove 'em—hey?" The wrinkled face lightened. "Jest—like—Saratog·." His breath quickened. "Give 'em—bay'nit—boys—ses I. But—takes—Continentals—"

He sighed faintly, and the light in his face went out.

"Poor old Peirt," Fellows said sadly. "If we'd had a dozen like him Collishawe couldn't have escaped. Pick him up, Cuffee. We'll carry him with us."

Cuffee handed Mrs. Rhodes' musket to Tom, and gathered the frail body in his arms, cradling it with a gentleness that was almost maternal.

"Him lil bitty man, but plenty brave," he murmured.

Fellowes strode along, absorbed once more in contemplation of his vengeance, unconscious of the ghastly figure he made, plastered with mud and water, his naked torso hideously scarred by the livid welts of the cat.

No one was visible about the house and outbuildings, but a trickle of smoke capped the chimney, and from the barns in the rear came the lowing of cattle, and a great clucking and quacking. Fellowes threw wide the front door, and motioned Cuffee to pass in first. On their right hand, a door stood ajar, and through the crack filtered a shaft of light and an indefinable suggestion of human presence. Fellowes kicked open this door with his bare foot, and again gave precedence to Cuffee.

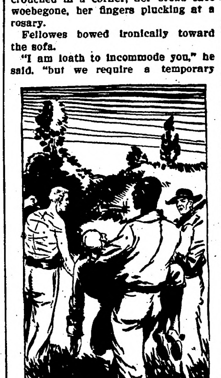
There was a flutter of movement in the room. "God save us!" exclaimed a man. "Oh, who is he?" cried Cara Inglepin's voice. An asthmatic torrent of Portuguese: "Sanctissima mai e todos os Santos!" And Chater's nasal drawl: "You daon't need to drip all the blood onto the carpet, nigger."

Fellowes entered after Cuffee, with Tom trampling his heels. He saw Cara Inglepin first, very white-faced and thinner than he remembered her on the True Bounty. In a green frock that accentuated the dusky glory of her hair; and resolutely, tenaciously, he curbed the thrill her beauty inspired. He hated this woman, he reminded himself. What right had she to rouse in him desire or satisfaction?

She sat on a sofa by the fireplace with a man he recognized as her father. Benjamin Inglepin was a stout, ruddy gentleman. He was dressed, as became a prominent Federalist, in the fashion of the elder century, black satin breeches and dresscoat, Mechlin stock and jabot, white silk stockings and varnished pumps with silver buckles. The faces of father and daughter revealed a mingling of fright and compassion. Chater leaned against the mantelshelf, chewing a cigarro, his wily visage doing its best to mirror indifference. The duenna crouched in a corner, her broad face woebegone, her fingers plucking at a rosary.

Fellowes bowed ironically toward the sofa.

"I am loath to incommode you," he said, "but we require a temporary resting place for the body of an American soldier."



"Him Lil Bitty Man, but Plenty Brave," He Murmured.

Cara Inglepin was on her feet in a second; her father rose more slowly.

"You?" she cried, her face a study in emotions. "How come you here? He said you were on the Badger!" She clutched Ben Inglepin's arm. "Father, 'tis Lion—Lion Fellowes! James must have fetched him ashore, after all."

Inglepin was nonplused, and made no attempt to hide it. Chater's jaw dropped, and he went as tallowy as the duenna, who wheezed a reiterated: "Sanctissima!"

"No, I assure you Captain Collishawe had nothing to do with my being here," Fellowes denied.

"But he promised me you should be set ashore in the next cartel."

Fellowes laughed, and she shrank from that laugh as from a blow.

"You don't believe me!"

"I fear I do not, ma'am."

"Oh, you must!" There was a frantic note in her voice. "I have suffered more than you can know. But 'twas a mistake! James—Captain Collishawe—he had seen you in New York. He knew officers who had been at Eton with you. He was persuaded you were truly a British subject. And he misunderstood something Captain Chater said."

"I'll swear he did," Fellowes assented mockingly. "How of that, Chater? What was your—error?"

"Why, ye heard what I said to him on deck," responded the True Bounty's master.

"Ah, but below decks?"
